P. C. and acquitted — It is futile for prosecution to contend that either of the two accused had any motive for committing double murder — If the co-accused P had not engaged them for alleged abduction, charge of abduction against accused must fall ipso facto inasmuch as it was the basis of prosecution story that it was P who procured abduction of deceased

THE LAW OF PREVENTIVE DETENTION IN INDIA By S. K. Ghosh

The need for a short but compendious treatise on the law of Preventive Detention came to be acutely felt not only by the members of the Bench and the Bar but by the public generally. It is fortunate that the task of writing such a treatise has been undertaken by an author of the calibre, experience and eminence of Shri S. K. Ghosh. The propositions deducible from the different reported decisions have been laid down in simple and accurate language which, I believe, will be helpful alike to the Bench, the Bar and the public in general - S. R. DAS, Retired Chief Justice of India (From his Foreword)

PUBLIC SERVICE LAW THROUGH THE CASES By Madan Bhatia

This book is not meant to be a commentary on Service Law, and no commentary on the subject could be very helpful. Real guidance can be derived from the study of application of settled principles of Law by Courts to different sets of circumstances. The book will serve as a useful guide in this regard to members of the legal profession as well as public servants.

MUSLIM LAW By F. B. Tyabji, 4th Edn By Muhsin Tappibji

Since the last edition, about 20 years ago, great changes have taken place—Political, Legal and Social. British India became independent and the sub-continent was partitioned into two countries—India and Pakistan. This new edition which contains the changes during these 20 years should apply a long-felt need not only by courts and legal practitioners but also by researchers in Muslim Law.

LEASE AND LICENCE DISTINGUISHED By M. Rihwanl

The book under review gives a distinction between Lease and Licence. As the learned Author has very aptly put in his preface "The Rent Legislation is one of the forms of social Legislation. Any attempt to evade the operational effect of the Legislation is viewed by the Courts as a dishonest act"—A. I. R. Bombay

CRIME ON THE INCREASE By S. K. Ghosh

Everybody realises that crime is on the increase. But the question for the country is how to deal with the problem. Is our Police Force well trained in the modern methods of dealing with crime? Is the Police Force inadequate or inefficient? Is it true, the public do not co-operate with the Police? If so, why? In anti-social offences like corruption, bribery, etc., does the procedural law require any change? All these and cognate subjects have been well discussed in this book.

It is a very useful help book for the Police Officers, Police Training Institutions and the Criminal Law Practitioners.

(c) the bridegroom has completed the age of twenty-one years and bride the age of eighteen years at the time of the marriage and

5. Notice of intended marriage.

When a marriage is intended to be solemnized under this Act, the parties to the marriage shall give notice thereof in writing in the form specified in the First Schedule to the Marriage Officer of the district in which at least one of the parties to the marriage has resided for a period of not less than thirty days immediately preceding the date on which such notice is given, and the notice shall state that the party has so resided.

6. Marriage Notice Book.

The Marriage Officer shall keep all notices given under section 5 with the records of his office and shall also forthwith enter a true copy of every such notice in a book prescribed for that purpose, to be called the "Marriage Notice Book", and such book shall be open for inspection at all reasonable times, without fee, by any person desirous of inspecting the same.

(2) Where a Marriage Officer after making any such inquiry entertains a doubt in respect of any objection, he shall transmit the record with such statement respecting the matter as he thinks fit to the Central Government, and the Central Government, after making such further inquiry into the matter and after obtaining such advice as it thinks fit, shall give its decision thereon in writing to the Marriage Officer, who shall act in conformity with the decision of the Central Government.

11. Marriage not to be in contravention of local laws.

(3) Where a Marriage Officer refuses to solemnize a marriage under the section, any party to the intended marriage may appeal to the Central Government in the prescribed manner within a period of thirty days from the date of such refusal, and the Marriage Officer shall act in conformity with the decision of the Central Government on such appeal.

Provided further that where the declaration referred to in the preceding proviso is made in any language which is not understood by the Marriage Officer or by any of the witnesses, either of the parties shall interpret or cause to be interpreted the declaration in a language which the Marriage Officer or, as the case may be, each witness understands.

(2) On a certificate being entered in the Marriage Certificate Book by the Marriage Officer, the certificate shall be deemed to be conclusive evidence of the fact that a marriage under this Act has been solemnized, and that all formalities respecting the residence of the party concerned previous to the marriage and the signatures of witnesses have been complied with.

15. Validity of foreign marriages in India.

Subject to the other provisions contained in this Act, a marriage solemnized in the manner provided in this Act shall be good and valid in law.

JOURNAL SECTION

1969 DECEMBER

CONSTITUTIONAL POSITION OF THE INDIAN PRESIDENT

(By RANGANATHA CHARI, M.A. B.L., Advocate, High Court, Dornakur, Hyderabad (A.P.))

In the Constituent Assembly, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru said, "We did not want the President to be just a mere figurehead like the French President." In the most critical times in its history, France had to pay a heavy price for want of a President with authority and power and suffered an international eclipse, till General de Gaulle saved the situation and restituted his country to its pristine glory by sweeping the figurehead out of the scene. The Presidentship of India has remained till now an Office of ornament and ceremony. There is the assumption that the Constituent Assembly having chosen for the Centre a Cabinet form of Government as in U.K. and not a Presidential form as in U.S.A., the President can have only the status of the King or Queen in the United Kingdom and could not carry on the administration without advice of a Council of Ministers. The inescapable consequence of the political domination of a single party at the Centre and the States for a long period is that a convention has developed that the Union Government should decide and the President should sign on the dotted line. An elected President could never enjoy any real authority and status if he, by usage or convention, gives up or is made to give up, the powers and functions expressly vested in him by the Constitution. Dr. Rajendra Prasad, the former President of India raised the question of the constitutional position of the President at the foundation-laying ceremony of the Indian Law Institute and since then, this subject has attracted considerable attention. The death of Dr. Zakir Husain has posed questions in political circles and made the Constitutional experts to think on the role of the President, what qualities he should possess and how he should exercise his judgment and discretion in the event of Constitutional crisis created by a deadlocked Parliament. In the event of multi-group or coalition Government emerging at the Centre in the post election period of 1972, India's next President will be required to preserve and defend the Constitution. Therefore the choice of next President has roused great and considerable interest and it has become topic of vital concern to the people and the politicians of this country.

2. The legal and constitutional aspects of the powers and functions of the President necessitate a study uninfluenced by consideration of circumstances that have affected or troubled them under political pressures or personal factors during the last two decades. The resume of the Constituent Assembly debates discloses that the Founding Fathers of the Constitution chose a composite form of Government in which the Parliamentary form of executive and a President with power and authority were to function within the framework of the express provisions of a written Constitution. The President under the Indian Constitution cannot be reduced to the position of sheer impotence like the French President under the pre-de Gaulle Constitution of 1875, but he is invested with status, dignity and residual power, by being elected as the Representative of the whole country. The election has to be held by an elaborate process which allows elected members of the two Houses of Parliament and the State Legislatures to participate in the Election. The scale of representation of the States in such an election is designed to secure a reflection of popular support in the entire country. Article 74 (1) says: "There shall be a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advise the President in the exercise of his functions." The words "aid and advise" are not a mere constitutional euphemism as pronounced by some jurists. The President is under no legal obligation to accept unquestioningly every decision of the Cabinet or the Prime Minister. Sir B. N. Rao, the author of "India's Constitution in the making" observes that: "even if in any particular instance the President acts otherwise than on Ministerial advice, the validity of the act cannot be questioned in a Court on that ground." The President is the head of the Union Government and his powers and functions are not only executive, but also legislative, judicial, constitutional and prerogative. Article 78 emphasises the independent and responsible position and facilitates the performance of his other duties under the Constitution. Chapter III of Part V refers to the "Legislative Powers of the President." Article 111 embodies the power in the nature of a veto exercisable by the President (i) to withhold assent (ii) to return the Bill for reconsideration. The President's power to consult the Supreme Court under Art. 143 of the Constitution is intended to be used in case of difference of opinion between him and the Cabinet.

3. A view has been expressed by the Law Minister, Sri Govinda Menon that the President's position as the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces is symbolic and notional and it does not give him any special powers to govern the country with the help of the Armed Forces. Some eminent Jurists have disagreed with this view and reiterated that to vest the President with the powers of the Supreme Commander is not illusory or their investment is not a matter of form. As Supreme Commander, he is the legal link between the Civil Authority and the Defence Forces of the Union. The power to declare an Emergency is left to the "satisfaction" of the President. The Jurists say that the word "satisfaction" juristically understood to involve the exercise of personal discretion on the part of the dignitary cannot be vicariously exercised. The Constitution provides that "the Prime Minister shall be appointed by the President and the other Ministers shall be appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister." Constitutionally speaking, the President is bound to invite the leader of the majority party to be the Prime Minister. But, if he is confronted with mosaic of parties and when the Political parties develop inflexible attitudes, the President has wide discretion in the sense that he could restrain their excesses and defend the Constitution. The provision relating to the impeachment of the President indicates that there is a sphere of action in respect of which he is personally responsible. This would negative the contention that the President is a mere Constitutional head, acting solemnly and loyally on the advice of the Prime Minister. In the ultimate analysis, it is the Presidential Writ that keeps the country and the people constitutionally tied together.

"SPEAKING" ORDERS

(By HON'BLE MR. JUSTICE V. S. DESHPANDE, M.A., LL.M. (NAGPUR), LL.M. (STANFORD), High Court of Delhi.)

Is it the law that every quasi-judicial order must state its reasons? "There is no general rule of English law that reasons must be given for administrative (or indeed judicial) decisions," answers an eminent English authority.⁽¹⁾ If the administrative authority is free to give decisions without having to support them with reasons, will it not be tempted to act arbitrarily or on extraneous considerations? Will this not lead to injustice and nepotism? Certainly, the temptation and the scope for an abuse of authority was inevitable in the absence of a rule requiring statement of reasons for administrative decisions. "The prerogative writs of certiorari, prohibition and mandamus inherited a legacy of imperfection, mostly procedural, for which there were valid reasons in the distant past, but which were out of place in the new sphere that these remedies have won for themselves".⁽²⁾ No amount of judicial learning in administering these writs could ensure that an administrative decision must be supported by reasons. A trenchant critic of English Administrative law has said that "either Parliament or the Law Lords should throw the entire set of prerogative writs into the Thames River, heavily weighted with sinker to prevent them from rising again".⁽³⁾ All that the zeal of Lord Denning could do in R. v. Northumberland Compensation Appel- late Tribunal, ex parte Shaw⁽⁴⁾ was to make a distinction between the power of judicial review on the ground of lack of jurisdiction and the power of hearing an appeal on the ground that a decision was bad in law. In between the two lay what Lord Denning called the power of "superintendence" which would enable the court to strike down an order which showed an error of law on the face of the record. The decision in Northumberland case has been regarded as a landmark in the growth of judicial review not only in England, but also in other common law jurisdictions. But the power of "superintendence" to review an administrative decision showing an error of law on the face of the record could not be exercised if no reasons were given at all for an administrative decision. In that event, the face of the record "spoke" no longer. It was the inscrutable face of the "sphinx" as was piquantly pointed out by Lord Sumner in his famous decision in R. v. Natt Bell Liquors Ltd.⁽⁵⁾ The lacuna in the law was recognised in the Report on Administrative Tribunals and Inquiries, 1957. Their recommendation to remedy this defect was carried out by section 12 of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958, which requires that certain specified Tribunals giving any decisions and a Minister giving a decision after the holding of a statutory inquiry shall furnish the statement of reasons for the decision if requested on or before giving of the decision.

not handicapped by the technicalities, which limited the operation of the prerogative writs in England. In Hari Nagar Sugar Mills Ltd. v. Sham Sunder, (6) the Supreme Court held without hesitation that the order of the Deputy Secretary reversing the decision of the Board of Directors of a company was bad inasmuch as he did not give any reasons for the decision. The court simply based its decision on the ground that it could not exercise its appellate jurisdiction under Art 136 of the Constitution without knowing the reasons for the decision under appeal. The court clarified in another decision that the mere fact that the reasons were not stated in the final order itself, but were available elsewhere on the record would not vitiate the proceedings of the quasi-judicial authority inasmuch as the reasons could be known by the court during the judicial review. It further held that even if reasons were given after the decision but before the case came for judicial review, the proceedings would not be vitiated (Maharashtra State Transport Co. v. Balwant Regular Motor Service (7)). In Sardar Govind Rao v. State of M. P. (8) the Supreme Court went one step farther by holding that the applicant who had applied for the award of a grant of money or pension to the State Government was himself entitled to know the reasons for the rejection of his application by the State Government. These grounds compelling the quasi-judicial authorities to give reasons for their decisions did not rest specifically on the provisions of the Constitution or of the statute concerned. They must be fairly based on the requirements of justice itself. If the immunity from the requirement of giving reasons could lead to the temptation of giving perverse or corrupt decisions, the Court had the power to do justice by insisting upon a statement of reasons from quasi-judicial authorities. Justice itself is treated here as a source of law. As Viscount Simonds observed in National Bank of Greece and Athens v. Mathias, (9) "In the end and in the absence of authority, the question is simple — What does justice demand in such a case as this?" If I have to base my opinion on any principle, I would venture to say it was the principle of rational justice."

3. The innovation made by the Supreme Court in the above-mentioned decisions was soon challenged in M. P. Industries Ltd. v. Union of India, (10) The majority of the Court distinguished the decision in Hari Nagar Sugar Mills (6) case on the ground that the Central Government there had reversed the decision of the Directors of the Company without giving any reasons. They said "there is a vital difference between the order of reversal by the appellate authority in that case for no reason whatsoever and the order of affirmance by the revising authority in the present case". The State Government had given reasons for its order and the Central Government dismissed the revision against it by agreeing with the State Government and thereby adopting the reasons given by the State Government. The Court therefore, refused to interfere with the order of the Central Government, though Smta Rao J. was inclined to the view that reasons ought to have been given by the Central Government. Therefore, when the same type of case came up before the Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court in Bhagat Raja v. Union of India, (11) the Court addressed itself to the question whether the Central Government was bound to give reasons for its decision in view of the provisions of the Act and the Rules or aliunde because the decision was liable to be questioned in appeal to the Supreme Court. The Court reiterated the view that the High Courts and the Supreme Court are placed at a disadvantage if no reasons are given by the quasi-judicial tribunal whose decision is to be considered by them. If the State Government gives sufficient reasons, the Central Government may adopt them and the Court may proceed to examine whether these reasons are good. But, when the reasons given by the State Government are scrappy or nebulous and the Central Government makes no attempt to clarify the same, the Supreme Court may proceed to examine the case de novo without anybody being wiser for the review by the Central Government. In such a case even the Central Government must make what is called a "speaking order." Of course, if the reasons for the action of the State Government were notorious as in Nandram v. Union of India, (12) then the confirmation of its order by the Central Government without fresh reasons would not be bad. The decision in Commissioner of Income Tax v. K. V. Pillai, (13) was confined to its peculiar facts and statutory provisions and did not establish any contrary principle.

4. The legal position having been satisfactorily established after full consideration as above, the following observation by the Supreme Court in their subsequent decision in Som Datt Datta v. Union of India (14) is somewhat puzzling: "Apart from any requirement imposed by the Statute or statutory rule expressly or by necessary implication, we are unable to accept the contention of Mr. Datta that there is any principle or any rule of natural justice that a statutory tribunal should always and in every case give reasons in support of its decision." Did their Lordships indicate by this observation that they were not in agreement with the law laid down by them previously in Bhagat Raja's case (11) and the other decisions considered above? Unfortunately, none of their own previous decisions were referred to by their Lordships in Som Datt's case. (14) It does not appear, however, that the decision in Som Datt's case (14) is really contrary to the decision in Bhagat Raja's case (11) and the decision in Hari Nagar Sugar Mills (6) and Sardar Govind Rao's case. (8) Som Datt's case is distinguishable from the previous decisions of the Supreme Court at least on two grounds viz., (1) a Court martial stands in a class by itself and the Supreme Court and the High Courts are reluctant to interfere with its proceedings and their confirmation by Chief of the Army Staff and the Central Government as shown by Article 227(4), which excludes the High Courts' power of superintendence over it and (2) the Statutory provisions governing the court martial and the confirmation of its proceedings preclude the necessity of giving reasons for the decision. Therefore, the general rule that a quasi-judicial tribunal is required to give reasons for its decision is not applicable to the proceedings of the court martial and their confirmation by the Chief of the Army Staff and the Central Government. The dismissal of the writ petition by the Supreme Court was, therefore, amply justified by these special features of the case. The observation by the Supreme Court in Som Datt's case quoted above, though general in its language, must therefore, be understood as being limited to the particular facts of the case and not intended to lay down a general rule contrary to the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court.

5. A learned commentator on the Constitution of India has also addressed himself to the question whether a quasi-judicial authority is under an obligation to give reasons for its order. (15) The learned commentator observes as follows:—

"Does the omission to give reasons prevent the appellate court from effectively hearing the appeal? If from the materials on record the Appellate Court can decide whether an unspeaking order of the court should be set aside or confirmed, it can equally decide from the materials on record whether the unspeaking order of a quasi-judicial tribunal should be set aside or confirmed, and the mental processes of the persons passing unspeaking orders cannot affect this question. It may be stated that unspeaking decisions are rendered frequently by single judges of the Bombay High Court hearing notices of motion, or dismissing writ petitions summarily. Where there are no materials before the court from which the appellate court can hold that the unspeaking order is correct, the order would have to be set aside whether made by a court or by a quasi-judicial tribunal."

6. The above reasoning would, however, be open to the following comments. Firstly, the fundamental distinction between a true judicial decision and a quasi-judicial decision, which was long ago pointed out in the Report of the Committee on Minister's Powers (1932) (pages 73-74, 81) is that a judicial decision disposes of the whole matter by a finding upon the facts in dispute and an application of the law of the land to the facts so found including where required a ruling upon a disputed question of law, while this is not done by a quasi-judicial decision. Its place is taken by administrative action, the character of which is determined by the Minister's free choice. The classification made by the Committee between a judicial, a quasi-judicial and administrative decision has been criticised on the ground that it is too conceptual. (16) This does not, however, cast any doubt on the fundamental nature of the distinction between a judicial and a quasi-judicial decision. For example, Dean Roscoe Pound has asserted: "We know exactly what courts do, on what basis they act in doing it, and at least what they say as to their reasons for doing it. We have no such means of knowing what administrative bodies or agencies have done nor how and why they did it." (17) It is true that Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958 and the Administrative Procedure Act, 1946 in the United Kingdom and the United States of America respectively have since then obliged the administrative authorities to give reasons for their findings. Apart from the statutes, however, the distinction between the judicial and the quasi-judicial decisions turns on the application of established law by the former and discretion or policy by the latter. It is unfortunately true that the courts sometimes pass orders without giving reasons, mostly in dismissing petitions in limine. With respect, however, this practice does not square with the essential nature of a judicial decision. Nor is it possible to agree that judicial work cannot be done quickly if reasons were to be given for each and every judicial order. Giving of brief reasons does not take long. The reasons ensure that the judicial decisions are not arbitrary or perverse. The reasons show that the justice is not only done in fact, but also in form. It would not be right, therefore, to say that because some of the judges pass orders without giving reasons sometimes, the quasi-judicial authorities cannot be required to give reasons for their orders. Secondly, the Supreme Court and the High Courts in exercise of their powers under Articles 32 and 136 on the one hand, and Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution, on the other hand, do not always examine the record of a case before them de novo as would be done by a court of first instance or a court of appeal of facts and law both. Their jurisdiction is limited to jurisdictional grounds, errors of law on the face of record, violation of rules of natural justice, etc. It is necessary, therefore, that the reasons for the orders passed by quasi-judicial authorities should show whether any of these limited grounds for interference with their orders exist or not. It is not possible, therefore, to agree with the argument that the Supreme Court and the High Courts would be in the same position whether the orders of the quasi-judicial authorities "speak" or not. Thirdly, the learned commentator has discussed the law with reference to M. P. Industries Limited v. Union of India,¹⁸ but curiously enough, did not refer to the later and more comprehensive decision of a larger Bench in Bhagat Raja v. Union of India.¹¹ It is not known, therefore, whether the Bhagat Raja's decision would not have altered the learned commentator's view.

7. In passing, it may be mentioned that the jurisdiction of the High Courts and the Supreme Court over administrative orders has expanded enormously by the recent revolution which has taken place in the concept of quasi-judicial decisions. In *Ridge v. Baldwin*¹⁹, Lord Reid has pointed out how the well known statement of law in *R. v. Electricity Commissioners*²⁰ had been misconstrued to mean that a duty to act judicially had to be imposed on an administrative authority before its order could be said to be quasi-judicial. He has shown that in certain circumstances, an administrative authority may be under an implied duty to act judicially in accordance with the rules of natural justice, although not expressly required to do so or to determine a lis inter partes. The Supreme Court in *Associated Cement Company v. P. N. Sharma*²¹ and in *Bhagwan v. Ramchand*²², promptly followed this view. In fact in *State of Orissa v. Binapani Dei*²³, and in *Boothchand v. Kurukshetra University*²⁴, the Supreme Court has gone so far as to hold that any orders involving civil consequences would have to be passed consistently with the rules of natural justice. These decisions have a considerable impact in enlarging the scope of a judicial review over an ever-increasing variety of administrative orders, whenever they have any characteristic of an adjudication. Correspondingly the field in which administrative authorities would be required to give reasons for their orders may also be expected to be enlarged.

8. In the above circumstances, one may conclude that in Indian Law as established by the Supreme Court decisions referred to above, a general principle exists requiring that a quasi-judicial authority must give reasons for its decision. One need not feel shy of this conclusion merely because the English law before the enactment of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958, failed to establish such a principle. The principle is based on the requirements of justice and is to be found to be established in other legal systems. In the French Administrative law, while a judicial decision must embody its reasons, an administrative one need not do so in the absence of a statutory requirement. But these are cases (which our Courts would regard as quasi-judicial) where the Conseil d'Etat reached the conclusion that administrative decision ought to be a reasoned one. The reason is not, however, that the administrative authority, should be deemed to be acting as a Tribunal. The overriding principle is that any conduct of the administrative authorities rendering judicial review more difficult must ipso facto be improper.²⁵ In Italy also there is no rule that every administrative order must embody its reasons. "One must look at the nature of the act in question. If the act is done in exercise of an absolute discretion there is no such obligation as that of giving reasons, but whenever a decision deals with requests or applications of any kind and decides them in the negative or dissolves a contractual relationship or, in any way, imposes burdens or liabilities on the subject, in all these cases an absence or insufficiency of reasons becomes a ground of invalidity by itself"²⁶

Speech of Hon'ble the Chief Justice, Delhi High Court delivered on the occasion of separation of Judiciary from the Executive on 3rd of October, 1969 at Tis Hazari Courts, Delhi.

It is a great day for the administration of justice. Ever since the beginning of this century our national leaders were clamouring for the separation of the judiciary from the executive. This used to be one of the subjects of resolutions which were passed in successive sessions of the Indian National Congress. Article 50 of our Constitution in the Chapter of Directive Principles specifically provides that the State shall take steps to separate judiciary from the executive in the public services of the State.

The separation came into being in other States earlier and now it has been introduced in the capital of the country. The success of this experiment primarily hinges upon you. It has been said that the quality of the administration of justice in the final analysis depends upon the personality of its judges and presiding officers of the Courts. It is in this context that I thought of meeting you all and addressing of few words to you.

You are now entering upon a new era. Previously you were under the control of the executive head of the district. This impaired confidence of the accused in the fair administration of justice. Now you will be free of that control. It is now for you to see that this new freedom does not degenerate into a licence to do something capricious or arbitrary. You have to keep a judicial poise and balance and see that justice is administered without fear or favour. You have to keep the scales even. If undeserved convictions are bad and undesirable, undeserved acquittals equally shake the confidence of the people in the administration of justice. There is sometimes a tendency to acquit to earn cheap popularity. You have to shun it in the same way as you have to resist pressure for the conviction of the accused.

There are some basic things which we have to keep in mind. As executive magistrates you had to make contacts with large number of persons. Administration of justice requires a certain amount of detachment and aloofness. You have to avoid contacts which may embarrass your position as judicial officer. For this purpose you may have to refrain from accepting hospitality and attending social parties.

You have also to see to it that you attend the Court and start work at 10 A. M. and otherwise too observe correct Court timings. You have also to be properly attired when working in Court. The normal dress for a judicial officer is black coat and necktie.

A number of old criminal cases are pending in Courts. I hope they will be disposed of before long. The Chief Judicial Magistrate and the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrates would see to it that there is equitable distribution of work and that we get the optimum out of each one of you. So far as High Court is concerned, it would be your merit and the quality of your work which would weigh and create impression. We shall see that your scales of pay are attractive but you will be strengthening our hands if you discharge your duties in such a way that people all round have confidence in the administration of criminal justice and appreciate the new set-up. For errors of judgment you need not worry but the High Court would insist upon a very high standard of integrity. I have every hope that there would be fullest co-operation between you and the members of the Bar. You have my best wishes and I am sure you will acquit yourselves well.

"EXTENT OF UNLAWFULNESS OF WAGERING CONTRACTS IN ENGLAND"

(By M. V. APPALA NAIDU, B.A., M.L., U. G. C. JUNIOR RESEARCH FELLOW, DEPARTMENT OF LAW, ANDHRA UNIVERSITY, WALTAIR.)

A wagering contract may be well defined as one by which two persons, professing to hold opposite views concerning an uncertain event, mutually agree that on the happening of that event, one shall pay or hand over a sum of money or something of money value, to the other in consideration of his paying or promising to pay to him a sum of money or something of money value on the non-happening of that event.(1) Whether a contract is a wagering one or not, depends upon its subst-ence, not upon its outward form; to arrive at the substance the court will receive evidence without confining its attention to the mere words in which it is expressed.(2) So the object of wagering contract has been ascertained to be unlawful because of the fact that to constitute a wager there must be three elements present, namely, (a) the parties must profess the determination of an uncertain event as the sole condition of their contract, (b) one party should stand to win and the other to lose upon the ascertainment of that event, and (c) the sum or the stake he will so win or lose must be the only interest which the parties have in the contract. Neither the judiciary nor the legislature have, however, been ever able to make up their minds definitely to what extent, if any, wagering contracts are unlawful in England.

The judiciary could not prevent men from gambling or from regarding gambling debts as 'debts of honour'. Until the later part of 18th century, wagering contracts were not as such illegal or void or even unenforceable, but only discouraged by some trifling difficulties of pleading envisaged by the courts. Strange and even ludicrous results often followed. For example a bet upon the duration of the life of Napoleon was held to be unenforceable as tending, on one side, to weaken the patriotism of an Englishman, on the other to encourage the idea of assassination of a foreign ruler, and the result of this decision is to provoke retaliation upon the Englishman (3).

The struggle of the legislature with the gambler began in 1664 that is as early as the Restoration. As Sir Frederick Pollock pointed out, (4) " . . . it is tale of some permanent value as an example of blundering good intentions and a warning to hasty, piecemeal reformers." The first step was taken by the legislature during the reign of Charles II, when an Act of 1664 was passed by which any sum exceeding £ 100 lost in playing at games or pastimes or in betting on the players, should be irrecoverable, and that all forms of security given for money so lost should be void (5). Further control was made by an Act of 1710, by which all securities whether given for money lost in playing at games or pastimes or in betting on the players or knowing, ly advanced for such purposes were rendered wholly void (6). As this was felt to be harsh, the Gaming Act of 1835 was passed providing that all securities caught by the Act of 1710 were to be deemed to have been made or accepted on an illegal consideration. It can be observed that this Act covered only wagers on 'games and pastimes' (which include horse racing) and the wagers of other kinds, such as a wager on the result of a contested election remained unaffected. To bring the latter also into line, the Gaming Act of 1845 was passed, rendering all contracts or agreements by way of gaming or wagering null and void. But by a curious omission this Act did not affect the distinction maintained by the earlier Act of 1835 between wagers on games and pastimes and other wagers, so far as securities given in respect of each class of wagers were concerned, as it did not repeal the latter. There was, yet another drawback about the Act of 1845. Since wagers were only void, no taint of illegality would attach to a transaction whereby a person employed another to lay wagers for him. However, the Act of 1892 was passed declaring void any promise to pay any person any sum of money paid by him under or in respect of any contract or agreement rendered null and void by the Act of 1845, or to pay any sum of money by way of commission, fee, reward or otherwise in respect of any services relating to such contract.

This survey into the history of wagering legislations in England inevitably leads to a question whether their effect is to make wagering contracts as such illegal in the strict sense of the word or merely void. This question, indeed, has not yet been answered explicitly and clearly. However, the whole Common Law and Statute Law have recently been reviewed by Sribbarao, J., in Gherulal Parakh v. Mahadeodas (7). He has not said anywhere specifically that wagers in England are illegal after the Gaming Act of 1892. He simply says that under the Act, in view of its wide and comprehensive phraseology, even collateral contracts, including partnership agreements are not enforceable. This suggests at first sight that wagers are illegal after 1892. But actually a contrary result may be noticed by a close examination of the language of the Act of 1892. The Act makes only certain collateral transactions other than securities null and void (b). The securities given in respect of wagers on games and pastimes are by reason of the Act of 1835 deemed to be given on an illegal consideration, whereas securities given in respect of other wagers are treated as given for no consideration at all by reason of the Act of 1845. There is no rule either at Common Law or in Statute Law which taints the latter with illegality. Its only defect is want of consideration, and this is cured by its subsequent transfer for value, though generally the value is presumed to have been given (9). Thus the securities given for wagers other than those on games and pastimes, are still enforceable by subsequent transferees. Moreover the Court of Appeal has held that money knowingly lent to pay bets is not money paid in respect of a contract rendered null and void by the Gaming Act of 1845, and accordingly it does not fall under the Act of 1892 and may be still recovered (10). Nevertheless, if it is a term in the contract that money lent should be used for the payment of a bet, it cannot be recovered.(11) It may be asked whether the Act of 1835 makes such a loan irrecoverable. Since that Act deals only with securities, where no security is given the loan seems to be recoverable; but if a security is given, then the security is deemed to be given on an illegal consideration. It is doubtful whether this result by implication makes the loan also irrecoverable.

Again, it is questionable, why if a wagering contract is not illegal, restitution of the money paid by the loser has not been allowed in practice by the Courts? Restitution is not allowed not by reason of the taint of illegality, but because of the fact that the Act of 1845 is apparently treated as conferring a privilege which the loser may waive, if he pleases. Payment made voluntarily in discharge of an obligation known not to be binding, constitutes such waiver. In the words of Bowen, L. J., the loser merely "waives a benefit which the statute has given to him and confers a good title to the money upon the person to whom he pays it".(12) Moreover it is clear that one who is employed to make bets on behalf of another and who receives the winnings cannot keep them, since he receives them on behalf of another under a contract of agency; and they are not money paid in respect of a contract made void by the Act of 1845.(13) Consequently they do not fall under the Act of 1892, and may still be recovered.

Thus the two essential features, characteristic of illegal contracts, namely, (1) that collateral transactions will be also affected, and (2) that apart from certain exceptional cases restitution will not be allowed, are not totally fulfilled in the case of wagers. This shows that the wagering contracts in England are not illegal in the strict sense of the word, but only void leaving them to be treated as 'debts of honour.' Because of this apparent contradiction, the position remains still doubtful, and requires to be clarified in any future review of the law on this matter.

A NOTE ON SECTION 130 (1), THE MOTOR VEHICLES ACT, 1939, (Act No. 4 of 1939)

(By DR. B. N. ACHARYA, M.A., PH. D., Godhra, Distt. Panchmahals, Gujarat.)

The Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, was amended by the Motor Vehicles (Amendment) Act (Act 100 of 1956). Some dynamic changes were made in the text of the original Act by this amendment and these provisions were brought into force with effect from 16.2.1957 under Notification No. SR 491 D/- 7.2.57 issued by the Government of India in Ministry of Transport. Section 130 (1) of the Motor Vehicles Act runs as under :—

"130. (1) A Court taking cognizance of an offence under this Act shall, unless the offence is an offence specified in Part A of the Fifth Schedule, state upon the summons to be served on the accused person that he (a) may appear by pleader and not in person, or (b) may by a specified date prior to the hearing of the charge plead guilty to the charge by registered letter and remit to the Court such sum not exceeding twenty five rupees as the Court may specify."

In the above S. 130 (1) of the Act, the original word 'may' in the Act No. 4 of 1954 is substituted by the word "shall" by S. 95 of the Motor Vehicles (Amendment) Act, 1956. The effect of this amendment is that now, it is obligatory for the Court taking cognizance of an offence not falling within the mischief of Part A of the Fifth Schedule to issue a summons directing that the accused person may appear by pleader and not in person and that he may send his plea of guilty by registered letter and remit the amount not exceeding Rupees twentyfive if he pleads guilty to the charge. This amendment has created a position that whatever the amount of fine might have been prescribed for the offence for which summons can be issued under S. 130 (1), Motor Vehicles Act, the accused can be fined Rs. 25 only. If we take the case of an offence under S. 112, Motor Vehicles Act, that offence was originally punishable with fine which may extend to Rupees Twenty for the first offence and with fine which may extend to Rupees one hundred for any subsequent offence. By S. 88 of the Act 100 of 1956, the words "One hundred Rupees" have been substituted for the words "Twenty Rupees" for the first offence and words "three hundred Rupees" have been substituted for the words "One hundred Rupees" for the subsequent offence. Thus the legislature found that the fine of Rupees twenty for first offence and that of Rupees one hundred for the subsequent offence was inadequate and it, therefore, raised the quantum of the fine by the amendment. The object of this amendment and raising the quantum of fine was overlooked and no parallel amendment was made in S. 130 (1). Thus under S. 130 whatever the nature of the offence may be and whether the offence under S 112 is first or subsequent one and even if it is of a serious nature the accused cannot be fined more than Rupees twenty-five only. Thus the object and purpose of amending S. 112 by the Act 100 of 1956 is practically frustrated by S. 180 (1). Thus, there is some discrepancy in S 180 (1), Motor Vehicles Act and it ought to have been set right when S 112, Motor Vehicles Act was amended in the year 1956

INTERPRETATION AND ANOMALIES U. P. (TEMPORARY) CONTROL OF RENT AND EVICTION ACT (III of 1947)

(By CHARAN SINGH CHAUDHRY, M.A., LL.B. Advocate, Meerut)

Needless is it to say that India is a Sovereign Democratic Republic and under our Constitution a number of Fundamental Rights have been guaranteed to its constituent individuals. One of the rights so guaranteed is that of equality before law. As such in putting every enactment on the statute book, this consideration is held supreme. But all the same some anomalies do come to show their face, cutting at the very root of the principle, of course, for no deliberate fault of our law makers but because there is another independent constitutional organ, called judiciary, that can also be said to be no less a law giving body than the Legislature in so far as the judiciary forces through their interpretation of the laws the Legislature into amending them. The result is that in the course of such interpretation of the language and meaning of the statutes some precedents come to exist, again for no fault of the judiciary either, that may, in their application and practice have the effect of discriminating between, if not individuals, classes of people. So a remedy provided in law to one may be virtually denied to another by the same law.

This has, in view of the law laid down in Bashi Ram v. Mantri Lal, 1965 All L J 58 AIR 1965 All 498 (FB) happened in the cases of tenants and landlords in respect of provisions of subs. (8) and (4) of S. 8 of U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, and S. 7 of the same Act in so far as it relates to revisions to the State Government against refusing, or granting permission for the filing of a civil suit for eviction referred to in S 8 of the Act.

Relevant provisions of S. 8 of the U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act run as under

"S. 8 (1) Subject to any order passed under sub-s. (8) no suit shall without the permission of the District Magistrate be filed in any civil Court against a tenant for his eviction from any accommodation, except on one or more of the following grounds.

(2) Where an application has been made to the District Magistrate for permission to evict a tenant for eviction from any accommodation and the District Magistrate grants or refuses to grant the permission, the party aggrieved by his order may within 80 days from the date on which the order is communicated to him apply to the Commissioner to revise the order

(8) The Commissioner shall hear the application made under sub-s. (2) as far as may be within six weeks from the date of making it and he may, if he is not satisfied as to the correctness, legality or propriety of the order passed by the District Magistrate or as to the regularity of proceedings held before him, alter or revise his order, or make such other order as may be just and proper

(4) The order of the Commissioner under sub-s. (8) shall subject to any order passed by the State Government under S 7-F be final."

Material portion of S 7-F of the Act reads as follows:

"The State Government may call for the record of any case granting or refusing to grant permission for the filing of a suit for eviction referred to in S. 8 and may make such order as appears to it necessary for the ends of justice."

Dealing with Ss 8 (1) and 7-F of the U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Hon'ble High Court of Allahabad in 1965 All L J 58 AIR 1965 All 498 (FB) that in case a suit is instituted by a landlord for ejectment of his tenant with the permission of the District Magistrate obtained under S 8 (1) of the U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, the State Government on being moved by the tenant to pass an appropriate order under S. 7-F on the record of the case granting permission passes an order suspending the operation of the permission, the order has no effect on further proceedings in the suit pending in Court.

It has further been laid down therein that if a suit instituted by a landlord for ejectment of his tenant with the permission of the District Magistrate is decreed in the landlord's favour and the tenant files an appeal and during its pendency the State Government passes an order purporting to be one in exercise of the power conferred by S. 7-F directing that the permission granted by the District Magistrate would have effect after a certain date, which date is subsequent to the date of the decree under appeal, there is no effect on the decree passed in the suit."

It will thus be seen that the operation of the above rule of law so far as the remedies provided for by way of revision to the Commissioner under sub-ss. (2) and (3) of S. 3 and to the State Government under S. 7-F as it relates to revisions against refusing or granting permission referred to in S. 3 has absolutely no effect on the right of landlord and his remedies remain intact. This is so because if the permission to file a suit for the eviction of a tenant is refused to the landlord the way is open to the latter to go up in revision to the Commissioner under sub-ss. (2) and (3) of the Act and if his revision is allowed and permission is granted thereby he can file a suit for eviction of the tenant with that permission. If, however, his revision petition is rejected by the Commissioner he can move the State Government under S. 7-F to pass an appropriate order. So if the State Government pleases to pass an order in favour of the landlord and grants him permission refused by the District Magistrate and the Commissioner he can file a suit for eviction of the tenant with such permission as efficaciously as with one granted by the District Magistrate. In this way, if the initial authority refuses him permission he can approach the higher authorities and can seek his remedy.

But this is not so in the case of a tenant in view of the Full Bench ruling referred to above. If permission is granted by the District Magistrate to the landlord to file a suit for eviction of the tenant, the landlord would have no ground uncovered in hurrying to file the suit and the moment the suit is filed, the tenant's remedy provided under sub-ss. (2) and (3) of S. 3 to go in revision to the Commissioner would be barred and if by some act of Providence the tenant succeeds even in filing the revision to the Commissioner before the institution of civil suit by the landlord, that too would be of no help to the tenant and the revision would be rendered infructuous, if and when the landlord chooses to file the civil suit for eviction. This is so because, even if an order in revision by the Commissioner is passed in favour of the tenant, it will have no effect on the further proceedings of the suit instituted. In this way the remedy of the tenant exhausts with the filing by the landlord of the civil suit for eviction with the District Magistrate's permission. The very same chain of facts will occur in case the permission refused by the District Magistrate is granted by the Commissioner in revision by the landlord. In that case on institution of the civil suit with the permission of the Commissioner, the tenant's way to approach the State Government for seeking his remedy under S. 7-F would be blocked and this remedy shall as well be denied to him.

As such with all regards and respects to all concerned, it is submitted that by virtue of the above referred rule the remedy provided to the landlord by way of revisions before the Commissioner and then before the State Government if the Commissioner decides against him, is virtually denied to the tenant in so far as his remedy exhausts with the institution of the eviction suit which is most natural and bound to be filed in all hurry, as no landlord would ever choose, in filing the same, to wait for the decisions in revisions by the higher authorities which might be against his interest, and allow himself to be called negligent luxurious litigant and by some a fool.

With the foregoing in view, the attention of the State Government may be drawn to remove this anomaly of the provisions concerned and to put the tenants and the landlords at par in so far as the remedy before law in this respect is concerned.

CANCEROUS GROWTH OF CORRUPTION IN JUDICIARY

— A Study

(By SHRI S. N. JOHRI, B.Sc., LL.M., Deputy Registrar, High Court, Jabalpur.)

In the panorama of the development of human society, ages have by and by carved out, of the chisels of tried thinkers an ideal image of a judge specially in the context of free world. The conventional pen-picture, demanding particular qualitative requirements, which was lying hidden in parts in the debris of precedents and dictums, was collected, assembled and summarised in Article 34 of the Canons of Judicial Ethics by the American Bar Association, which requires a judge to be conscientious, studious, thorough, courteous, patient, punctual, just, impartial, fearless of public clamour, regardless of public praise, indifferent to private, political or partisan influences, administering justice according to law, dealing with the appointment as a public trust not ill-using it for promoting personal interests and gains and free from the ambition to increase popularity. The paper further demands that a judge should be polite, temperate and tolerant yet firm and attentive and his personal behaviour, not only upon the bench and in performance of his duties, but also in his every day private life, should be beyond reproach. Judge ought to be more learned than witty, more revered than plausible and more advised than confident. Above all things integrity is their proper virtue. An over-speaking judge is no well-tuned cymbal. Restraint in interference of proceedings streamlined by intelligent and lawful avoidance of wasteful, confusing and irrelevant material, short of preventing pertinent information to come on the record, is a difficult thin rope for a judge to ride undisparaged.

2 Of all other essential virtues greatest emphasis has been laid upon the unflinching integrity and impartiality of a judge from the times immemorial. Some of the dicta may be recalled as follows

'Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift, for a gift doth blind the eyes of wise and pervert the words of the righteous'

(Deuteronomy)

'Thieves for their robbery have authority when the judges steal themselves.'

(William Shakespeare)

'He hath put off the person of a judge that puts on the person of a friend'

(Thomas Adams)

'The greatest scourge an angry heaven ever inflicted upon an ungrateful and sinning people was an ignorant, a corrupt or a dependent judiciary.'

(John Marshall)

'There is one absolute standard, one impleable test which society applies to a judge, this is unswerving honesty. For a judge to deviate from the most rigid honesty and impartiality is to betray the integrity of all law'. A bribed judge not only sacrifices his own morality but poisons the well of justice itself and thus corrupts the essential feature of the Government. According to William Seagle, 'a judicial scandal has always been regarded as far more deplorable than a scandal involving either the executive or the legislature. Slightest hint of irregularity or impropriety in courts is a cause of great anxiety and alarm. A legislator or an administrator may be found guilty of corruption without apparently endangering the foundation of the State, but a judge must keep himself absolutely above suspicion'

3 This presumptively exalted position of a poor judge stands before him like an unsurmountable peak of a steep slippery mountain, in the present context of society when nascent and choking atmosphere heavily prevails around the man standing knee-deep in the debris of the fallen moral standards of the society. The wild clamour for glamour, money, luxury, exhibition and attainment of fictitious standards of living deafen his ears, glittering gold dazzles his eyes and baffles his conscience. He is not an ascetic who has renounced the world, very much a worldly man with crushing responsibilities on his feeble shoulders and yet the corrupt society is out to weaken his determinations, compromise his principles and allure him to a fall at every step he takes in his journey

4. The majestic peaks of Himalayas do not rest on thin air. They have massive support of the solid earth. Great generals are produced only in the period of strife, the period where the whole nation is putting forth untiring efforts to succeed in the war. For any achievement of some significance the presence of appropriate environment is necessary. The high standard which the Judiciary is expected to reach and maintain is only possible in a society having a firm moral basis, a society which implicitly believes in the 'rule of law' and acts up to it. In this unfortunate country afflicted with corruption to the roots it appears to be an idle dream to expect the Judiciary to reach and maintain the high standard expected of it

5 After all a judge is to be drawn and recruited from the same rotten stock of the society where immorals thrive and honesty has often to suffer a crushing defeat at the hands of some sinister plan. Moral standard of a man is no criterion for recruitment and enquiry on this plane at that early stage of formative years of life, can hardly make a reliable digging. What training is given to him for acquiring that self-restraint and tolerance when he is selected to bear the proverbial non sense, for the whole day with tight lips?

6. It is difficult to swallow the opinion of William Seagle that the scandal against a judge is 'more alarming' than against other organs of a democratic Government because it endangers the foundations of the State. Without minimising the responsibilities of the judges, I would like to say that in a Welfare State a judge is as much an organ of the State as any other, an humble bolt in the whole machinery, not very different from others. It is true that if others falter the remedy lies in the Courts, but it is not correct to say that if a judge falters the nation is left to dogs. In the hierarchy of judges every action is watched and examined vigilantly and intently by the superiors. Moreover strong public opinion is a sufficiently sharp knife for operating upon the malignant part.

7-8. Amidst all round corruption, the Judiciary has somehow managed to maintain its standard and is generally regarded as uncorrupt. With the high cost of living, the low scale of pay and the all round disrespect shown to it by the Executive, it is not known how long the Judiciary may fight the process of corruption and may not succumb. There are already signs of wavering. In such a state of affairs a few determined persons may still save the situation. If democracy is to survive in this country and the rule of law is to be maintained, the judiciary should come a step forward to play the role of the determined few. Even though it may be forced to suffer all the privations it has to stand as a rock, not yielding to the powerful forces of corruption. Majority of the judicial personnel are alive to the situation and have risen to the occasion for rendering service to the motherland. This can, however, be achieved and maintained only if its own house is kept as clean as possible. The adage "A single spoilt mango damages the basketful" should not be lost sight of. The efforts of the majority of the judicial officers are likely to be set at naught by a few corrupt ones. The problem is how to save the Judiciary from itself.

9. The general belief that suffers corruption, is that the prosecution of a judge would be a shock to the society's confidence in the judiciary. It appears to be a baseless proposition inasmuch as the society knows a corrupt judge and is always itching to see him disgracefully expelled out of the sacred temple of judicial service. If such a person is prosecuted and punished, it will only help in restoring confidence in the judiciary. No such confidence was even shaken when the Judges were impeached or prosecuted in England and U. S. A.

10. There is historical and traditional opposition to an attack on a judge for any reason. It is significant that in the reign of Edward I (1272 to 1307) English Law provided for the punishment of defamatory rumours affecting the reputation of Magistrates. This was the statute of Scandalum Magnatum the offence of which was not abolished in England till 1833. This ancient statute was probably the foundation for common law doctrine that criticism of a judicial officer, even though made after the determination of a cause, may constitute contempt of Court. In U. S. A. this rule was effective in Federal Courts till 2nd March, 1831 when an Act for its repeal was voted. The legislation resulted after the imprisonment of an attorney for criticising one of the decisions of a Judge sitting in Missouri. The Act of 1831 was drawn by Republican James Buchanan, later to be the President of U. S. A. A part of the preamble of the Act may be reproduced as follows:

"Such criticism is the right of the citizen and essential not only for the proper administration of justice but also for the public tranquillity and contentment. Withdrawing power from the Courts to summarily interfere with such exercise of right of the press and freedom of speech deprive them of no useful power. . ." In India a similar process is on the anvil of the Legislature in the shape of Contempt of Courts Bill. Judicial Officers Protection Act also perpetrates an age old notion of protecting a judge even against his malicious acts if done not without jurisdiction. The precedents lay down that even in appeals or transfer petitions an aggrieved party should not make personal allegations against a judge relating to his integrity, etc. All this is too much of a protection in the present era and amounts to an unreasonable curb on the freedom to speak the truth boldly and fearlessly. It introduces a fear element in the complainants and many times prevents the corrupt judges from being exposed.

11. Fear has thus certainly and historically been an important element in the reluctance of many members of legal profession to institute official inquiries into the conduct of judges. Suppose the inquiries are inconclusive or lead to nothing, what will the judge do to the complaining lawyer, to his partners and associates and worst of all to the interest of the client if he still dares to retain him. To overcome this fear element in such complainants the High Court may be invested with powers to withdraw, by an order passed after due notice, such protections in the case of a judge who is repeatedly suspected of corruption.

12. However, the other side of the picture is that by the very nature of his work, a judge has to displease several persons every day and the experience indicates that numerous false complaints start pouring in against innocent judges just for humiliating them and many times for coercing them to leave the virtuous track. The poor judge suffers many times, because he stands all alone surrounded by a group of scoundrels and conspirators, because the officer making the enquiry is more close to the complainant and has an easy faith in the honesty of his complaint, little knowing of the exploited confidence and conspiracy; and many times because a foolish order, passed by a judge either due to negligence, zeal to dispose of the case expeditiously, immaturity of understanding, rashness or due to an unbalanced state of mind, exposes him to various speculative charges based on suspicion fortified by the imputed motives in the complaint. Proper safeguards and anchors will have to be provided against this aspect of a judge exposed to the mischievous elements of the society, for not being washed away or blurred by these waves surging around him. Hence normally no enquiry should be initiated on any anonymous complaint i.e. unless the complainant is willing to come forward with an affidavit in support of his allegations. The name and identity of the complainant may however be kept a closed secret till a very plausible and prima facie case is made out against a judge and he is transferred from the place so that the fear element in the complainant is averted and his interests are properly secured. At the same time in order to keep the waters clean nothing short of removal from service should meet the fate of a judge who is reliably confirmed to be corrupt even if the evidence is scanty. The rigidity of the standards of proof may be relaxed in such cases.

13. At the same time the corruptor must go with the corrupted. Accomplice in the crime, the one who is instrumental in corrupting a judge, should not be allowed to escape unhurt. Bar Council should strive hard to raise the moral standards of the Advocates who are the most easy-go betweens in the matter of corrupting an innocent judge.

14. Corrupt society is no justification for a corrupt judge. The silent heart searching would definitely reveal, that these lofty ideals and high expectations of the society are simply one sided, there is no reciprocity. While rights are always associated with corresponding duties and responsibilities or counter obligations, may I humbly ask, as to what responsibility or obligation is felt or discharged by the society towards a judge, except to keep him half-fed and impoverished making him a laughing stock, a have-not in the society of plenties and power drunk? What are the strongholds and protective devices made available to him, which may help him not only in withstanding the nauseating and suffocating atmosphere around him but may also provide him with footholds for successfully ascending the steep slippery Himalyan peak?

15. It is thus the duty of the society and the State to ameliorate the economic condition of the judge. History records that in the infancy of Vikram Era i.e. in Gupta period in India, every High Court Judge was paid tax free 5,000 silver coins when the cost of living and price index were almost negligible. As against that in the context of present day floating and soaring prices and ever-rising living standards, a judge of a High Court to-day can hardly count 1800' coins of amalgamated metal or paper currency after all deductions on account of taxes etc. This will clearly indicate still worse grossly miserable and very difficult financial lot of the subordinate judicial officers. The economic hardship is many times responsible for undermining the integrity. Today an honest judge living in the neighbourhood of a corrupt judicial officer, has to live like a street beggar by the side of a princely personage and is often contemptuously looked down upon because being almost in the same scale of pay, he and his children stand no comparison and have to suffer the pinch every minute.

16. Being officially required to be in public contact an executive officer with large sums of money in hand and tremendous opportunities to oblige others, has unlimited resources, and even without being corrupt in the sense of accepting bribe in cash or committing embezzlement, he stands in a much more comfortable position by channelising the resources and influences for exacting personal comforts and better worldly life. On the other hand the whole lot of Judges are expected to develop into a confused self-contradiction of a worldly ascetic like King Janak of pre-historic era. Yet whenever the question of revising the pay-scales is raised by the suffering judges, the problem of parity with the executive officers stands in the way as a stumbling block and they are left to dig into the void. According to William Seagle the responsibilities of judges are greater, the society and Government demands much better ethical standards and aloofness demands more expensive living, minimum qualifications for recruitment necessitate late arrival in service, yet in the matter of pay and allotment of residential accommodation parity with others is their poor lot, effigy of which stands erect to baffle all their economy, peace and integrity. Drastic and bold revision of their pay-scales appears to be absolutely necessary before the cancerous growth of corruption does spread its tentacles in deeper tissues of the judicial services in India.

EVIDENCE IN EAST AFRICA. By H. F. Morris M.A., LL.B., Ph. D., Reader in African law, School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. Published by Sweet & Maxwell Ltd. 11 New Fetter Lane, London and the African Universities Press Limited, Lagos. Sole Agents in India, N.M. Tripathi, Private Ltd.,

Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda have codified body of evidence law, the various Evidence Acts being closely based on the Indian Evidence Act of 1872. The Indian Act, in fact was in force until very recently in several of the East African countries. The English common law has been, in general, reproduced in the Indian Act, though there are a number of differences, as do its offsprings the four East African Evidence Acts. The common law of England, no doubt is available in many standard works, but due to these differences, it would be hardly appropriate to approach them. Unlike common law, where the law is codified, the code should itself, as far as the content of the law is concerned, should speak for itself. Accordingly the book under review which is published as Number 24, in "law in Africa" series, is primarily a commentary upon the provisions of the Codes rather than an exposition of the law of evidence as such.

The book opens with an introductory chapter on the historical development of the law of evidence in East Africa. Then are taken up the Evidence Acts section by section, following in general the order in which they appear in the Acts. The commentary has been presented in the light of the decisions of the East African Courts. Important divergencies of the East African law from that of England have been noted. Reference to East African decisions have not always been practicable, since local case law, though full in respect of some aspects of evidence law, for example, those containing the admissibility of confessions and the need for corroboration, is virtually non-existent in respect of considerable portions of the Evidence Acts. In such cases the Indian case law and also the English, have been referred to.

The various provisions of the East African Evidence Acts and the Indian Act are not identically worded. These do not also appear with the same numbering. A comparative table of corresponding provisions of the various Acts (including the parent Indian Act) has been given in the beginning. Similarly ample footnotes showing the correspondence in section numbering are given. The comparative table and the footnotes have greatly overcome any difficulty which the reader and the student are apt to encounter. In general, the Kenya Act has been taken as the basis; it is its sections that have been referred to in the books.

Sequence of the chapters follows the sequence of the chapters of the Acts. After the historical introduction, the topic of admissibility and relevancy followed by the topic of hearsay evidence are taken up. Then follows "admissions and confessions"; subjects dealing with the evidence of opinion and character are dealt with next. The subject of judicial notice is taken up in Chapter 7. Chapters 8 and 9 deal with burden of proof and estoppel. The last two chapters are devoted to witnesses, their competence, compellability and the weight of their evidence and their examination.

The entire commentary is lucid, succinct and not voluminous like a big work. This will be welcomed by the students for whom the book is mainly written. No text book on the East African law of Evidence has, as yet, existed. This book will surely fill this need of both the student and the legal practitioner. But this does not mean that the student has not to assist himself with works on the English and Indian law. These works will have to be consulted with the differences between the English and the East African law clearly in mind. There are a couple of works recently published on the law of Evidence in Nigeria, which are of relevance to East Africa, the present work may also be of relevance to Nigeria, for Nigeria shares with East Africa the characteristic of possessing not only a codified law of evidence but also one which derives from the same authorship, that of Fitzjames Stephen, the drafter both of the Indian Evidence Act and of the Digest of Evidence upon which Nigerian Act is based.

The Appendices contain the text of the Kenya Evidence Act and the Primary Courts (Evidence) Regulations. The law dealt with in the text is, in general that which existed on January 1, 1967. Since this date, however, the Evidence Act of Tanzania, has been enacted in April 1967, replacing in mainland portion of Tanzania, the Indian Evidence Act previously operating in what used to be the Territory of Tanganyika. The manuscript had to be recast so as to take into account this new enactment.

To Indian students, the book will be found interesting not only from the point of view of comparative study, but also to know how their Act has travelled much beyond the borders of India without having changed in any particular aspect. This is in a way a compliment to that great drafter of the Indian Act, Fitzjames Stephen.

The appellant was charged for selling adulterated stuff on the ground that the warranty as required by Rule 12A was not forthcoming. The invoice received from the whole-seller contained a remark "the quality is upto the mark".

Held, "the quality is upto the mark" means the quality is upto the standards required by the Act and the vendee, the quality in the context would include nature and substance of the article. There was sufficient compliance with the requirement of Rule 12 (A) although the warranty did not exist in the label or cash memo. This reasonable interpretation of Rule 12A would achieve the object underlying without causing harm to the right of carrying on trade. Appeal was allowed.

K. C. Nambiar v. Rent Controller, Madras and others.

Civil Appeal No. 2225 of 1966, D/- 18-8-1969.

The Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960 — Section (3) (b) and Section 4 (2) — The Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Rules; 1960— Rules 11, 12, 13 and 14.

"Fair Rent" — Material date for calculating "cost of production".

"Cost of production"—Whether market value for reproducing the building on the date when the Act came into force—Held, "Cost of construction" means the cost on the date of the construction of the building.

In the application by the landlord for the fixation of the standard rent it was contended that the cost of construction means cost of reproducing similar building on the date on which the Act was brought into force. It was contended that the "fair rent" under Section 4 (3) (b) (i) means the market value of reproducing a similar building and the deduction of the depreciation as provided by the Act. According to the tenant the "fair rent" should be fixed on the basis of the cost of construction when the building was constructed added to by such additions which are subsequently made.

Held, the intention of the Legislature in using the expression "Cost of construction" in Section 4 (3) (b) (i) and the expression "market value" in Sub-section (3) (b) (ii) is not to equate two. Market value would include factors such as amenities, architectural features, situation, etc. A separate provision for these factors is made in the Act and Rules for the additional rent. It cannot be the intention of the Legislature that in fixing the fair rent the amenities as stated above should be taken into consideration twice. Fixation of standard rent on the basis of market value reverses the normal method followed in most of the rent control Acts in other States. Further, market value of real property may go on changing from year to year. Rejecting the High Court's view it was held that the cost of construction for the purposes of fixing the fair rent is not the cost of the reproduced building on the date of the commencement of the Act reduced by depreciation at the prescribed rates.

The Madhya Pradesh Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 — Section 82.

"Dispute touching the business of a society" — The claim for the recovery of the price of goods purchased by a co-operative Society. Held, the claim touches the business of the society — Complaint directed to be presented to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies.

The appellant had preferred a claim against a co-operative Society for the supply of foodgrains. Another Co-operative Society stood surety for the respondent Society. The High Court dismissed the suit filed by the appellant for the recovery of the price of grant supplied, holding that Civil Court was incompetent by virtue of Section 82 (1) (c) to try the suit.

Held, the respondent Society carries on the business of purchase and sale of foodgrains and other goods. The by-laws contain the object of purchasing and supplying the food-stuffs. The expression "touching the business of a Society" means any reference or in relation to, respecting, regarding, or concerning the business of the society. The dispute thus touches the business of the respondent society.

The complaint was returned for presentation to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies.

Municipal Council, Raipur and another v. State of Madhya Pradesh.

The Motor Transport Workers Act, 1961 (Madhya Pradesh) — Section 2 (g).

"Motor Transport Undertaking" — Whether Municipal Council engaged in transport workers is a "Motor Transport Undertaking" and requires registration under Section 3 (1) of the Act. Held, Municipal Council is "Motor Transport Undertaking" for the purposes of registration.

Section 38 — Exemption on the ground of public Order — Municipal Council's function of carrying night soil and for distributing water does not fall under "public order" — No exemption.

The Municipal Council, Raipur and the Presiding Officer were prosecuted for failure to register under Section 3 (1) of the Motor Transport Workers Act, 1961. The Council employs about 50 transport workers. The appellant Council claimed that the Council was not a Motor Transport undertaking and was exempted under Section 38 (1) from registration under the Act.

The definitions of "private carrier", "Transport vehicle" and "Goods" in the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 make it clear that the appellant Council falls within the definition of "private carrier" as the Council owns transport vehicles and uses them solely for the carriage of goods which are its properties.

By use of word "includes" the Legislature has intended to enlarge the meaning of expression "Motor Transport undertaking" and does not intend to restrict it to undertakings of commercial nature. The Act provides for the welfare of the Transport workers and regulates the conditions of their work. Such beneficial Acts are not to be construed strictly.

"Public Order" means "public peace and tranquillity" and does not mean "public health" as alleged. Carrying of night soil and distribution of water by the Council for which vehicles are used does not fall under "public order" and the vehicles engaged for the said purpose are not entitled to exemption from registration under Section 38 (1) (u).

Held, since the jurisdiction of the Delhi High Court was itself challenged the application in Madhya Pradesh Court was maintainable.

The appellant and the respondent were carrying on business in partnership in Madhya Pradesh and at two places in Maharashtra namely, Bombay and Nagpur. In a dispute regarding the partnership business, the Arbitrator appointed by both the parties, applied for extension of time for making the award under Section 28 to Subordinate Judge Delhi, which was granted. The jurisdiction of the Delhi Court was challenged in an appeal in Delhi High Court. Pending this appeal the appellant applied for the appointment of a receiver to property to a Court in Madhya Pradesh. The respondent moved for the stay of the proceedings. The Madhya Pradesh Court appointed the receiver and the same was confirmed by Madhya Pradesh High Court. The question for decision was whether the Madhya Pradesh Court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in view of the fact that Delhi Court was seized of the matter, under Section 31 (4) of the Act.

Held, that the Civil Court in Madhya Pradesh was competent to appoint receiver of the property until the question about jurisdiction of the Delhi Court in Section 31 (4) was finally determined. After the High Court of Delhi determined the question, the receiver appointed might be made subject to jurisdiction of Delhi High Court if it was held that Delhi High Court had a jurisdiction to entertain the application for extension of time.

The application for appointment of receiver could be granted notwithstanding the order of stay of suit under Section 34 of the Arbitration Act.

The appellant was convicted under Section 420 read with Sec. 120-B, I. P. The Railway booking officer had made the entry on the receipt to show that he had acted only according to the instructions by the appellant regarding weight and description of the goods.

Held, the Railways did not run any additional risk or liability, apart from Sec. 73 of the Railways Act, in spite of the misrepresentation on the forwarding note. Constitution of India, Art. 309.

The petitioners are direct recruits and the Respondents 6 to 39 are promotees in Income-tax Officers Class I, Grade II service. Various appointments and promotions made between 1945 to 50 were challenged by the petitioners. The Rules under which the said actions were taken viz. Income-tax Officers (Class I, Grade II) Service Rules 1945 and Seniority Rules, 1949, 1950 were alleged to be discriminatory and violative of Arts. 14 and 16 of the Constitution. Seniority Rule of 1952 along with the Seniority list were challenged on similar grounds. The Court upheld the preliminary objections raised by the Attorney General and held that the writ petition was not maintainable.

Held, the impugned Rules, orders and actions are pre-constitutional and were valid at their inception. They cannot be challenged for the alleged violation of Arts. 14 & 16 as Constitution has no retrospective operation.

The challenge to Seniority Rule 1952, was negatived by the Court on the ground of delay. There was a delay of 15 years. Even after the alleged knowledge of the Government decision in 1961 there was inordinate delay in filing the petition. Civil Appeal No. 418 of 1969, D/- 9-10-1969.

Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Writ of mandamus — Alternate remedy — Whether Arbitration under Sec. 15 of the Telegraph Act, 1885, a proper remedy in a dispute over rental payable for erection of electric poles — Held, Sec. 15 inapplicable.

Indian Electricity Act, 1910, S. 51. Conferment of some powers under Indian Telegraph Act, 1885 on the licensee under the Electricity Act, does not mean that the rights & liabilities of a licensee are governed by the Telegraph Act.

Indian Telegraph Act, 1885. Sec. 15; Sec. 3(6) Arbitration to resolve certain disputes between telegraph authority and local authority — Licensee under the Electricity Act, is not a "telegraph authority" within the meaning of Sec. 3(6) of the Telegraph Act.

Mandamus sought against the Respondent Corporation by the Appellant, restraining the Respondent from taking any coercive action for the alleged recovery of the arrears of rent for the land utilised for the erection of electric poles. High Court rejected the petition on preliminary ground that proper remedy was arbitration under Sec. 15 of the Telegraph Act, 1885.

Held, although Sec. 51 of the Electricity Act, empowers the State Government to confer certain powers on the licensee under that Act, enjoyed by a "telegraph authority" under the Telegraph Act, it does not follow that all the rights and liabilities of such a licensee are governed by the Telegraph Act. A licensee under Electricity Act is not a "telegraph authority" within the meaning of Sec. 3(6) of the Telegraph Act. The remedy of Arbitration under Sec. 15 of the Telegraph Act is available only in case of certain disputes. Remedy under Sec. 15 of the Telegraph Act was not open to the Appellant.

Words and Phrases "Incidental" "whatsoever".

The time-keepers prepare the paysheets of the workshop staff, maintain leave accounts, dispose settlement cases and maintain record for statistical purposes of the staff engaged in the production of Railway spare parts and repairs.

Held, Factories Act was a welfare legislation and should be liberally interpreted. Keeping in view the duties and functions of the respondents they must be treated workers. The definition of "worker" in the Factories Act does not exclude employees entrusted with clerical duties.

The use of word "whatsoever" after the words "any other kind of work" in the definition of "worker" under S. 2(h) of the Factories Act 1934, was redundant. Its deletion in the amending Act has not narrowed down the definition of "worker".

Powers of the Appellate Court in disposing of appeal—Amendment of charge with an opportunity to the accused to meet the same what was ordered by the High Court was not a "new trial".

Criminal Procedure Code: Sec. 535:

Failure of justice — no failure since the opportunity to meet the amended charge was given — no prejudice.

In an appeal against the conviction for misappropriation of money (Sec. 406 I. P. C.), the High Court sent back the case to the trial Court to amend the charge so as to include misappropriation of property also and directed that the accused should be given full opportunity to meet his case. The appeal was kept pending. In the said order the High Court used the word "retrial". The High Court's order was challenged on the ground that the retrial ordered without satisfaction of the prima facie case of entrustment of goods was against the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code and was grossly prejudicial to the accused.

Held, the order in question was not an order of "retrial". The amended charge arose out of the same transaction and allegations and no further evidence was to be recorded by the prosecution. Such order was within the competence of the High Court under Sec. 423 Cr. P. C.

There was no failure of justice nor any prejudice caused to the accused in spite of the fact that the question of prima facie case on the charge of misappropriation of goods was not decided by the High Court. The accused was afforded opportunity to lead evidence and to meet the amended charge.

Cr. Apps. Nos. 113 & 163 of 1969, D/-14-10-1969.

(A) Indian Penal Code, Sec. 120-B — Conspiracy — Accumulation of foreign exchange in violation of rules regarding repatriation.

Per Majority — Agreement to evade repatriation of foreign exchange and helping the accumulation in a foreign country amounts to conspiracy.

Per Mitter J. — The offence falls under Sec. 21(1) Foreign Exchange Regulation Act & not under Sec. 120-B, I. P. C.

Per Hegde J.:— The charge-sheet does not disclose any conspiracy.

(B) Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1949, Sections 4(3), 5(1)(e) & 9, 21(1) — Agreement for evasion of the provisions of the Act.

(C) Mala fides — Complaint not bona fide — Per Hegde J.

A complaint was filed against Appellant No. 1, a Swedish National and Appellant No. 2 Managing Director of M/s. Rayala Corporation, India, under S. 120-B, I. P. C. and Sections 4(3), 5(1)(e) and 9 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1949, for conspiring to (illicitly) acquiring & retaining foreign exchange in Sweden. There were two agreements between Appellants Nos. 1 & 2, entered into in 1963 & 1965, whereby, Appellant No. 1 was to help appellant No. 2 to keep the foreign exchange in a Swedish bank & to look after the proper accounting. In pursuance of the conspiracy, Appellant No. 1 after the accumulation of foreign exchange abroad, visited India several times to acquaint appellant No. 2 of the position of his account. Appellant

No. 1 was arrested and detained when the plane touched Indian Airport and stopped due to engine trouble. The Supreme Court held the detention illegal and released him. In M/s Rayala Corporation (P) Ltd. v. The Director of Enforcement, Cr. Apps Nos 17 & 19 of 1969, D/- 23-7-69=AIR 1969 NSC 135 in which the proceeding started was against appellant No 2 and Rayala Corporation, for the same offences, the Supreme Court set aside the proceedings as being against the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act.

(A) Held, per majority —

Entering into 1965 agreement for the illegal acquisition of foreign exchange in violation of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1885, and acting in furtherance of it by crediting the exchange in the Swedish bank, visits to India for furnishing statements of account by Appellant No 1, amount to conspiracy within the meaning of Sec. 120-B I. P. C.

Per Mitter J. :— The offence is one relating to an agreement regarding illicit acquisition and withholding repatriation to India of the foreign exchange. It falls under Sec. 21(1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act and not under Sec 120-B, I. P. C.

Per Hegde J. :— The allegations show that appellant No 1 was an accessory after the fact and not a co-conspirator.

(B) Per Mitter J. :— A complaint for prosecution under Sec. 23(1)(b) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act for violation of S 21(1), cannot be launched unless the adjudicatory proceedings are completed under Sec. 23(1)(A) and the authorities were satisfied that the administrative penalties were not adequate to meet the gravity of the offence. M/s Rayala Corporation (P) Ltd. v. The Director of Enforcement, New Delhi, Cr. App Nos 17 & 19 of 1969, D/- 23-7-69=AIR 1969 NSC 135.

(C) Per Hegde J. :— The complaint was not bona fide but was colourable so as to detain Appellant No 1, in India.

Appeal against the order of Madras High Court (holding the complaint valid) was dismissed.

Constitution of India, Arts. 233 & 235 — Promotion of a District Judge — Promotion to the post of an Additional District Judge can be ordered by the Governor, in consultation with the High Court under Art. 233 — Not within the power of the High Court under Art. 235.

High Court of Assam, on a writ of quo warranto, declared that one Rajkhowa the District Judge, Tezpur, Assam was not entitled to hold the office. The High Court held that the promotion of Shri Rajkhowa as Additional District Judge (and then as District Judge) should have been made by the High Court in exercise of its power under Art. 235. The order of promotion issued by the Governor was illegal.

Held, Additional District Judge is also a District Judge for the purpose of Arts. 233 & 235. Promotion to the post of an Additional District Judge as also the promotion of a District Judge is made by Governor under Art. 233. The promotion of a person from junior service to the post of an Additional District Judge, is not a promotion of a person holding post inferior to the post of District Judge, within the meaning of Art. 235. Therefore High Court is not the promoting authority.

It was held by the trial Court and confirmed by the High Court, that the Appellant had waived his right by acting as a broker in the respondents' transaction.

Held, the contention, that in absence of consideration, there was no waiver, was incorrect. Under Indian law (Sec. 63, Indian Contract Act) neither consideration nor an agreement would be necessary to constitute waiver.

Punjab Civil Service Rules—R. 3.26(d).

Extension of date of retirement where the disciplinary proceeding is pending.

Suspension — Order of suspension becomes effective from the date of its issuance (communication) and not from the date of actual receipt.

Words and Phrases: "Communication". The order is said to be communicated when the telegrams were despatched to the address of the respondent.

The respondent who was an employee of State of Punjab was on deputation with the Himachal Pradesh Government. His due date of retirement was August 4, 1958. The State of Punjab passed an order of suspension on July 31, 1958 which was communicated to the respondent by a telegram to his home address where he was enjoying leave preparatory to retirement sanctioned by the Himachal Pradesh Government. The Himachal Pradesh Government then cancelled the leave granted. The order of suspension was received by the respondent after his date of retirement i. e. August 4, 1958. The respondent challenged the disciplinary proceedings as bad in law as the order of suspension was received by him after the date of retirement. The question for the decision was whether an order of suspension takes effect when it is made or when it is actually served on and received by the Government servant.

Held, the telegrams transmitted or imparted information to the respondent that he was suspended from a particular date. Once the order is issued and is sent out to the concerned Government servant it must be held to have been communicated to him, no matter when he actually received it.

The State Government has a right to extend the date of retirement if a disciplinary action is contemplated under R. 3.26(d) of the Punjab Civil Service Rules.

Held, suspension was valid.

Publication of false statement of facts by the election agent.

Oral statements in the meeting against the respondent No. 2's personal character and conduct.

The allegation was that the Maharaja of Gwalior promised certain sums of money for the school building if none of the voters voted for respondent No. 2. The Court found the allegation unbelievable as it was not possible to find out whether anybody has voted for the respondent No. 2 or not. The witnesses on behalf of respondent No. 2 were found to be interested witnesses. They were not believed.

The Court found that the alleged publication of false statements in the newspaper made by the election agent were published before he was appointed as election agent. The allegation that respondent No. 1 had distributed thousands of copies of the said newspaper in the town of Bhind on the date of polling and a day before it was fantastic. The court agreed with the High Court that the witnesses on behalf of respondent No. 2 were either the candidates along with respondent No. 1 or were interested in respondent No. 2. Held, the allegation was not established by satisfactory evidence. The alleged corrupt practice of respondent 1 accusing respondent No. 2 in the public meeting of securing withdrawal of a candidate belonging to Republican Party on payment of bribe of Rs. 2,000 was found to be not proved. The witnesses were not believed for the reasons stated above.

The Court confirmed the findings of the High Court and dismissed the appeal.

Revisionary powers of the Chief Settlement Commissioner of the "verified claims"

A claim verified at Rs. 10 lacs as the value of the property left in West Pakistan by the Appellant, was revised to Rs. 15,000 by the Settlement Commissioner, exercising the power of the Chief Settlement Commissioner under Section 5(1)(b) of the Supplementary Act of 1954. It was contended that the Chief Settlement Commissioner had no jurisdiction to revise the order made by the Claims Commissioner exercising the revisionary powers under the 1950 Act.

Held, on plain reading of Sec. 5(1)(b) & in the light of the definition of the expression 'verified claim' the Chief Settlement Commissioner, has suo motu power to revise a claim on which a final order has been passed by the Chief Claims Commissioner under the 1950 Act. The words "revise any verified claims" show that the Parliament intended to entrust the Chief Settlement Commissioner a wide power of scrutiny. The statutory scheme of the Act also supports this view.

Since the best evidence regarding the title and value of property was in Pakistan, the legislature found it necessary in the larger public interest to grant a power to revise and re-assess the verified claims, even though they were confirmed in the revision under the principal Act.

The revisionary powers of the Chief Settlement Commissioner under Section 5(1)(b) read with Rule 18 were wider and more general than the similar power in Section 115 and Order 47, Rule 1(c) of the Civil Procedure Code. The exercise of the revisionary powers in the instant case fell under clause (iii) of Rule 18.

On merits it was held that the revision of the claim by the Chief Settlement Commissioner was not based on any evidence but on conjectures. Case sent back to Chief Settlement Commissioner for a fresh decision according to law.

Constitution of India — Art. 136 Re-appreciation of evidence — Defence evidence totally ignored by the High Court — Supreme Court can reconsider the evidence in spite of concurrent findings of facts.

Prevention of Corruption Act, S. 5(1)(d) and S. 5(2); Indian Penal Code: S. 161 — Illegal gratification by a public servant.

The appellant who was an accountant with the Municipal Committee Budhleda was convicted for accepting bribe of Rs. 10 from a contractor working for the Municipality. The appellant's contention was that he had recovered Rs. 8 12 which was an excess payment made to the contractor in the earlier bill and had returned Rs. 1.88 to the contractor and also had passed the receipt. The Executive Officer of the Municipality deposed that there was an excess payment of Rs. 8-12 and that he had ordered the recovery from the contractor. There were two independent witnesses including a Municipal Commissioner who had seen the appellant passing the receipt to the contractor. The account book showed that there was a shortage of Rs. 1.88. All this evidence was brushed aside as false by the High Court and it confirmed the findings of the Special Judge.

Held, this was a fit case to reappreciate the evidence in spite of the concurrent findings of facts of the two Courts. On considering the defence evidence the conviction was set aside.

C. A. Nos. 1302-1306 of 1968, D/- 13-10-1969).

Mysore Municipalities Act, 1964: Section 382 — Continuation application of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920 for certain purposes — Tax assessed on the basis of Madras Act and higher rate of tax prescribed by the Madras Act availed of by the Mysore Municipality. Held, house tax levied not valid.

The Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920 which was applicable to the City of Mangalore before the formation of the new Mysore State was repealed by the Mysore Municipality Act, 1964 which was further amended in 1966. Section 382(1) and its provisos Nos. 2 and 3 continued the assessment of tax and fees under the Madras Act and also continued the higher rate of tax and fees so long as the new rates were not prescribed by the Mysore Act. The respondent was served with a demand notice for the payment of property tax for the year 1966-67 at Madras rate which was higher than the one prescribed by the Mysore Act. The High Court quashed the assessment as being illegal.

On appeal by special leave the Supreme Court held that provisos 2 and 3 to Section 382(1) of the Mysore Act were not applicable in the instant case as the property tax was not imposed (initially) by the Madras Act.

Held, the assessment lists are meant for one official year as Municipal tax is an annual tax. Municipal Corporation v. Hira Lal, (1968) 2 SCR 125 = AIR 1968 SC 642 relied upon. The Solicitor General's contention that the assessment books which were prepared under the Madras Act and which held good for five years, entitled the levy of house tax on the basis of Madras Act, was rejected.

Cr. A. Nos. 72, 73, 74 of 1968, D/- 13-10-1969.

Indian Penal Code: Sec. 302, 325 read with S. 34—'Sentence'—Reduction of sentence on the ground of imprisonment already undergone.

The three accused were convicted under Section 302 I. P. C. and sentenced to death for the murder of 'X'. They were also convicted and sentenced under Sections 324 and 325 read with S. 34 I. P. C. for causing hurt to other person. The High Court set aside the conviction of all the three accused on the ground (i) that the medical evidence did not fit in the prosecution case of the use of spear for causing death, (ii) that the time of lodging the First Information Report by one Shiv Singh who was also hurt was incorrect and (iii) there was a delay in medical examination of one Jog Raj who had received injuries at the hands of the accused.

The Supreme Court sent for the spear-head that was recovered from the accused so as to ascertain whether the medical evidence of the Civil Surgeon regarding the injuries was correct or not. The Supreme Court came to the conclusion that the injuries mentioned in the post-mortem report could have been caused by the said spear-head.

The Supreme Court believed the eye-witnesses and held that the inaccuracy in the mention of the exact time of lodging the F. I. R. as also the delay in the medical examination of Jog Raj had no material bearing so as to come to the contrary conclusion regarding the guilt.

In view of the long interval of time between the Session's trial and hearing before the Supreme Court, the sentence under Section 302 I. P. C. was altered to one of imprisonment for life.

C. A. No. 1869 (NCE) of 1968, D/- 16-10-1969.

Constitution of India: Art. 191 — Office of Profit under Govt. Advocate appointed as a special Govt. Pleader for some arbitration cases — (Per majority) does not hold office of profit.

Representation of the People Act, 1951: Sec. 80.

Representation of the People Act, 1951: Sec. 82 — Parties to the petition. For making person a party he must be a candidate of the same election.

Words & Phrases — "Office"—Appearance of a pleader for Govt. in certain number of cases does not amount to creation of new office (per majority) — Governor's order appointing the appellant as a special Govt. Pleader was the creation of an office (per minority).

Legislative competence—Whether State Legislature can pass a law with retrospective effect for removal of the disqualification — State Legislature competent. (unanimous).

The appellant was appointed as a Special Government Pleader by the Governor of Rajasthan for assisting in the conduct of certain arbitration matters. The fees were also prescribed. She appeared for the State before and after her election on February, 22, 1967. The election was set aside by the High Court on the ground of incurring disqualification under Article 191 of the Constitution as she was holding office of profit under the State Government at the time of her election.

When the appeal against the High Court's order was pending in Supreme Court, Rajasthan Legislative Assembly Members (Prevention of Disqualification) Act 1969 was passed to remove the disqualification of the appellant with retrospective effect. The questions for the decision were (i) whether the appellant was holding office of profit under the State Government and (ii) whether the State Legislature was competent to pass a law removing the disqualification with retrospective effect and (iii) whether the petition was bad for not impleading one Shri Mathur as a respondent.

(i) Held, (Per majority) (SIKRI, RAY, JAGANMOHAN REDDY, JJ) Article 191 (1)(a) of the Constitution creates disqualification for an office and not for a particular person holding the office. Office must be subsisting permanent, substantive position with independent existence and a person who filled it.

(Justice Rawlatt in Great Western Ry. Co v. Bater, (1922) 8 Tax Cas 231 There is no difference between the said definition of Justice Rawlatt and the definitions of "office" followed by Lord Wright and Lord Atkin in McMillan v. Guests, 24 Tax Cas 190).

In Mahadeo v. Shantibhai, C. A. No. 1832 (NCE) of 1967, D/- 15-10-1968 (SC) the definitions of office, the definition of Lord Wright was followed.

Mahadeo's case, C. A. No. 1832 (NCE) of 1967, D/- 15-10-1968 (SC) distinguished on the ground that it was a case of a panel lawyer with more permanent and abiding relation with the State Government.

The Notification under Order 27, Rule 8(b) appointing a person as a Special Government Pleader as in the instant case does not create an "office" within the mischief of Article 191.

Held, on the above grounds that the petitioner was not disqualified under Article 191 (per minority) (Hidayatullah C. J. and Mitter J.) Mrs. Kathuria was not briefed as a lawyer and entrusted with the Government litigation, simpliciter but a special office of a Special Government Pleader under Order 27, Rule 8(b) C. P. C. was created as there were 26 arbitration cases and more cases were likely to add. Therefore, even according to Rawlatt J.'s definition the appellant was holding an "office". "Office of profit" is a position or place to which certain duties are attached, especially one of a more or less public character. Lord Wright in McMillan v. Guests; 1942 AC 561.

II. (Per unanimous Court) — The State Legislature was competent to pass an enactment removing the disqualifications with retrospective effect. Art. 191 does not take away the competence. Assuming that the appellant had incurred a disqualification the same was cleared by the enactment of the Rajasthan Assembly.

III. It was not necessary to implead Mr. Mathur as a party as he was not a candidate at the same election, in which the appellants and respondents were the contestants.

In terms of the majority opinion the appeal was allowed.

Indian Penal Code — Secs. 396, 411 & 412 — Recovery of stolen property from the appellant — By itself not sufficient to convict the accused either for murder or dacoity — The only evidence against the appellant was three cotton lengths recovered — Held, no conviction under Sec. 396 or 412 but only under Sec. 411.

Evidence Act — Sec. 114 (illustration (a)): — Presumption where a person is found to be in possession of stolen property.

The appellant was not named by any eye-witnesses, no witness had claimed to identify him as taking part in the dacoity and the dying declaration did not mention him. High Court relying on illustration (a) to Sec. 114 of the Evidence Act, convicted the appellant under Sec. 396 I. P. C. as he was found to be in possession of three cotton lengths (forming part of the looted property).

The Supreme Court followed the decision in Sanwat Khan v. State of Rajasthan AIR 1956 SC 54 = 1956 Cri LJ 150 which has laid down that it was not safe to draw inference that a person in possession of stolen property was a murderer.

Wasim Khan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 SCR 191 = AIR 1956 SC 400 = 1956 Cri LJ 790 was distinguished as in that case there was other evidence, apart from stolen property, establishing the connection of the accused to murder.

Held, the accused can be presumed to know that the goods were stolen, but not that they were stolen in the dacoity. Conviction converted to one under Sec. 411.

(B) Indian Contract Act — Section 74 — A sum payable for the breach of the auction sale should not be in the nature of penalty — Liability to extent of actual loss.

An interim receiver appointed under Section 20 of the Provincial Insolvency Act put to auction a house belonging to the insolvent, under Court orders. The respondent was the highest bidder and paid 25 per cent of the amount of the bid under the condition of the auction at the time of the auction. She did not pay the balance within the stipulated period. The amount deposited was forfeited.

Held, the auction was made by the receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act and not under Order 21 of the Civil Procedure Code. Rule 86 of Order 21 had therefore, no application to the auction sale held by the receiver. The rights and obligations of the Receiver and the respondents were governed strictly by the provisions of the Indian Contract Act.

Forfeiture of 25 per cent of the amount of the auction bid was in the nature of penalty within the meaning of Section 74 of the Indian Contract Act. Since no actual loss was suffered by the receiver the respondent had no obligation to make any payment for the breach. Held, forfeiture was not justified.

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (f) & Art. 31 — Recognition as a Ruler does not entitle the Ruler to inherit the private property of the ex-ruler — Recognition does not violate Arts. 19(1)(f), 31.

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Power to recognise the ruler is not arbitrary and unguided.

The petitioner claimed the private property worth Rs. 3 crores belonging to the deceased Maharaja of the former Dholpur State, on the principle of lineal male primogeniture. As there was a dispute, the President appointed a committee for recommending as to who should be recognised as the ruler. His Highness the Maharaja Shri Rana Hemant Singh was declared as the ruler of Dholpur by the President of India. In challenging the recommendations of the Committee, and the President's Order, the petitioner raised the following contentions—

1. Recognition as a ruler also invests the said ruler with the private property of the ex-ruler. The President's Order violates the property right of the petitioner under Articles 19 and 31.
2. Recognition as a ruler by the President is not permissible under Article 366 (22) which is merely a definition article. Recognition is not the exercise of a political power by the President, and the same is justiciable.
3. Power of recognition is arbitrary and unguided.

Held, recognition does not invest the ruler with the private property of the ex-ruler, it gives him only right to privy purse and other privileges of the office. Petitioner had not established that he was entitled to the private property of the ex-ruler. There was no violation of Arts. 19 (1) (f) and 31.

The words "for the time being is recognised by the President" create the power to recognise a successor to the existing ruler. The words "is recognised by the President" indicate that the power of recognition is embedded and inherent in the clause itself. The words "for the time being" indicate that the President has power not only to recognise but also to withdraw recognition.

The power of recognition is a political power of the President and is not justiciable similar to the matters falling under Art. 363 of the Constitution.

The President had exercised the power by appointing a committee to examine the rival claims. The power of recognition is the exclusive privilege of the President and cannot be challenged as arbitrary.

Writ Petn. No. 207 of 1967, D/-29-9-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Choice of Procedure under S. 5(1)(a) and S. 5 (1) (b) of the Minimum Wages Act, does not give unguided discretion in matters of fixation of minimum wages — No violation of Art. 14

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (g) — Freedom of trade — Prescribed minimum wages do not interfere with the freedom of trade — A trade has no right to continue if it cannot pay minimum wages.

(C) Minimum Wages Act, S. 51 (a) — Government may not appoint a committee under the Section if it is in possession of the adequate data.

(D) Natural Justice—Whether fixing of minimum wages a quasi-judicial function? — No failure of natural justice principle as adequate opportunity was given.

The Government of Mysore by its Notification dated 1st June 1967 fixed minimum wages for different classes of employees in residential hotels and eating houses in the State of Mysore. The Order was challenged on the following grounds—

1. Section 5 (1) of the Act is violative of Art. 14 inasmuch as it leaves unguided discretion with the Government to follow either of the alternative procedures prescribed in Cls. (a) and (b) of that sub-section. It was incumbent on the State Government to appoint a committee for the recommendation of minimum wages. Government's failure has resulted in fixing minimum wages arbitrarily.
2. Minimum wages fixed under the Act interfere with the freedom of trade guaranteed under Art. 19 (1) (g).
3. Failure to observe natural justice principles in the fixation of minimum wages, which is a quasi-judicial function, vitiates the said Order.
4. It was illegal to fix different wages in different industries and to carve out different zones for that purpose. Division into zones was done on irrational basis.
5. The valuation of the food where provided by the employer, was unreasonably low thereby giving undue benefit to the employees.

The power to choose the procedure under Section 5 (1) was not unguided and unregulated. Which procedure should be followed in a particular employment depends on the nature of employment and the information the Government has in its possession minimum wages change according to the standard of living and differ from place to place and industry to industry. It also depends on the collection of considerable data. The Government had consulted the Advisory Committee constituted under Section 7 of the Act. The choice of procedures does not violate Art. 14. The advice of the Committee appointed under Section 5 (1) (a) is not binding on the Government. If the Government has a sufficient data in its possession to formulate proposals under Section 5 (1) (b) there is no need of appointing a committee.

The observations regarding the validity of Section 5 (1) in the Edward Mills Co. Ltd. v. State of Ajmer, (1955) 1 SCR 735 = AIR 1955 SC 35 and Bijay Cotton Mills Ltd. v. State of Ajmer, (1955) 1 SCR 752 = AIR 1955 SC 93, Rel. on.

It is not correct to say that the small units in hotel industry would be adversely affected and driven out of trade if the minimum wages are to be paid. The industry or units which cannot pay minimum wages have no right to exist. Freedom of trade does not mean freedom to exploit. Article 19 is not violated.

Natural justice principles relevant for each occasion should be followed even in administrative proceedings. A. K. Kraipak v. Union of India, (1969) 2 SCC 262 = AIR 1969 NSC 108. The reasonable opportunity was given to the Appellants in fixing the minimum wages. After the report of the Advisory Committee, the Government may reduce the proposed rates or enhance them in the final order.

Under Section 3 (3), Government has a power to divide the State into several zones and fix different minimum wages for different industries and localities. Fixing of zones was not done on collateral considerations. M/s. Bhikusa Yamasa Kahatriya v. Sangamner Akola Taluka Bidi Kamgar Union, (1963) Supp 1 SCR 524 = AIR 1963 SC 1591.

The plea regarding the valuation of food contradicted the principal contention of minimum wages at a higher rate. If the value of food is increased, the minimum wages should also increase. Supply of food is an amenity under S. 22 (2) (v).

(B) — Sanction for action against an ex-ruler.

The respondent Pundarik had filed a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rupees

32,938 against the Government of Rajasthan and the ex-ruler of Shanpura State alleging that the moveable property (gold and silver) belonging to his adoptive father was not returned to him. The property was with the Court of Wards of the Shahpura State. After the merger of State, the property passed to the State of Rajasthan. The High Court of Rajasthan partially allowed the claim against the State of Rajasthan. The claim against ex-ruler of Shahpura was rejected on the ground that the sanction of the Central Government as required by Section 86 read with Section 87 (B) of the Code of Civil Procedure was not obtained by the respondent. The trial Court rejected the claim on the ground that the same was barred under Art. 363 of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court agreed with the High Court and held the evidence was trustworthy. It was an evidence that the State property was intermingled with the personal property of the ruler. It was in evidence that all such property including the gold and silver belonging to the respondent's father passed to the State of Rajasthan as a successor State. The High Court's findings were upheld.

In the Habeas Corpus petition under Art. 32, the petitioners had challenged their detention under Section 3 (2) of the Preventive Detention Act on the ground of unjustifiable delaying the consideration of their representations by the State Government. The State challenged the maintainability of the said petitions on the principle of res judicata as the petitioners had earlier moved the High Court for the same relief.

Held, a petition under Art. 32 of the Constitution for the issue of a writ of Habeas Corpus is not barred on the principle of res judicata if the petition for a similar writ under Art. 226 of the Constitution before a High Court has been decided and no appeal is brought up to the Supreme Court against that decision. Decision of the Supreme Court in Daryao v State of U P, (1962) 1 SCR 574 = (AIR 1961 SC 1457) clearly indicates that the principle of res judicata does not apply to the petition for Habeas Corpus. The grounds urged before the High Court and the High Court's decision on them was not placed before the Supreme Court. In the circumstances, the Supreme Court held that the State cannot invoke the principle of res judicata.

There was no satisfactory explanation for the delay of two months in the consideration of the representation by the State Government. Detention held illegal.

The Industrial Disputes Act, 1947: Section 11 — Procedure to be followed by the Tribunal — Shutting management's evidence — Award suffers from infirmity.

Strike and lock-out both illegal — Apportionment of blame — Wages — Half month's wages.

On a reference of an Industrial Dispute the Tribunal held that the strike was unjustified and lock-out after the first day was illegal. During the course of the enquiry the Tribunal granted time to the workers to produce their evidence but refused the adjournment to the management and declared the evidence closed. Without properly apportioning the blame for strike and lock-out the Tribunal awarded one month's wages for the period for which the illegal lock-out continued.

Held, refusal of opportunity to the management to lead its evidence creates infirmities in the Award. But since the evidence which management wanted to adduce related to the apportionment of blame, the Supreme Court came to the conclusion that the blame should be apportioned half to half.

The award was modified to grant the half month's wages on the basis of following cases:—

Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules 1960, R. 6 — Joint Appeal — Rule not inconsistent with the provisions of Criminal Procedure.

One joint appeal filed by the State against the acquittal of the several accused persons jointly tried was rejected by the Division Bench of the High Court without going into merits. The Full Bench of the said High Court had held in Lalu Jela v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1962 Guj 125 = 1962 (1) Cri LJ 714 (FB) that such a joint appeal was maintainable. As it is possible for the accused to prefer a joint appeal so should it be possible for the State Government to prefer one appeal. Rabari Ghela Jadhav v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 748 = 1960 Cri LJ 1155 distinguished as the case has nothing to do with the question of joint appeal.

There is nothing in Sections 419, 258, 410 and 423 of the Cr. P. C. to bar the joint appeal.

The Full Bench decision of the Gujarat High Court in Lalu Jela case, AIR 1962 Guj 125 = 1962 (1) Cri LJ 714 (FB) was approved.

D/-26-9-1969.

(A) Transfer of Property Act: S. 76 (a) — Mortgagee in possession — Duty to act with ordinary prudence — Granting a building lease for a long duration no exercise of prudence — Does not bind the purchaser on redemption.

(B) Transfer of Property Act — S. 111-C — Determination of a lease where the interest of the lessor determines — Mortgagee-Lessor's interest is determined with the mortgage — Relationship of landlord and tenant comes to an end.

(C) Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act, 1951, S. 10 (b) — Mortgagor's property declared evacuee property—Mortgage can be satisfied by sale of property under the Act.

(D) East Punjab Rent Restriction Act, 1949 — Landlord and Tenant — Definition depends upon a right to receive rent and duty to pay rent — No application where lease is determined by the redemption of mortgage where mortgagee was a lessor.

The mortgagee in possession created a lease of the mortgage property—a cinema house in favour of the Appellant No. 1.
The Rent fixed was Rs. 250 per month and the duration was 5 years, with an option to the lessee to get it renewed for a further period of 10 years, on the same terms. Lessee granted a sub-lease. The mortgage was redeemed by the sale of the property under Sec. 10 (b) of the Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act, 1951, as the property had been declared evacuee property with the mortgagor leaving to Pakistan. The purchaser's suit for possession and mesne profit was decreed; and the High Court confirmed it subject to reduction of mesne profits.

Held, by virtue of Section 111-C Transfer of Property Act, the relationship of landlord and tenant came to end with the determination of mortgage by sale under Section 10 (b) of the Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act 1951.

The principle that the acts done bona fide and prudently by a mortgagee in possession bind his transferee is ordinarily made applicable to agricultural lands and has been seldom extended to urban property. The exception to this proposition is that the lease will continue to bind the mortgagor or persons deriving interest from him if the mortgagor had concurred to grant it. The lease in question of long duration with such a small rent, was not an act of prudence on the part of mortgagee. The purchaser was not bound by it.

Mere right to receive the rent will not make the purchaser the landlord and tenant will not be able to invoke the protection of the East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act, 1949. The relationship of landlord and tenant had come to end with the purchase of the mortgage property and paying of the debt. Cases relied upon—

Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 — S. 14
(1) (e) — Landlord claiming possession for bona fide use and occupation—The reason that the landlord is not used to living in a place where somebody else is living — Whether bona fide — Held, the requirement is not bona fide.

Appellant's family consists of herself, her husband and daughter. They live in a very comodius accommodation of four bed rooms, drawing room, dining room, study, verandas converted into rooms & a garage. The landlord claimed the possession from tenant as she enjoys high social status and does not like to stay in the house in which strangers live.

Held, the claim put forth by landlord was not a claim of a reasonable man. It was not bona fide. It is for the Court to decide whether the claim is bona fide. The High Court had not excluded the jurisdiction under S. 39 (2) of the Act, in rejecting concurrent finding of fact of bona fide requirement. The question whether "bona fide" requirements as alleged by the landlord falls within the meaning of Sec. 14
(1) (c) is a mixed question of law and fact.

State of U. P. v. Ramkishan Burman and others.

1969.

U. P. Court-fee Act, Schedule II, Cl. 17
(iii) — Section 7 (IV-A).

Suit for a declaration of title to property is not a suit for money or property — Falls under Sch. II, CL 17 (iii) and not under S 7 (IV-A)

The Respondent filed a suit against one Radhey Lal for declaration that Radhey Lal had obtained an ex parte decree regarding the ownership of certain properties, by suppressing from the Court that he had admitted Respondent's claim in the properties and had actually entered into compromise with him. The relief sought was a declaration that the respondent and not Radhey Lal was the owner of the said properties. The Civil Judge ordered the Respondent to amend the plaint and to pay the Court-fee of Rs. 3528 instead of Rs 18/12. According to the Civil Judge (and the Inspector of stamps, the suit was one "for money or property" and not for a mere declaration. Held, the suit was one for a declaration and would fall under

Sch. II, CL 17 (iii) of the Act and not under Section 7 (IV-A) and no additional stamp duty was payable.

A decree 'for' money or property means a decree for obtaining a decree ordering payment of money or property. The word 'for' means 'for the recovery' (of money or property) It does not mean concerning or relating to. The word "for" in Section 7 (at various places) is not used to mean 'concerning or relating to'.

A decree in invitum is not an "instrument" securing money or other property. Such a decree is a record of the formal adjudication of the Court relating to a claim in the suit. The suit was not for adjudging void or voidable an "instrument" securing money or property.

them from holding, controlling, managing and regulating cattle fairs at any place in the State of Punjab extends only to cattle fairs strictly so-called, and not to cattle markets. The monopoly declared by the Act does not invest the State with the monopoly to conduct cattle markets, i.e., places where the business of sale or purchase is regularly conducted by private parties and not as a fair. Any attempt made by the Officers of the State claiming to exercise authority under the Act to prohibit cattle markets is without authority of law.

11. The Act also does not invest the State with authority to declare private property of an individual or of a local authority, a fair area. Section 4 (2) enables the Fair Officer to define a fair area, to reserve sites or places for certain facilities, to make temporary allotment for commercial and other purposes and to arrange for watch and ward and for construction of temporary offices. The Cattle Fair Officer is not thereby authorised to hold fairs on lands not belonging to the State. In defining a "fair area" and in making reservation, allotment, construction and arrangements of the nature mentioned in clauses (i) to (v) of sub-sec. (2) of Section 4 the Cattle Fair Officer cannot trespass upon private property. It is implicit in the provisions of the Act that the State will hold cattle fairs on its own lands and not on private lands. The words used in Section 4 are wide and may be capable of the interpretation that the right to hold, control, manage and regulate a cattle fair at any place in the State of Punjab under Section 3 (1) authorises the State to hold, control, manage and regulate fairs in all places including private lands. But it would be reasonable to interpret the Act, so as not to authorise violation of the fundamental rights guaranteed by Articles 19 and 31 of the Constitution. It is implicit in the provisions of Sections 3 and 4 of the Act that the monopoly acquired by the State to hold and manage cattle fairs may be held on property belonging to the State and does not extend to the property of local authorities or private owners.

12. The contention that the provisions of the Act, and especially the definition of "cattle fair" in Section 2 (bb), impose unreasonable restrictions upon the fundamental rights guaranteed under Article 19 (1) (b) and (d) has, in our judgment, no substance. The definition of Cattle Fair in Section 2 (bb) does not infringe the right of citizens under Article 19 (1) (b) to assemble peaceably and without arms, and the right under Article 19 (1) (d) to move freely throughout the territory of India. By the definition clause concurrence of twenty-five persons is not prohibited: the Act does not place restrictions upon the freedom of assembly or of free movement either under clause (b) or clause (d) of Article 19 (1). The Act only prohibits an individual or local authority from arranging a gathering of more than twenty-five persons for the purpose specified in the definition of "cattle fair". The restriction for the purpose of making the monopoly effective must be regarded as reasonable within the meaning of clauses (3) and (5) of Article 19.

13. By imposing restrictions upon the right to hold a fair, the citizens are not deprived of their property, and the freedom guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (f) is not infringed. The primary object of the Act is to give a monopoly to the State to hold cattle fairs. As a necessary concomitant of that monopoly, holding of cattle fairs by local authorities and individuals is prohibited. The prohibition flows directly from the assumption of monopoly by the State and falls within the terms of Article 19 (6) of the Constitution. It is a provision of the law creating monopoly "basically and essentially necessary" for creating the State monopoly to prevent other persons from conducting the same business.

14. Our attention was invited to the decision of this Court in State of Bihar v. Rameshwar Pratap Narain Singh, (1962) 2 SCR 382=(AIR 1961 SC 1649) and to a decision of the Madras High Court in Kandiyl Vapia Pudukudi Ramunni Kurup v. Panchayat Board, Badagara, AIR 1954 Mad 754 in support of the plea that a right to hold a fair is property. But those cases have no bearing on the question arising in these petitions. A law which creates a monopoly to carry on a business in the State and thereby deprives the citizens of the right to carry on that business by virtue of Article 19 (6) is not open to challenge on the ground that it infringes the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (g). The law will not also be exposed to attack on the ground that the right to carry on business is property, for the validity of restrictions on the right to carry on occupation, trade or business or to practise any profession must be adjudged only in the light of Article 19 (6). In any event the presumption of reasonableness of a statute creating a monopoly in the State may come to aid not only in respect of the claim to enforce the right under Article 19 (1) (g) but under Article 19 (1) (f) as well.

15. Section 15 which authorises the State to call upon a Panchayat Samiti or a Municipal Committee, within whose jurisdiction the fair is to be held to deposit in the Cattle Fair Fund the prescribed amount, not exceeding one thousand rupees to cover the initial expenses of the fair and compelling the local authority to abide by the directions, is invalid. It is clearly a provision for deprivation of property. Reasonableness of such a provision was not set up either in the affidavit or in the arguments before us. It is true that under Section 17 (d) out of the Cattle Fair Fund the amount which has been recovered from a local authority may be reimbursed, but the provision authorising the State to call upon a local authority to pay a sum of money towards the Cattle Fair Fund is in our judgment, unreasonable and must be declared invalid. The learned Attorney-General appearing on behalf of the State of Punjab did not seek to support the provision.

16. To sum up, the power which the State Government may exercise to declare a fair area and to make provision for reservation of sites, allotment of sites temporarily for commercial or other purposes, and to arrange for watch and ward and to construct temporary offices may be exercised only on lands belonging to the State. No such power may be exercised in respect of lands owned by local authorities or individuals. The monopoly which is acquired by the State by S. 3 is a monopoly to hold, control, manage and regulate a fair and not a cattle market business. An attempt to prevent persons from conducting the business of cattle markets and from holding, controlling, managing and regulating cattle markets is unauthorised, for by Section 3 only private individuals, local authorities and associations incorporated or not are prohibited from holding cattle fairs and not cattle markets.

17. In the light of these principles we proceed to examine the claims made in the five petitions.

18. The Fair Officers have not made any declaration of fair areas which include the lands of the petitioners in Writ Petitions Nos. 362, 443 and 441 of 1963. In respect of the lands of the petitioners in Writ Petitions Nos. 295 and 365 of 1963 a notification defining a fair area has been made.

19. This petition is filed by the Municipal Committee, Amritsar. By letter D/- August 26, 1963, the Deputy Commissioner, Amritsar, informed the Municipal Committee that a cattle fair was intended to be held as scheduled on the "Cattle Fair Ground (Mal Mandi)" under the management of the District Fair Officer, and the Municipal Committee was required to arrange to supply water and electricity, to make suitable sanitary arrangements, to deposit the income from Baisakhi Cattle Fair in Government Treasury in Cattle Fair Fund and to deliver the record in that behalf to the Fair Officer. The Section Officer, District Amritsar, also served an order, purported to be made under S. 4 (2) (i) read with S. 2 (d) of the Punjab Cattle Fairs (Regulation) Act, 1967, specifying the fair area, for the purpose of controlling, managing, regulating and holding the Cattle Fair from October 16, 1963 to October 27, 1963, at Ram Talui Ki Mandi described as "2 Kilometres from the main building situated in Cattle Fair Ground at Ramtal (Mal Mandi) Amritsar".

20. A Municipal Committee is not, according to the decisions of this Court, a "citizen" within the meaning of Article 19. The Municipal Committee is, therefore, not entitled to claim protection of any of the fundamental rights under Article 19. But the State is incompetent to declare land belonging to the Municipal Committee as falling within the fair area, and to take possession of that land in exercise of the power conferred by the Act, without providing for payment of compensation guaranteed by Article 31 (2). The Municipal Committee is by order of the Fair Officer deprived of its property for the duration of the fair. The Act does not authorise the holding of cattle fairs on the land of local authorities, individuals or associations. A direction to make Municipal property available for holding a cattle fair by the State is a threat to requisition municipal property without authority of law and without payment of compensation, and must be deemed unauthorised. Section 23 of the Act which gives the provisions of the Act a paramount operation, notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law for the time being in force will not supersede a constitutional guarantee.

21. It was argued on behalf of the State that by the order only directions to control, manage and regulate the fair held on behalf of the Municipal Committee were intended to be given. But that is not the effect of the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner. The Deputy Commissioner informed the Municipal Committee that possession of its land should be handed over so that the State may be able to hold the fair under the provisions of the Punjab Cattle Fairs (Regulation) Act, 1967. Section 3 (1) is intended only to provide for a monopoly in the State to hold cattle fairs and to control, manage and regulate such fairs. The demand made by the Fair Officer asking the Municipal Committee to supply water, electricity and to make sanitary arrangements and make the staff, articles and offices of the Municipal Committee available to the Fair Officer is not warranted by any provision of the Act. The notification issued by the Fair Officer defining the fair area inclusive of the land of Mal Mandi is, therefore, unauthorised. The demand made by the Fair Officer for assistance of the "staff, articles and offices of the Municipality" for holding the fair and the demand for supply of water and electricity and making suitable sanitary arrangements is also uncalled for and unauthorised. The directions must, therefore, be declared invalid.

22. The petitioner is Sardara Singh. He claims that he is in lawful possession of a piece of land situated in village Hussainpur, Tahsil and Dist. Rupar (Punjab) and that for the last ten years he holds a cattle market on that piece of land from the first to the fourth of every month. He also asserted that he had been holding cattle markets on the lands in his lawful possession at Kurali, Anandpur, Saheb, Marunda (District Rupar) within the State of Punjab. According to the petitioner, for the purpose of holding cattle markets on the lands in his occupation at Hussainpur, the petitioner had constructed a well for providing water to the cattle, with sheds, and mangers. He further claimed that he provides chaff-cutters, tents, charpais and all other amenities which are essential for the cattle and the merchants. It appears from the averments made by the petitioner that he is holding cattle fairs. No declaration was made defining any fair area which included the lands of the petitioner. The State, for reasons already set out, is not entitled to hold a cattle fair on the land in the occupation of the petitioner without providing for compensation as guaranteed under Art. 31 (2). But on that account the petitioner is not entitled to hold a cattle fair even on his own lands.

23. The petitioner is Jagtar Singh. He claims that he has obtained for the period April 1, 1968 to March 31, 1969, from the Municipal Committee, Amritsar, a piece of land on lease called the Ahata near the "Butcher-Khana" known as "Adda Bakar Mandi." The land is used for an enclosure for sheep and goats brought for sale. The petitioner states that he has constructed near the Butcher-Khana ten kothas around a vacant piece of land for enclosure of goats and sheep brought by prospective sellers and has also constructed some rooms where he provides board and lodging to the merchants who come to the Adda Bakar Mandi in connection with their business. He has set out in his petition the manner in which the business is carried on and the charges made by him. It may be sufficient to mention that the petitioner claims that he conducts a cattle market and not a cattle fair.

24. The Fair Officer issued a declaration under Section 4 (2) (i) read with Section 2 (d) of the Punjab Cattle Fairs (Regulation) Act, 1967, specifying "2 Kilometres from the main building situated in the Cattle Fair Ground at Bakar Mandi outside Lahori Gate" as a fair area for the purpose of controlling, managing, regulating and holding the Cattle Fair, Amritsar, at Bakar Mandi outside Lahori Gate. The Fair Officer also addressed a letter to the petitioner dated October 25, 1968, informing him that the Punjab Government had exclusively undertaken the work of holding, managing, controlling and supervising the Cattle Fairs under Section 3 of the Punjab Cattle Fairs (Regulation) Act, 1967, and that the petitioner who was carrying on the business of holding a cattle fair should stop running the Bakar Mandi. The Fair Officer informed the petitioner that the ground of the Bakar Mandi had already been specified as fair area by him and on that account the petitioner was prohibited to work as commission agent, unless he got a broker's licence under the Act.

25. The land in respect of which the declaration has been made as fair area is the land of the Municipal Committee, of which under a licence or a lease the petitioner is in possession. For reasons which we have already set out, the Government of Punjab is not competent to declare the land of the Bakar Mandi a fair area. The notification declaring the Bakar Mandi as fair area is, therefore, invalid.

26. By Section 3 of the Act the cattle fairs can be held in the State of Punjab only by the State and by no other person. But prima facie the business carried on by the petitioner is in the nature of a market for sale of sheep and goats brought by intending sellers for slaughter. Such a place cannot be called a fair

27. It was urged on behalf of the State that since the petitioner was collecting brokerage and carrying on the business of a broker, he was bound to take out a licence under Section 9 of the Act. But a person carrying on his business within the fair area lawfully declared is required to obtain a licence, but not in respect of his business in a cattle market.

28. The petition filed by Jagtar Singh must, therefore, be allowed and the order declaring the petitioner's land as fair area and the intimation calling upon him to stop his business of cattle market is unauthorised.

Writ Petitions Nos 443 & 444 of 1968

29. The petitioners in these petitions are Narain Singh and another. They claim that they are in "legal possession" of different pieces of land taken on lease within the State of Punjab at Khanna, Doraha (District Ludhiana), Sunam (District Sangrur) and also in other Districts where they have been holding cattle markets for the last many years. They claimed that they provide the prospective sellers and purchasers facilities like cots for resting, drinking water, sheds, mangers, chaff-cutters, tents, light, chowkidars, dry fodder and all other essential amenities. They further claimed that the intending vendors come to their lands with cattle and sell the cattle, bargains being struck through brokers in the market arranged by the petitioners on those pieces of land.

30. It is not clear from the averments made in the petitions whether the so-called market is of the nature of a fair. The petitioners are prohibited from holding or conducting a cattle fair, since the enactment of Punjab Act 6 of 1968. The lands belonging to the petitioners have not been included in a cattle fair area under the notification issued by the Fair Officer. Without deciding the question whether the business carried on by the petitioners is in the nature of a fair or a market, we declare that the petitioners are not entitled to carry on the business of a cattle fair and the relief claimed by them in Paragraph 21 (b) cannot be granted. We deem it necessary to add that the petitioners are not prohibited from carrying on the business of cattle market on their own lands.

31. There will be no order as to costs in these petitions.

SSG/D.V.C.

Order accordingly.

Advocate (M/s. R. N. Sachthey and B. D.
Sharma, Advocates with him), for Appellants; M/s. Frank Anthony and Har-bans Singh, Advocates, for Respondents.

The following Judgment of the Court
was delivered by

BACHAWAT, J.: The respondent was recruited as a constable in the police service in the undivided Punjab on April 3, 1934. By April 1946 he was promoted to the rank of Assistant Sub-Inspector. In 1950, he was posted at Delhi. On August 26, 1955 he was confirmed in this rank
by the Senior Superintendent of Police, Delhi.

2. In the beginning of 1957 an accusation was made against him that while investigating a case registered by him against one Mohammad Jamil under First Information Report No. 1322 dated November 25, 1956 he had taken one Rame Shah to the Lahori Gate police post without formally arresting him and received from him by way of illegal gratification Rs. 100/- which was paid on his behalf by one Roshan Lal. On coming to know of this complaint Sri A. C. Chatur-vedi, Superintendent of Police (City), Delhi, made some kind of summary inquiry into the matter and on 28-2-1957 passed the following order:—

"Reference. complaint received from
S. P.'s Office Vide No. 1212/GB, dated the 12th of January 1957.

Integrity of S. I. Chanan Shah No. 112/
D was found to be doubtful in connection with case F.I.R. 1322 dated 25-11-1956 under Section 20.11.78 of P. B. Kotwali against one Mohd. Jamil a Pakistani National. He is hereby censured."
On a review of this order under rule 16.28 of the Punjab Police Rules, 1934, Sri N. S.
Saxena, the Deputy Inspector General of Police passed the following order on June 12, 1957:—

"I have gone through the inquiries made by the city police as well as by the Crime Branch and feel that the S. I. should have been dealt with departmentally for his misconduct and by which course the S. I. could have a chance to prove his innocence. I therefore order under P. S.
16-28 that the censure awarded to officiating Chanan Shah be cancelled and he should be dealt with departmentally.

The departmental file will be prepared by Sri B. L. Gulati, I. P. S., Superintendent of Police (Traffic). The relevant papers may be sent to him."

The conduct of the departmental inquiry was entrusted to Sri D. C. Sharma, Superintendent of Police, Central District, Delhi. On August 20, 1957 Sri Sharma wrote the following D. O. letter No. 2165-C to Sri C. B. Dube, District Magistrate,
Delhi:—

"1: On 25-11-56, S.I. Chanan Shah No.
112/D while posted as I/c P. P. Lahori Gate recovered a revolver with 6 rounds from the possession of one Mohd. Jamil alias Mohan Lal of Lahore while the latter was staying at Regal Hotel. A case FIR No. 1322 dated 25-11-56 u/s.
20.11.78 Arms Act was accordingly registered at P. S. Kotwali. The investigation of this case was carried out by S. I.
Chanan Shah.

2. During the course of investigation, the S. I. raided the house of one Rame Shah owner of shop No. 1387 Lajpat Rai Market. Although nothing incriminating was found, yet he took Rame Shah to the P. P. where it is alleged, he (Rame Shah) was threatened with arrest and later on let off at midnight after he had paid a sum of Rs. 100 through one Roshan Lal by way of illegal gratification.

3. In the course of inquiry it is felt that there is no sufficient evidence to prosecute the S. I. in a court of law under the Prevention of Corruption Act, though he can be successfully dealt with departmentally.

4. In view of the above it is proposed that he may be dealt with departmentally instead of filing judicial proceedings against him. Necessary approval under P. P. Rule 16.38 may kindly be accorded."

A copy of the letter was produced in this Court. On August 21, 1957 Sri C. B.
Dube, District Magistrate, Delhi, sent the following letter to Sri D. C. Sharma:—

"Please refer to your D. O. letter No.
2165-C dated the 20th August, 1967.

Sanction is hereby accorded to the taking of departmental action against S. I.
Chanan Shah as required under Punjab
Police Rule 16.38."

3. On November 15, 1957 Sri Sharma drew up a formal charge-sheet. On the basis of the charge-sheet he held an inquiry and found that the allegations against the respondent were substantially true. On March 18, 1958 Sri Sharma served a notice on the respondent to show cause why he should not be dismissed. After considering his reply and hearing him personally Sri Sharma passed an order on April 12, 1958 dismissing him from service. An appeal filed by him against the order was rejected by the Deputy Inspector General on February 14, 1959, and a revision petition filed by him was rejected by the Inspector General on June 5, 1959.

4. On August 18, 1959 the respondent filed a writ petition in the Punjab High Court for quashing the dismissal order. One of the grounds taken by him was that the departmental inquiry was made in contravention of Chapter 16 rule 38 of the Punjab Police Rules, 1934. Gosain, J. dismissed the petition. The respondent filed a Letters Patent Appeal against this order. A Divisional Bench of the High Court allowed the appeal and set aside the order dismissing the respondent from service. The Divisional Bench held that the dismissal order could not be sustained in view of the fact that the inquiry was made in contravention of Chapter XVI, Rule 38. The present appeal has been filed by the Delhi Administration after obtaining special leave.

5. Chapter XVI of the Punjab Police Rules deals with punishments. Rule 1 prescribes the punishments and provides that "no police officer shall be departmentally punished otherwise than as provided in these rules." Rule 23 provides for prompt record of complaints against a police officer made by a member of the general public and the transmission of the record to the Superintendent of Police or other gazetted officer under whose immediate control the officer who has recorded the complaint is serving. If such officer is of opinion that the allegations in the record constitute a prima facie case for inquiry, a departmental inquiry as in Rule 24 must be held. Rule 38 specially deals with certain types of complaints against a police officer. Sub-rules (1) and (2) of Rule 38 are as follows—

"(1) Immediate information shall be given to the District Magistrate of any complaint received by the Superintendent of Police, which indicates the commission by a police officer of a criminal offence in connection with his official relations with the public. The District Magistrate will decide whether the investigation of the complaint shall be conducted by a police officer, or made over to a selected Magistrate having 1st class powers.

(2) When investigation of such a complaint establishes a prima facie case, a judicial prosecution shall normally follow, the matter shall be disposed of departmentally only if the District Magistrate so orders for reasons to be recorded. When it is decided to proceed departmentally the procedure prescribed in rule 16.24 shall be followed. An officer found guilty on a charge of the nature referred to in this rule shall ordinarily be dismissed."

6. The provisions of sub-rules (1) and (2) of Rule 38 are attracted in cases of complaint received by the Superintendent of Police, indicating the commission by a police officer of a criminal offence in connection with his official relations with the public. In such a case, the Superintendent of Police is required to bring the complaint to the notice of the District Magistrate who is to decide whether the investigation of the complaint should be made by a selected Magistrate having first class powers or should be left to a police officer. If the investigation discloses a prima facie case, a judicial prosecution should normally follow unless for reasons to be recorded in writing the District Magistrate directs that the matter should be disposed of departmentally.

7. In the present case, the complaint received by the Superintendent of Police (City) Delhi indicated the commission by the appellant of a criminal offence in connection with his official relations with the public. The complaint fell within R. 38(1) and should have been dealt with accordingly. Nevertheless there was no investigation of the kind prescribed by rule 38(1). The District Magistrate did not direct any preliminary investigation nor was any prima facie case against the appellant as a result of such an investigation established.

8. In State of Uttar Pradesh v. Baba Ram Upadhyaya (1961) 2 SCR 679 at pp 711, 727-728 = (AIR 1961 SC 751 at pp. 763, 772) the Court by majority held that the provisions of paragraph 486 rule 1 of the U. P. Police Regulations were mandatory and that a departmental action against the police officer in disregard thereof was invalid. The minority held that the paragraph was directory and as there was substantial compliance with its provisions the departmental proceedings were not invalid. In Jagan Nath v. Sr. Supdt. of Police, Ferozepur AIR 1962 Punj 38 the Punjab High Court held that the provisions of rule 16.33 (1) and (2) were mandatory and that a departmental inquiry held without following its provisions was illegal.

9. It is not necessary to decide in this case whether the provisions of Rule 16.38 of the Punjab Police Rules are mandatory or directory. Even assuming that the rule is directory we find that there has been no substantial compliance with its provisions. The complaint fell within rule 16.38, and it was for the District Magistrate to decide who should investigate the case. No investigation of any kind was made under his directions. Without obtaining his directions, the Superintendent of Police held an inquiry and passed an order of censure. The order was set aside by the Deputy Inspector-General. Thereafter by D. O. letter No. 2165-C, the Superintendent of Police asked for the sanction of the District Magistrate to proceed departmentally. Even at this stage, the District Magistrate was not informed that the Superintendent of Police held an inquiry and passed an order of censure and that, his order was set aside by the Deputy Inspector-General. The inquiry held by the Superintendent of Police was not authorised by the District Magistrate nor did it receive his approval. The District Magistrate gave his sanction without recording any reasons and without applying his mind to the requirement of Rule 16.38. In the circumstances, we are constrained to hold that the departmental action taken against the respondent is invalid.

10. In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

CWM/D.V.C. Appeal dismissed.

The failure of a person prior to filing the nomination paper to make or subscribe oath or affirmation before the authorised officer as required under S. 51 (a) disqualifies him to be chosen to fill the seat in the Legislature under S. 51 (a). The nomination paper of such person is liable to be rejected under S. 47 (2) (a) of the J. & K. Representation of the People Act and the mere fact that signed oath forms are filed along with the nomination paper makes no difference. AIR 1969 J. & K. 16, Affirmed; AIR 1968 SC 1064, Rel. on. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

BACHAWAT, J.: This appeal is directed against a judgment of a Single Judge of the High Court of Jammu and Kashmir dismissing an election petition for setting aside the election of the respondent Jagat Ram Aryan to the legislative assembly of the State of Jammu & Kashmir from the Bhaderwah scheduled caste assembly constituency.

2. The last date for filing the nomination papers was January 20, 1967. The date of scrutiny of nomination papers was January 23, 1967. The date of poll was February 21, 1967. The date of counting and declaration of result was March 1, 1967. Several candidates filed their nomination papers from this constituency. The candidates were: (1) Jagat Ram Aryan, (2) Faquir Chand, (3) Narain Dass, (4) Nikka Ram, (5) Bhagat Ram, (6) Om Prakash and (7) Swami Raj. The first five filed their nomination papers on January 23, 1967 before the Assistant Returning Officer, Kahan Singh, a Tehsildar of Bhaderwah. On scrutiny of the nomination papers, the Returning Officer Abdul Gani accepted as valid the nomination papers of Jagat Ram and Faquir Chand and rejected the nomination papers of the remaining candidates for various reasons. At the poll the contest was between Jagat Ram, the Congress candidate and Faquir Chand, the National Conference candidate. Respondent Jagat Ram having secured larger number of votes was declared elected.

3. The appellant, a voter in the constituency, filed the election petition for setting aside the respondent's election on the ground that the nomination papers of Narain Dass, Nikka Ram and Bhagat Ram were improperly rejected. The High Court found that the nomination paper of Bhagat Ram was properly rejected and this finding is no longer challenged.

4. The nomination paper of Nikka Ram was rejected on three grounds (1) he did not make and subscribe the oath or affirmation as required by Section 51 (a) of the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution, (2) he was not a member of a scheduled caste and (3) his father's name was not correctly shown in the electoral rolls. The nomination paper of Narain Dass was rejected on two grounds (1) he did not make and subscribe the oath or affirmation as required by Section 51 (a) and (2) he was not a member of a scheduled caste. The High Court found that both Narain Dass and Nikka Ram were members of the scheduled caste "Megh". It also held that the error in the electoral roll with regard to the name of Nikka Ram's father was not a ground for rejecting his nomination paper having regard to Section 44 (4) of the J & K Representation of the People Act, 1957. The High Court also rejected the additional contention that Narain Dass had not made a deposit of Rs. 125/- in conformity with Section 45 (2) of the Act. All these findings are no longer challenged.

5. The only point now in issue is whether Narain Dass and Nikka Ram made and subscribed the oath or affirmation as required by Section 51 (a) of the J. & K. Constitution. Section 51 (a) provides,

"A person shall not be qualified to be chosen to fill a seat in the legislature unless he—

(a) is a permanent resident of the State, and makes and subscribes before some person authorised in that behalf by the Election Commission of India an oath or affirmation according to the form set out for the purpose in the fifth Schedule"

6. The Returning Officer and the Assistant Returning Officer were authorised in this behalf by the Election Commission of India by notification No. 3/4 J & K/65 as the persons before whom the oath or affirmation could be made and subscribed. The prescribed form of oath or affirmation to be made by a candidate of the State legislature is—

"I, A. B., having been nominated as a candidate to fill a seat in the Legislative Assembly, (or Legislative Council) do swear in the name of God/solemnly affirm that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution of the State as by law established and that I will uphold the sovereignty and integrity of India."

7. Section 44 of the J. & K. Representation of the People Act, 1957 provides for presentation of nomination papers and prescribes certain requirements for a valid nomination. Section 45 provides for deposits. Section 46 deals with notice of nominations and the time and place for their scrutiny. Section 47 (2) (a) reads—

"The returning officer shall then examine the nomination papers and shall decide all objections which may be made to any nomination, and may, either on such objection or on his own motion, after such summary enquiry, if any, as he thinks necessary, reject any nomination on any of the following grounds—

(a) that on the date fixed for the scrutiny of nominations the candidate either is not qualified or is disqualified for being chosen to fill the seat under any of the provisions of Sections 51 and 69 of the Constitution and Part VI of this Act, .."

8. Form 2A of the J. & K. Representation of the People (Conduct of Election and Election Petition) Rules, 1957 prescribes the form of nomination paper for election to the legislative assembly.

9. It is common case that along with their nomination papers both Narain Dass and Nikka Ram filed oath forms signed by them. The appellant's case is that at the time of the presentation of their nomination papers both Narain Dass and Nikka Ram made oaths and signed the oath forms in the presence of the Assistant Returning Officer. In support of this case, the appellant examined Narain Dass, Nikka Ram, Abdul Qayum and Abdul Rehman. The respondent's case is that Narain Dass and Nikka Ram did not make or subscribe any oath or affirmation before the Assistant Returning Officer, that the oath forms had been filled up and signed before they were presented to him and were not signed in his presence. In support of his case the respondent examined Kahan Singh, the Assistant Returning Officer, and Abdul Gani, the Returning Officer. The High Court accepted the respondent's case.

10. It should be remembered that the requirement of making and subscribing an oath or affirmation was inserted in Section 51 (a) of the J & K. Constitution by the Constitution Sixth Amendment Act

1965. There is ground for believing that Narain Dass and Nikka Ram were not aware of this provision and for this reason they omitted to make or subscribe any oath or affirmation before the Assistant Returning Officer.

11. Our attention was drawn to Instruction No. 7 (7) in Chapter II at p. 19 of the Handbook for Returning Officers, issued by the Election Commission, India, for General Elections, 1967. The aforesaid instruction was as follows:—

“The oath or affirmation has first to be made and then signed by the candidate before the authorised officer. It should be borne in mind that mere signing on the paper on which the form of oath is written out is not sufficient. The candidate must make the oath before the authorised officer. Accordingly he will ask the candidate to read aloud the oath or affirmation in English or the regional language and then to sign and date the paper on which the oath or affirmation is written. In the case of illiterate persons who want to contest elections, and who cannot properly make and subscribe the oath or affirmation the authorised officer, should read out the prescribed oath and ask the candidate to repeat the same and thereafter take his thumb impression on the form on which the oath is printed or cyclostyled in token of his having subscribed the oath. The authorised officer should endorse on this paper that the oath or affirmation has been made and subscribed before the candidate (sic) on that day. He will immediately furnish to the candidate a certified copy thereof keeping a copy for year (sic) record. The candidate will produce this copy as evidence before you at the time of scrutiny of nomination papers. This copy will be given to the candidate forthwith without his applying for it, nor any fee be charged for it.”

Kahan Singh the Assistant Returning Officer was not conversant with these instructions. He did not ask either Narain Dass or Nikka Ram to read the oath or to sign the oath form in his presence. But the breach of these instructions does not entitle them to say that they had made and subscribed the oath before the Assistant Returning Officer when in fact they did not make or subscribe the oath before him.

12. It is admitted by the appellant that the oath forms filed by Narain Dass and Nikka Ram did not bear any endorsement of the Assistant Returning Officer stating that the oath or affirmation had been made and subscribed before him nor was any certificate of such endorsement furnished to them. The absence of the endorsement on the oath forms tend to suggest that no oath or affirmation was made and subscribed by them before the Assistant Returning Officer. Neither Narain Dass nor Nikka Ram could produce before the Returning Officer, Abdul Gani any evidence of their making and subscribing the oath or affirmation. Abdul Gani gave them an opportunity to produce affidavits in proof of this fact but they did not file any affidavit or any other evidence before him. The appellant examined witnesses to prove that attempts were made to file such affidavits, but the High Court rightly rejected the testimony of these witnesses. The materials on the record corroborate the testimony of Kahan Singh, the Assistant Returning Officer that Narain Dass and Nikka Ram did not sign the oath forms in his presence and did not make the oath or affirmation before him. Narain Dass and Nikka Ram were Jan Sangh candidates. Abdul Qayum and Abdul Rehman were their party men. All of them were interested witnesses. Having regard to all the materials on the record it is impossible to prefer their testimony to that of Kahan Singh. In agreement with the High Court we hold that neither Narain Dass and Nikka Ram signed the oath forms before the Assistant Returning Officer nor did they make the oath or affirmation before him.

13. On January 23, 1967 both Narain Dass and Nikka Ram filed with the Assistant Returning Officer signed and filled up oath forms along with their nomination papers. In our opinion, this was not sufficient compliance with the requirement of Section 51 (a).

14. In Pashupati Nath v. Harihar Prasad, AIR 1968 SC 1064 this Court held that the nomination paper was liable to be rejected under Section 36 (2) (a) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 corresponding to Section 47 (2) (a) of the J. & K. Representation of the People Act, 1957 if the qualification required by Article 173 (a) of the Constitution corresponding to Section 51 (a) of the J. & K. Constitution did not exist on the date of scrutiny of nominations. In that case no signed oath form was attached to the nomination paper or filed before the date fixed for scrutiny. In the present case signed oath forms along with nomination papers were filed with the Assistant Returning Officer on January 23, 1967 before the date fixed for scrutiny. But this fact makes no difference. They neither made nor subscribed the oath or affirmation before the Assistant Returning Officer as required by Section 51 (a). On the date fixed for the scrutiny of nominations they were not qualified to be chosen to fill the seat in the legislature under Sec 51 (a) of the J & K Constitution and their nomination papers were liable to be rejected under Section 47 (2) (a) of the J & K Representation of the People Act, 1957.

15. In the result, the appeal is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs BNP/D V C. Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeal No. 666 of 1966, D/- 19-2-1969

(A) Tenancy Laws — U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, 1950 (1 of 1951), Secs. 157 and 21 (as amended by U. P. Land Reforms (Amendment) Act (20 of 1954), Ss 5 and 27) — S 157 as amended has retrospective operation — (Civil P. C. (1908), Pre. — Interpretation of Statutes — Retrospective operation).

Section 157 (1) (a) as amended by U. P. Land Reforms (Amendment) Act 20 of 1954 has retrospective application.

A law is undoubtedly retrospective if the law says so expressly but it is not always necessary to say so expressly to make the law retrospective. There are occasions when a law may be held to be retrospective in operation. Retrospection is not to be presumed for the presumption is the other way but many statutes have been regarded as retrospective without a declaration. Thus it is that remedial statutes are always regarded as prospective but declaratory statutes are considered retrospective. Similarly sometimes statutes have a retrospective effect when the declared intention is clearly and unequivocally manifest from the language employed in the particular law or in the context of connected provisions. It is always a question whether the legislature has sufficiently expressed itself. To find this one must look at the general scope and purview of the Act and the remedy the legislature intends to apply in the former state of the law and then determine what the legislature intended to do. This line of investigation is, of course, only open if it is necessary. In other words it can be said that there might be something in the context of an Act or be collected from its language, which might give to words prima facie prospective a larger operation. More retrospectivity is not to be given than what can be gathered from expressed or clearly implied intention of the legislature. (1890) 15 AC 384, Foll. (Para 13)

It is clear that Section 21 (h) mentioned only one of the clauses viz, clause (e) as furnishing a ground for declaration. After the amendment of clause (h) one or more of the clauses of Section 157 (1) are to be taken into account. Now there would be no point in making the amendment of Section 21 (h) retrospective if the other clauses were to apply prospectively for then the force of the retrospectivity of clause (h) of Section 21 is made neutral. Therefore, if the new Section 21 (h) is to be read retrospectively from the commencement of Land Reforms Act, the amendment of Section 157 (1) which was made simultaneously must also be clearly intended to operate with retrospectivity. The legislature intended that at any given moment of time from the commencement of the Land Reforms Act all the clauses or one or more of them and not clause (e) alone were to be taken note of. (Para 14)

(B) Tenancy Laws — U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act (1950), (1 of 1951), S. 240-II — Compensation officer himself Assistant Collector — Compensation officer not referring to himself case after framing issue — Order should be held to have been passed in the capacity of Compensation Officer and not in the capacity of Assistant Collector. IM/IM/B119/69/D

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.: The parties in this appeal are the same as in Civil Appeal No. 286 of 1966 which we declared to have become infructuous because of the operation of Section 5 of the Uttar Pradesh Consolidation Act. The judgment in that appeal was delivered by us on February 7, 1969. For the narration of facts in this appeal we have, however, referred to certain orders which were passed by the High Court from the sister appeal. The parties to this appeal as in the other appeal are Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh of the one part and Smt. Harbheji of the second part. These two parties have been fighting a long drawn litigation over khata No. 271 of village Shahgarh. Two separate proceedings took place before the Revenue Courts and reached this Court by way of special leave, one of which has been disposed of and the other is now before us. The points involved in this appeal are short but in view of the length of litigation a long narration is necessary.

2. On March 10, 1954 Smt. Harbheji as bhumidar filed a suit (No. 38 of 1954) under Section 202 of the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, 1955 against the other party in the Court of the Assistant Collector, 1st Class, Aligarh. The allegation in the suit was that Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh were Asamis who were leased the khata in 1947 from year to year. Smt. Harbheji asked for their ejectment from the khata. The defence of the other side was that the occupants were Adhivasis. The Land Reforms Act was passed in 1951. Under the Act the intermediaries were abolished and their rights and title vested in the State from July 1, 1952. The Act was later amended from time to time and we are concerned with one such amendment made by the U. P. Land Reforms Act XX of 1954 which came into force on October 10, 1954.

3. Reverting to the facts, the suit No. 38 of 1954 was dismissed by the Assistant Collector, 1st Class, Aligarh on April 20, 1956 and it was held that Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh were not Asamis and therefore not liable to ejectment. On appeal the Civil Judge of Aligarh allowed it on February 1, 1957 and declared Sukhram and Laiq Singh to be Asamis. A second appeal in the High Court before a Single Judge succeeded on February 19, 1958. Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh were again declared to be Adhivasis.

A Letters Patent Appeal was filed in the High Court. Meanwhile the Consolidation of Holdings Act was brought into force in this area and a notification under Section 4 of the Consolidation of Holdings Act declaring village Shahgarh area to be under consolidation was published on November 11, 1961. The appeal in the High Court was decided on February 8, 1962. It appears that the arguments were already heard and the case was reserved for judgment when the notification came into force. The learned Judges did not apply Section 5 of the Consolidation of Holdings Act which provides that on notification issuing any suit, proceeding or appeal must be taken to have abated. The Division Bench gave its decision reversing the judgment of the Single Judge. As a result Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh were again declared to be Asamis. An appeal was then brought to this Court by special leave and it is that appeal which we declared had become infructuous by reason of the abatement of the suit. This was the end of the proceedings under Section 202 of the Land Reforms Act.

4. Meanwhile Smt. Harbheji as bhumidar was entitled to compensation for the extinguishment of her rights. The Compensation Officer prepared a preliminary statement under Section 240-F and showed Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh as Adhivasis. Smt. Harbheji filed an objection under Section 240-G but on the date of hearing (October 25, 1956) she did not appear before the Compensation Officer who dismissed her objection holding that Laiq Singh and Sukhram Singh had Adhivasi rights and the objector had no interest in the land. The statement of compensation was also confirmed on the same date. In the consolidation proceedings Smt. Harbheji applied for correction of the records under Section 10 (1) of the Consolidation of Holdings Act. This matter was decided by the Consolidation Officer III Khera Narainsingh on March 7, 1963. The objection filed by Smt. Harbheji was dismissed. On appeal the Settlement Officer (Consolidation) reversed the above decision on June 14, 1963 holding that Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh were Asamis. The Deputy Director of Consolidation, exercising the powers of the Director of Consolidation Uttar Pradesh dismissed the revision petition on September 20, 1963 filed by Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh. The present appeal is from the last decision by special leave.

5. Two points were argued before us, namely, that Smt. Harbheji was not enti-

tioned to the benefit of Section 21 as amended by Act XX of 1954 and secondly that the order of the Compensation Officer made on October 25, 1956 had finally decided the status of Sukhram Singh and Laq Singh as Adhivasis and not having been appealed against, the question cannot now be reopened. We shall take these points one by one

6. The U P Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act was amended in 1954 by the above amending Act in several respects. We are only concerned with the amendment of Sections 21 and 157 and the addition of Chapter IX-A. Section 21 leaving out portions not necessary for our purposes provides after the amendment as follows—

"Section 21. Non-occupancy tenants, sub-tenants of grove-lands and tenant's mortgagees to be asamis.

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, every person who, on the date immediately preceding the date of vesting, occupied or held land as—

(h) A tenant of sir land referred to in sub-clause (a) of clause (i) of the Explanation under Section 16, a sub-tenant referred to in sub-clause (ii) of clause (a) of Section 20 or an occupant referred to in sub-clause (i) of clause (b) of the said section where the land-holder or if there are more than one land-holder, all of them were person or persons belonging—

(b) if the land was let out or occupied on or after the ninth day of April, 1948, on the date of letting or occupation, to any one or more of the classes mentioned in sub-section (1) of Section 157 shall be deemed to be an asami thereof." Before the amendment the corresponding part of the section read as follows—

"Section 21 (1) — Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, every person, who, on the date immediately preceding the date of vesting, occupied or held land as—

(h) a tenant of sir or land referred to in sub-clause (a) of clause (i) of the explanation under Section 16, a sub-tenant or an occupant referred to in Section 20, where the land-holder or if there are more than one land-holder all of them were person or persons belonging, both on the date of letting and on the date immediately preceding the date of vesting, to any one or more of the classes mentioned in sub-section (2) of Section 10 or clause (e) of sub-section (1) of Section 157 shall be deemed to be an asami thereof.

7. The difference between the two sections material for our purposes lies in the mention of all clauses of Section 157, sub-section (1) after the amendment whereas before the amendment only cl (e) of sub-section (1) of Section 157 was mentioned. Section 157 also was amended. Again for the purposes of this case it is not necessary to reproduce the whole of the section. It read before the amendment as follows—

"Section 157 (1) — A bhumidar or a sirdar or an asami holding the land in lieu of maintenance allowance under Section 11, who is—

(a) an unmarried woman, or if married, divorced or separated from her husband, or a widow,

(b) a minor whose father has died,

(c) a lunatic or an idiot,

(d) a person incapable of cultivating by reason of blindness or other physical infirmity,

(e) prosecuting studies in a recognised institution and does not exceed 25 years in age,

(f) in the Military, Naval or Air Service of the Indian Dominion, or

(g) under detention or imprisonment" may let the whole or any part of his holding."

8 After the amendment it reads as follows—

"Section 157 — Lease by a disabled person. — (1) A bhumidar or a sirdar or an asami holding the land in lieu of maintenance allowance under Section 11 who is—

(a) an unmarried woman, or if married, divorced or separated from her husband or whose husband suffers, from any of the disqualifications mentioned in clause (e) or (d) or a widow,

(b) a minor whose father suffers from any of the disqualifications mentioned in clause (c) or (d) or has died, and

(c) a lunatic or an idiot,

(d) a person incapable of cultivating by reason of blindness, or other physical infirmity;

(e) prosecuting studies in a recognised institution and does not exceed 25 years in age and whose father suffers from any of the disqualifications mentioned in cl. (e) or (d) or has died;

(f) in the Military, Naval, or Air Service of the Indian Dominion; or

(g) under detention or imprisonment;

may let the whole or any part of his holding."

9. The difference here is that a lease by a woman although married was possible if her husband was suffering from insanity or idiocy or was a person incapable of cultivating by reason of blindness or other physical infirmity. Smt. Harbheji in her applications wished to take advantage of the amendments of Sections 21 and 157 on the ground that her husband was suffering from sinus and hence from physical infirmity and was incapable of cultivating the land. The difficulty arises because the Legislature while making the amendment made the amendment in cl. (h) of Section 21 retrospective from the date of the passing of the Abolition Act but in Section 157 it did not expressly state that the amendments were retrospective. The short question that arises is whether Section 157 when read with Section 27 (21?) also becomes retrospective notwithstanding that there are no express words of retrospectivity.

10. The second point is concerned with the addition of Chapter IX-A which is headed 'Conferment of Sirdari Rights on Adhivasis'. The grounds on which the ejectment of an Adhivasi could be made were contained in Section 234 of the Land Reforms Act but none of the grounds applies here. Thus if Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh were Adhivasis they could not be ejected by Smt. Harbheji but if they were only asamis then the ejectment could take place because they were only tenants from year to year. Chapter IX-A added Sections 240-A to 240-N. It provides that the Government may by a notification declare that the rights, title and interest of the land-holders in the land held by Adhivasis shall cease and vest in the State and also provides for payment of compensation to the landlord whose rights, title or interest in the land are acquired. The compensation statement is required to be published under Section 240-F and Section 240-G gives a right to any person interested to file objections. Section 240-H deals with the procedure for disposal of the objections under Section 240-G. It provides that the Compensation Officer shall frame an issue regarding it and refer it for disposal to the Court which has jurisdiction to decide a suit under Section 229-B read with Section 234-A and that thereupon all the provisions relating to the hearing and disposal of such suit shall apply to his reference as if it were a suit. Section 229-B provides that any person claiming to be an Asami of the whole or a part of it may sue the landlord for a declaration of his rights as Asami. Sub-section (3) of the same section provided that the provisions are to apply mutatis mutandis to a suit by a person claiming to be sirdar (Adhivasi). Section 234-A then provides that the provisions of Section 229-B mentioned above shall apply to an Adhivasi as if he were an Asami. Schedule II to the Land Reforms Act in Item 34 appoints the Assistant Collector, 1st Class, as competent Court for the trial of suits for declaration of rights under Section 229-B. The Schedule also provides for an appeal to the Commissioner from the order and to the Board of Revenue by a second appeal.

11. In the present case the Compensation Officer who passed the order on October 25, 1956 was also Assistant Collector, 1st Class, but he did not refer the case to himself after framing an issue and hence his order has been treated to have been passed by him in his capacity as a Compensation Officer.

12. We will now come to the question whether Section 157 also operates retrospectively with Section 21. The latter was made retrospective expressly. The High Court in the Division Bench decision held that Section 157 was also retrospective by implication. The contention of the appellants is that Smt. Harbheji was not entitled to take the benefit of the amendment and to plead that she could let out her sir land because her husband was suffering from an infirmity and was not able to look after the cultivation. If Smt. Harbheji is entitled to plead the amended section then under Section 21 Sukhram Singh and Laiq Singh must be treated as Asamis because that is what Section 21 enacts. If the unamended section is to be read with Section 21 then the contrary result is reached.

13. Now a law is undoubtedly retrospective if the law says so expressly but it is not always necessary to say so expressly to make the law retrospective. There are occasions when a law may be held to be retrospective in operation. Retrospection is not to be presumed for the presumption is the other way but many statutes have been regarded as retrospective without a declaration. Thus it is that remedial statutes are always regarded as prospective but declaratory statutes are considered retrospective. Similarly sometimes statutes have a retrospective effect when the declared intention is clearly and unequivocally manifest from the language employed in the particular law or in the context of connected provisions. It is always a question whether the legislature has sufficiently expressed itself. To find this one must look at the general scope and purview of the Act and the remedy the legislature intends to apply in the former state of the law and then determine what the legislature intended to do. This line of investigation is, of course, only open if it is necessary. In the words of Lord Selborne in Mann v. Stark, (1890) 15 AC 384 at p. 388 there might be something in the context of an Act or be collected from its language, which might give to words prima facie prospective or larger operation. More retrospectivity is not to be given than what can be gathered from expressed or clearly implied intention of the legislature.

14. Applying these tests to the statute we have in hand, we are clear that Section 157 (1) (a) must be read to apply retrospectively. It is clear that Section 21 (h) mentioned only one of the clauses viz., clause (e) as furnishing a ground for declaration. After the amendment of cl (h) one or more of the clauses of Section 157 (1) are to be taken into account. Now there would be no point in making the amendment of Section 21 (h) retrospective if the other clauses were to apply prospectively for then the force of the retrospectivity of clause (h) of Section 21 is made neutral. Therefore, if the new Section 21 (h) is to be read retrospectively from the commencement of Land Reforms Act, the amendment of Section 157 (1) which was made simultaneously must also be clearly intended to operate with retrospectivity. The legislature intended that at any given moment of time from the commencement of the Land Reforms Act all the clauses or one or more of them and not clause (e) alone were to be taken note of. The amendment of clause (h) speaks of one or more clauses and when we read the clauses of Section 157 (1) we find them altered also. Therefore the new clauses must be read and not the old clauses. The High Court was thus right in its conclusion that the clauses of Section 157 (1) as amended also operate retrospectively. This disposes of the first point.

15. The next point is about the finality of the order of October 25, 1936 passed by the Compensation Officer. We cannot refer that order to his capacity as the Assistant Collector. An act would, no doubt be referable to a capacity which would give it validity. But the law required the compensation officer to frame an issue and refer it to the competent Court. He could not decide the matter without doing so. One of the parties was before it and he ought to have asked that party to prove its case. He did nothing. It is, therefore, not wrong for the Settlement Officer and the Deputy Director to treat the order as proceeding from the Compensation Officer. Further since proceedings under Section 202 of the Land Reforms Act were already pending for the decision of the identical question the Compensation Officer ought to have stayed his hands. In our opinion, the order of the Compensation Officer did not have that finality which is claimed for it. That finality attaches only to the order of the Assistant Collector on a reference of an issue from the Compensation Officer. There was thus no finality.

16. The order of the Deputy Director cannot, therefore, be assailed. The appeal must fail and is dismissed but in view of the fact that an amendment of the law deprives the present appellants of a valid plea we make no order about costs. MVJ/D.V.C. Appeal dismissed.

land through process taken under S. 145, Criminal P. C. A thereupon filed a suit for declaration of her rights along with B appearing as co-plaintiff. Later on B filed an application under O. 23, R. 1 withdrawing from the suit. An application under O. 23, R. 3 also was filed signed by both B and C praying that the suit by B be dismissed.

A who was the widow of the predeceased son of J was entitled to receive maintenance out of the estate of J so long as she did not remarry and she was presumably in possession of those properties in lieu of her maintenance. That being so C who was only a trespasser could not deprive her of possession of the properties: (1894) ILR 18 Bom 679 & (1894) ILR 18 Bom 452, Rel. on. (Para 4)

B could not effect a transfer of all her rights to C who was a mere trespasser by merely filing a petition that she did not wish to prosecute the suit as a co-plaintiff. A who had a possessory title was entitled to restoration of possession as against C if he had no right, title or interest and was a mere trespasser and she was further entitled to remain in possession by virtue of her claim or right to maintenance until C who claimed the estate of J made some proper arrangement for her maintenance. Mr. M. V. Goswami, Advocate, for Appellant; M/s. S. C. Agarwala and D. P. Singh, Advocates of M/s. Ramamurthi and Co., for Respondent No. 1.

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal in forma pauperis by special leave from a judgment of the Madhya Pradesh High Court at Jabalpur dismissing the suit of the appellant for a declaration that she was the owner of the suit properties and for possession thereof.

2. Jangi Jogi had inherited from his father properties consisting of some groves and a house in village Mukundpur which was in the erstwhile State of Rewa which later became a part of the State now called Madhya Pradesh. He had a son Laldas who is stated to have died in 1945 leaving the appellant, his widow, as his heir and legal representative. After the death of Laldas Jangi Jogi is alleged to have married Mst. Jugli Bai in the year 1948. Jangi Jogi himself died sometime in 1950. Respondent No. 1 is stated to have raised a claim to the properties of Jangi Jogi by virtue of a gift deed. On the basis of that deed he moved the Criminal Courts under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code and on December 29, 1962 an order was made directing the possession of the properties to be delivered to the said respondent. The appellant, therefore, instituted a suit in the Court of Civil Judge at Rewa for a declaration in respect of her rights and for possession of the properties mentioned in the plaint. The suit was instituted by the appellant along with Jugli Bai the widow of Jangi Jogi. Respondent No. 1 who was the sole defendant in the suit put up several pleas claiming, inter alia, that he had been in continuous possession of the suit properties for more than twelve years and had become the owner. Alternatively it was pleaded if any one could have any interest it would be plaintiff No. 2 Jugli Bai but she had as a matter of fact not joined in the suit and her thumb impression on the plaint had been obtained by fraud. On the pleadings of the parties the trial Court framed as many as 12 issues. During the pendency of the suit plaintiff No. 2 Jugli Bai entered into compromise with respondent No. 1 giving up all her claims.

3. The trial Court found that the thumb impression of plaintiff had not been obtained by fraud but that she had changed sides much to the disadvantage of the appellant. As regards the deed of gift set up by respondent No. 1, it was found that Jangi Jogi had never made such a gift. It was further found that the appellant was in possession until she had been dispossessed by respondent No. 1 by means of the proceedings under Section 145, Cr. P. C. According to the trial Court the said respondent had illegally occupied the lands for some time and since the proceedings under Sec. 145, Cr. P. C., resulted in his favour he was put into possession through the process taken under those proceedings. So far as the title of respondent No. 1 was concerned it was found that his position was that of a mere trespasser. The trial Court, however, non-suited the appellant on the ground that since her husband had died in the lifetime of Jangi Jogi the latter's estate devolved on his widow Jugli Bai who would be his only heir and she had entered into a compromise with respondent No. 1. The appellant went up in appeal to the Court of District Judge, Rewa. The learned District Judge examined the point whether the compromise entered into by one of the plaintiffs Jugli Bai with the defendant was valid and should have been given effect to by the trial Court. According to him it could not be said that the appellant had no right or interest in the properties left by Jangi Jogi. He felt that the compromise which had been entered into by Jugli Bai and the defendant should not have been accepted, as the appellant was not a party to that compromise. He was further of the view that the trial Court had not decided all the matters which arose for decision. He, therefore, set aside the decree of the trial Court and remanded the case with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number and dispose of it in accordance with law. Respondent No. 1 filed a second appeal before the High Court. The High Court took the view that the present appellant could have no interest in the properties left by Jangi Jogi. She could not take advantage of the provision of Section 3 (2) of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 which conferred certain rights on the widow of a predeceased son in view of the decision of Federal Court in Umayal Achi v. Lakshmi Achi, 1945 FCR 1=(AIR 1945 FC 25). The aforesaid Act had been extended to Rewa State by the Part C (State Laws) Act, 1950 which came into force on April 16, 1950. It was urged, inter alia, before the High Court that the appellant could take a boy in adoption and as soon as such an adoption was made its effect would be that the adoptee would be the son not only of the widow but of her deceased husband as well and further that she had a claim for maintenance over the suit lands. The High Court disposed of this contention by saying—

"It is not possible to prejudge the results of an adoption which may, or may not, be made by Smt. Rani Bai at all. Similarly, this is not a case in which the right of maintenance was sought to be enforced against Smt. Jugli Bai on the property which was inherited by her from the last male holder, Jangi Jogi. It may be possible to take up these questions in appropriate proceedings."

According to the High Court the compromise which had been entered into between Jugli Bai and respondent No. 1 did not adversely affect the right, title or interest of the appellant as she had no right, title or interest in the suit lands. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that she was in possession of the properties at the time respondent No. 1 dispossessed her by committing an act of trespass and, therefore, she was entitled to restoration of possession of those properties from the trespasser. The High Court disposed of this by saying that the rightful claimant on the death of Jangi Jogi was Jugli Bai alone and owing to the compromise entered into by her respondent No. 1 was clothed with the same rights which were possessed by her. It was further held by the High Court that the compromise had been properly and lawfully recorded and given effect to by the trial Court under O. 23, R. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code.

4. Now Jugli Bai had filed an application under O. 23, R. 1, Civil Procedure Code, on February 19, 1959 before the trial Court saying, inter alia, that her signature or thumb impression on the plaint had been obtained by misrepresentation by the appellant. The application stated that she was not interested in prosecuting the suit and therefore she was withdrawing the same. The following portion from that application may be reproduced—

"... plaintiff No. 2 withdraws her plaint and the statement of claim made therein, and so far as she is concerned she withdraws the suit and prays that no claim be decreed in her favour nor any relief mentioned in plaint be granted in her favour. On the other hand, the plaint may be dismissed to the extent of her claim. She is also filing herewith a compromise to that effect arrives (arrived?) at with the defendant, which may be accepted"

An application was also filed under O. 23, R. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, which purported to bear the thumb impression of Jugli Bai and was signed by respondent No. 1. All that was stated therein was that the suit of plaintiff No. 2 in respect of suit lands be dismissed and no relief be granted in accordance with the prayer made in the plaint. It is difficult to see how on the basis of these applications the suit of the appellant could be dismissed. It cannot be disputed that the appellant who is the widow of a predeceased son of Jangi Jogi was entitled to receive maintenance so long as she did not re-marry out of the estate of her father-in-law. Although her claim for maintenance was not a charge upon the estate until it had been fixed and specifically charged thereupon her right was not liable to be defeated except by transfer to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of a claim or even with notice of the claim unless the transfer was made with the intention of defeating her right. The Courts in India have taken the view that where a widow is in possession of a specific property for the purpose of her maintenance a purchaser buying with notice of her claim is not entitled to possession of that property without first securing proper maintenance for her: (vide Rachawa v. Shivayogappa, (1894) ILR 18 Bom 679). In Yellawa v. Bhimangavda, (1894) ILR 18 Bom 452 it was taken to be the settled practice of the Bombay High Court not to allow the heir to recover the family property from a widow entitled to be maintained out of it without first securing a proper maintenance for her out of the property or by such other means as might be deemed sufficient. It is clear from the provisions of the Explanation appearing in Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act that a situation was contemplated where a female Hindu could be in possession of joint family properties in lieu of maintenance. It may be mentioned that after the enforcement of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 the rights of widowed daughter-in-law to maintenance are governed by Section 19 of that Act which, however, could not be applicable. In the present case it is difficult to understand how the appellant could be deprived of the possession of properties by a trespasser. Moreover she was presumably in possession of these properties in lieu of her right of maintenance and could not be deprived of them even by Jugli Bai without first securing proper maintenance for her out of the aforesaid properties.

5. The rights of the appellant who was in possession qua respondent No. 1 who was found by the trial Court to be a trespasser have not been properly considered by the High Court. On this point reference may be made to a decision of the Privy Council in Ismail Ariff v.

Mohamed Ghouse, (1893) 20 Ind App 99 (PC). In that case in a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff was absolute owner of the land in suit and for an injunction, the defence was that the land was subject to a wakf created by the plaintiff's predecessor in title and that the defendant was mutwali thereof. Both Courts found in favour of the plaintiff's possession, and that the defendant was not the mutwali nor possessed of any interest in the land, but differed as to the dedication. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration as against the defendant that he was lawfully entitled to possession and the relief consequent thereon. The following observation of Sir Richard Couch may be reproduced with advantage:

"It appears to their Lordships that there is here a misapprehension of the nature of the plaintiff's case upon the facts stated in the judgment. The possession of the plaintiff was sufficient evidence of title as owner against the defendant. By Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act (Act 1 of 1877), if the plaintiff had been dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law, he could, by a suit instituted within six months from the date of the dispossession, have recovered possession, notwithstanding any other title that might be set up in such suit. If he could thus recover possession from a person who might be able, to prove a title, it is certainly right and just that he should be able, against a person who has no title and is a mere wrongdoer, to obtain a declaration of title as owner, and an injunction to restrain the wrongdoer from interfering with his possession."

6. Keeping the above statement of law in view it must be held that the High Court was in error in considering that since Jugli Bai had entered into some compromise with respondent No. 1 the trial Court was justified in dismissing the appellant's suit. It is somewhat difficult to understand the observation of the High Court that respondent No. 1 was "clothed with the very same rights" which were possessed by Jugli Bai. If the finding of the Trial Court was right that respondent No. 1 was a mere trespasser, it is not possible to see how Jugli Bai could effect a transfer of all her rights by merely filing a petition to the effect that she did not wish to prosecute the suit as a co-plaintiff. As has been pointed out the appellant had a possessory title and was entitled to restoration of possession in case it was found that respondent No 1 had no right, title or interest whatsoever and was a mere trespasser. The appellant was further entitled to remain in possession if she could establish that she had entered into possession by virtue of her claim or right to maintenance until the person laying a claim to the estate of Janga Jogi made some proper arrangement for the payment of maintenance to her. These are, however, matters on which no final opinion need be expressed as the District Judge was of the opinion that the trial Court had not given a proper decision on all the issues and for that reason the suit had been remanded for a fresh decision on all the questions of fact and law. In the view that we have taken the decision of the High Court has to be reversed and that of the District Judge restored.

7. The appeal is thus allowed with costs here and in the High Court. The amount of court-fee shall be recovered by the Government from respondent No 1 in accordance with Order 17, Rule 8 of the Supreme Court Rules. Costs of appellant's Advocate to be taxed against Respondent No 1 and made recoverable from him.

cash credits of Rs. 74,692 which he treated as income from other sources. M was assessed as an unregistered firm that year.
In second appeal against the assessment for 1953-54 the Tribunal reduced the income from business to Rs. 28,820 and confirmed the finding of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner that cash credits aggregating to Rs. 46,620 had remained unexplained. Then observing that there were certain special features in the case which needed proper consideration in determining the final assessment the Tribunal aggregated the income for the assessment years 1952-53 and 1953-54 and rounding it off at Rs. 1,00,000 apportioned the amount in equal shares at Rs. 50,000 for each of the two years and directed the Income-tax Officer to reopen the assess-

(Para 4)

The power conferred by sub-section (4) of Section 33 is wide, but it is still a judicial power which must be exercised in respect of matters that arise in the appeal out of the order of assessment made by the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and according to law. It cannot assume powers which are inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act or its scheme.

(Para 5)

An assessment which has become final may be reopened in appeal by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Tribunal or in revision by the Commissioner, or under an order of rectification of mistake, or pursuant to a notice of reassessment. The Tribunal hearing an appeal may give directions for reopening assessment of the year to which the appeal relates. It cannot give any directions to reassess in case of a period not covered by that year.

(Para 5)

The Tribunal was entitled to enquire whether the source of the cash credits was explained. If it held that they represented capital or income of earlier years, it could exclude them from income liable to be taxed in the year to which the appeal related. But the Tribunal had no power to find, on amalgamation, of income an average of more years than one, or to give credit for what it called intangible additions, without explaining why credit was given.

Even if the assessee had given an undertaking when urging his appeal, to make a voluntary return for the year 1952-53 it must be ignored. There is no sanction in law to enforce that undertaking and the assessment for 1952-53 could not be reopened otherwise than in accordance with law. (Para 5)

Mr. Sukumar Mitra, Senior Advocate, (Mr. B. D. Sharma, Advocate with him), for Appellant; M/s. S. Swaminathan and R. Gopalakrishnan, Advocates, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: For the assessment year 1952-53 respondents M/s. Manick & sons were assessed to tax in the status of a registered firm and their income was computed at Rs. 15,331 inclusive of Rs. 15,000 being undisclosed income. For the assessment year 1953-54 the respondents returned Rs. 40,887 as their income from business. The Income-tax Officer discovered an aggregate amount of Rupees 74,692 as "cash credits" which, in his view, were not satisfactorily explained by the respondents. The Income-tax Officer accordingly brought to tax a total income of Rs. 1,31,179 being Rs. 56,487 as income from business and Rs. 74,692 as income from "other sources" and assessed the respondents as an unregistered firm. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner in appeal reduced the income of the respondents from business to Rs. 38,420 and income from "other sources" to Rs. 46,620. In second appeal the Tribunal reduced the income from business to Rs. 28,820 and confirmed finding that the source of the cash credits aggregating to Rs. 46,620 had remained unexplained. But the Tribunal observed that "there were certain special features in the case which needed proper consideration in determining the final assessment." The Tribunal then aggregated the income for the assessment years 1952-53 and 1953-54 for the two years, which he rounded off at Rs. 1,00,000 and apportioned in equal shares in the two years. For the assessment year 1952-53 the Tribunal recorded that the respondents had given an undertaking to file a voluntary return for assessment on the basis of total income of Rs. 50,000.

2. At the instance of the Commissioner of Income-tax, four questions were referred to the High Court of Kerala:

"(1) Whether it was not beyond the jurisdiction of the Appellate Tribunal to reopen the concluded assessment for assessment year 1952-53 and to direct that the income should be revised in that year at Rs. 50,000 as against Rs. 15,331 already fixed?

(2) Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case and the evidence on record, the Tribunal was justified in directing that any portion of the cash credits be assessed to income-tax in any year other than the assessment year 1953-54?

(3) Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case and evidence on record, the Tribunal was justified in finding that a portion of the cash credits was covered by the intangible additions made in 1952-53 and 1953-54 assessment?

(4) Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case and the evidence on record, the Tribunal was justified in directing that the income under the head 'business' for the assessment year 1953-54 be reduced to Rs. 50,000?"

The High Court declined to answer questions (1) and (2) and answered questions (3) and (4) in the affirmative. The Commissioner appeals with special leave.

3. The judgment of the Tribunal is not a reasoned decision on the questions arising before it: it is cryptic and in parts obscure, and gives no grounds for its conclusion. The judgment again lends countenance to a method of assessment which the Indian Income-tax Act does not warrant. In paragraph 5 of the order the Tribunal observed that the cash credits discovered by the Income-tax Officer aggregated to Rs. 74,692 which amount was reduced by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner to Rs. 50,620. (It is common ground that the correct figure should be Rs. 46,620). The Tribunal then observed that on the evidence on record "these residuary items must remain unexplained." But the Tribunal thought that because in the assessment year 1952-53 the total income of Rs. 15,331 was comparatively small compared to the income of the earlier years "some of that year's profits must have come into the" profits of the next year. The Tribunal then set out a consolidated statement of account for two years and observed:

"The assessee has undertaken to file a voluntary return for assessment year 1952-53 on the basis of a total income of Rs 50,000. In these circumstances, the total business income of the assessee for the year under appeal is reduced to Rs. 50,000 only."

The unexplained cash credits found by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and accepted by the Tribunal were Rs 46,620. The total income of the two years on the basis adopted by the Tribunal was therefore Rs. 87,838. But the income of the two years was rounded off at Rs 1,00,000 and divided equally between the two years. For making up a consolidated statement of account the Tribunal gave no reasons nor did it give any reasons "for debiting the intangible additions" of Rs 15,000 and Rs 6,000 against the cash credits. Counsel for the respondents suggested that the Tribunal was presumably of the view that Rs 15,000 brought to tax as business income in the assessment in 1952-53 must have been entered in the books of account of the next year and that Rs 6,000 called "trading deficiency" in the two branches was entered as cash credit.

4. The appeal before the Tribunal raised a simple question — whether the cash credits aggregating to Rs 46,620 or any part thereof were liable to be taxed as income of the respondents in the year 1953-54. For that purpose the Tribunal had to consider whether the respondents furnished any explanation leading to a justifiable inference that the amount or a part thereof did not represent income of the respondents. In the view of the Tribunal the cash credits had remained unexplained. But the Tribunal still reduced the cash credits by Rs. 21,000, and then proceeded to amalgamate the income for the two years and to divide it equally. For reducing the cash credits by Rs. 21,000, no reasons have been given, and amalgamation of the income for the two years and apportionment is without authority of law.

5. An assessment which has become final may be reopened in appeal by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Tribunal or in revision by the Commissioner, or under an order of rectification of mistake, or pursuant to a notice of reassessment. The Tribunal hearing an appeal may give directions for reopening assessment of the year to which the appeal relates: it cannot give any directions to reassess in case of a period not covered by that year. There is no sanction in law to enforce the undertaking given by the respondent when urging his appeal in respect of the year 1953-54, to make a voluntary return for the year 1952-53; and even if the respondents carried out that undertaking the assessment of 1952-53 could not be reopened otherwise than in the manner prescribed by law. The undertaking must therefore be ignored. Under S. 33 (4) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal may, after giving both parties to the appeal an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders thereon as it thinks fit. The power conferred by that sub-section is wide, but it is still a judicial power which must be exercised in respect of matters that arise in the appeal and according to law. The Tribunal in deciding an appeal before it must deal with questions of law and fact which arise out of the order of assessment made by the Income-tax Officer and the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. It cannot assume powers which are inconsistent with express provisions of the Act or its scheme.

6. The Tribunal was entitled to enquire whether the source of the cash credits was explained: if it held that they represented capital or income of earlier years, it could exclude them from income liable to be taxed in the year to which the appeal related. But the Tribunal had no power to find on amalgamation of income an average of more years than one, or to give credit for what it called intangible additions, without explaining why credit was given.

7. There is no warrant for the claim made by Counsel for the respondents that the order passed by the Tribunal was by consent. The Tribunal has not stated so, and if the order was made by consent of the departmental authorities and the respondents, the objection should have been prominently raised when the Commissioner asked for a reference to the High Court.

8. Counsel urged that the final order passed by the Tribunal operates to the prejudice of the respondents, and the Commissioner is not aggrieved by the order. Counsel said that even though the Tribunal has found that the total income for the two years in question was approximately Rs. 91,838 (which if a correct account had been made would have been Rs. 87,838), the Tribunal has directed as-essment of Rs. 50,000 in the year 1952-53 and another Rs. 50,000 in the year 1953-54. But this is only a superficial way of looking at the matter. In the assessment year 1952-53 the respondents were assessed in the status of a registered firm and the income of the firm had to be distributed amongst the partners, and the shares of the partners could be assessed to tax in their hands. The rate of tax on this income unless the partners have large individual income would be comparatively low. In the year 1953-54 the respondents were an unregistered firm and the total income of the unregistered firm was liable to be taxed.

9. It was also contended that the arguments raised before this Court were never set up either before the Tribunal or before the High Court and should not be permitted to be raised. The questions raised clearly flow from the contentions raised before the Tribunal and contemplate an enquiry into matters urged by Counsel by the Commissioner.

10. The decision of this Court, Commr. of Income-tax, Madras v. S. Nelliappan, (1967) 66 ITR 722 (SC) on which reliance was placed by Counsel for the respondents has little bearing in this case. In S. Nelliappan's case, (1967) 66 ITR 722 (SC) it was held that the conclusion whether a cash credit in the books of account of an assessee is properly explained is one on a question of fact on which no reference can be made to the High Court under Section 66 of the Indian Income-tax Act. The Court in that case did not lay down that it is open to the Tribunal to make a consolidated assessment of tax in respect of the assessment of income for the two years and then divide the income in equal shares.

11. Turning then to the questions, Counsel for the respondents conceded that the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to direct the Income-tax Officer to reopen the assessment for the year 1952-53. He submitted however that the Tribunal did not give any such directions: it merely recorded an undertaking given by the respondents that they will voluntarily submit a return for Rs. 50,000 for the year 1952-53. But the context in which the statement recording the undertaking occurs in paragraph 7 of the judgment of the Tribunal and the direction given in paragraph 8 leave no room for doubt that the Tribunal did give a direction to the Income-tax Officer to reassess the income for the year 1952-53. On the answer to the first question no further enquiry need be made on the second question

12 The Tribunal has given no reasons in support of the view that the "intangible additions" of Rs 21,000 covered a part of the cash credits. Our attention has also not been invited to any evidence which establishes a connection between the cash credits for Rs 21,000 and the additions of Rs 15,000 made in the assessment for 1952-53 and Rs. 6,000 added in 1953-54

13 The fourth question contemplates an inquiry whether the Tribunal was justified in directing that the income under the head "business" for the assessment year 1953-54 be reduced to Rs 50,000. The question is somewhat misleading. The direction of the Tribunal was that the total income of the respondents be reduced to Rs 50,000 for the year 1953-54, the business income being Rs 28,820 and the balance being income from other sources. For reasons already set out the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to proceed to combine the income for the two years 1952-53 and 1953-54 and to divide it for the purpose of assessment between the two years equally. The Tribunal had to assess the income for the year in question

14. The appeal is allowed, and the answers to the questions recorded by the High Court are discharged. The answers to the questions will be as follows

Q (1) — Tribunal had no jurisdiction.

Q. (2) — Tribunal had no jurisdiction.

Q (3) — in the negative

Q (4) — in the negative.

There will be no order as to costs in this appeal

(A) Constitution of India, Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) — Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954), Section 20B — Section is unconstitutional being ultra vires Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (f) — ILR (1967) 2 P & H 574, Approved, L. P. A. No. 37 of 1967, D/- 3-5-1967 (P & H), Affirmed. (Para 5)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 31 (2) — Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954), S. 20B — Section is ultra vires Art. 31 (2) — L. P. A. No 37 of 1967, D/- 3-5-1967 (P & H), Reversed.

Article 31 (2) provides for two things, (1) the acquisition or requisition should be for a public purpose, and (2) the law should provide for compensation and either it should fix the amount of compensation or specify the principles on which and the manner in which the compensation has to be determined or given. Section 20B of Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954) violates both these provisions of the Article.

The section enables the Central Government to deprive rightful owner of the property if it is of the opinion that it is not expedient or practicable to restore the whole or part of the property. The Central Government is not concerned with justness but whether it would be possible to restore the property. It may transfer to rightful owner any property being of the same value as the property to be restored, but the section does not say value at what point of time, whether at the time the property was taken possession of by the Custodian, the Central Government or the displaced person, or at the time the title of the rightful owner is extinguished. The section does not fix any compensation or lay down any principles for compensation. (Paras 10, 13)

Under the section the Central Government is entitled not to restore property to serve a purpose other than a public purpose and consequently the section is ultra vires Article 31 (2) L. P. A. No 37 of 1967, D/- 3-5-1967 (P & H), Reversed. (Para 12)

It may be that insofar as the title vested in the displaced person the case would come within Article 31 (2A), but then the section is not severable and it has to be declared void as a whole. (Para 15)

SIKRI, J.: The Municipal Committee, Jalalabad, respondent before us in these appeals, filed an application under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution praying that Section 20B of the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954 — hereinafter referred to as the Compensation Act — be declared ultra vires the Constitution and that the memorandum dated March 14, 1963, communicated by the District Rent and Managing Officer, Jalalabad, be quashed. The learned Single Judge, following an earlier judgment of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in Kirpal Singh v. The Central Government, ILR (1967) 2 Punj & Har 574, held that Section 20B of the Compensation Act was ultra vires and quashed the impugned order dated March 14, 1963, and directed the restoration of the property in dispute to the Municipal Committee. An appeal was taken to the Letters Patent Bench but this was dismissed in limine. Two appeals have been filed against this judgment, one by the Union of India and its officers who are interested only in the question of the vires of the section, and the other by Lachhmandas and others to whom the shops in dispute have been transferred.

2. The relevant facts may be stated shortly. The Nawab of Mamdot became an evacuee in 1947 on the partition of the country and his property was taken over by the Custodian as evacuee property. In 1949, the District Rent and Managing Officer treated five shops, situated in Chowk Kalan, Jalalabad, as belonging to the Nawab of Mamdot and began to recover the rent of the shops from the tenants.

The Municipal Committee protested and lengthy correspondence ensued between the Municipal Committee and the Custodian. Eventually the Municipal Committee filed a Civil Suit in 1958 against the Union of India for a declaration that the said shops were their own property and not evacuee property. Ultimately, the Trial Court, by order dated January 8, 1962, made a reference to the Custodian General for determining the question whether the shops in dispute were evacuee property or not. The Deputy Custodian General, exercising his powers under Section 27 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as the Evacuee Act) held that the property in dispute had been wrongly taken over as evacuee property and ordered that the five shops be released in favour of the Municipal Committee, Jalalabad. On this, the Municipal Committee applied to the Regional Settlement Commissioner, under Rule 37 of the Administration of Evacuee Property (Central) Rules, 1950 for the restoration and possession of the five shops. On March 14, 1963, the District Rent and Managing Officer, Jalalabad, sent a memorandum to the Municipal Committee stating that the property in dispute had already been transferred to the occupants and disposed of under the Compensation Act and that its assessed price was Rs. 6542/-. In the memorandum it was further stated:

"It is not, therefore, expedient or practicable to restore the above property to you and it has, therefore, been decided to transfer you any other immovable property in the compensation pool of the equal amount in lieu thereof under Section 20B of the D. Ps. (C & R) Act, 1954." The memorandum also listed some properties which were available for transfer to the Municipal Committee. This is the memorandum that has been quashed by the High Court.

3. The above proposal was not acceptable to the Municipal Committee. It was pointed out by the Municipal Committee in reply that it was incorrect that all the five shops had been transferred and that the assessment price was Rs. 6452/-. According to the Municipal Committee only one shop out of these, in possession of Dogar Mal Ram Chand, had been auctioned for Rs. 10,100/- although the sale had not matured.

4. It appears that one shop was released in favour of the Municipal Committee but the Department refused to release the other shops. After unsuccessfully approaching the Settlement Officer, with delegated powers of the Settlement Commissioner, the writ application under Article 226 was filed in the High Court

5 In ILR (1967) 2 Punj & Har 574 the High Court had held that Section 20B of the Compensation Act was unconstitutional being ultra vires Articles 14 and 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. The High Court was, however, of the opinion that this section did not violate Article 31 (2) of the Constitution. As we have come to the conclusion that Section 20B violates Article 31 (2) of the Constitution, we need not consider whether the reasoning of the High Court is correct regarding the section being ultra vires Article 14 or 19 (1) (f). Section 20B is in the following terms:

"20B (1) Where any person is entitled to the restoration of any property by virtue of an order made by the Custodian-General under Section 27 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950, or by the competent officer or the appellate officer under the Evacuee Interest Separation Act, 1951, and the Central Government is of opinion that it is not expedient or practicable to restore the whole or any part of such property to that person by reason of the property or part thereof being in occupation of a displaced person or otherwise, then, notwithstanding anything contained in the said Acts or this Act, it shall be lawful for the Central Government.—

(a) to transfer to that person in lieu of the property to be restored or any part thereof, any immovable property in the compensation pool or any part thereof, being in the opinion of the Central Government as nearly as may be of the same value as the property to be restored or, as the case may be, any part thereof, or

(b) to pay to that person such amount in cash from the compensation pool in lieu of the property to be restored or part thereof, as the Central Government having regard to the value of the property to be restored or part thereof, may in the circumstances deem fit.

(2) Where in pursuance of sub-sec. (1) any person has been granted any immovable property from the compensation pool or has been paid any amount in cash from the compensation pool, his right, title and interest in the property to be restored shall be deemed to have been extinguished."

6 Before we deal with the constitutionality of this section, we may briefly refer to its background. This is set out in detail by this Court in Amar Singh v.

Custodian, Evacuee Property, Punjab, 1957 SCR 801 = (AIR 1957 SC 599). In brief, a number of steps were taken by Government to rehabilitate the displaced persons coming from West Pakistan. The first legislative measure enacted to achieve this purpose was the East Punjab Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Ordinance, 1947. Various other Acts were passed which are set out at p 809 of SCR = (at p 603 of AIR) of the above judgment. It is enough for the purposes of this case to consider the effect of the provisions of the Compensation Act and the Evacuee Act. Under Section 7 of the Evacuee Act property was notified as being evacuee property, and under Sec. 8 the property declared to be evacuee property vested in the Custodian. Under Section 9, the Custodian was empowered to take possession of the property vested in him, and the Custodian was entitled under Section 10 to administer, preserve and manage any evacuee property. In exercise of the powers he granted leases and made allotments out of the evacuee property, in favour of displaced persons.

7. By 1954 it was decided that displaced persons should be paid compensation in respect of the property left by them in the territories now forming part of West Pakistan. With that end in view the Compensation Act was passed. Section 12 enabled the Central Government to acquire property which had been declared evacuee property and vested in the Custodian. After acquisition the title of the evacuee was extinguished and the evacuee property vested absolutely in the Central Government free from all encumbrances. All the property acquired under this section formed part of the compensation pool. Cash balances lying with the Custodian and certain other contributions and assets were also thrown in the compensation pool. Elaborate rules were framed under the Compensation Act for the purpose of paying compensation to displaced persons out of the compensation pool. One of the ways of paying compensation was transfer of property.

8. It is not disputed that Lachhman Dass and others were granted sanads under the Compensation Act and thus purported to acquire ownership rights in the shops.

9. The objects and reasons for enacting Section 20B were given as follows—

"Instances have come to notice where some properties were wrongly declared to be evacuee property and they were also acquired. In such cases, the Custodian-General is empowered under Section 27 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 to restore such property to the non-evacuee owner. Similarly, a competent officer has also power under the Evacuee Interest Separation Act, 1951, to declare a share in a property to be non-evacuee after the whole of it has been declared to be evacuee property and has been acquired. It is not sometimes possible to restore the original property to the non-evacuee owner because of its transfer to a displaced person. To overcome this difficulty, it is proposed to insert a new Section 20B on the lines of Section 20A."

10. We may first analyse the provisions of Section 20B. It proceeds on the basis that the property to be restored had in fact not properly vested in the displaced person or the Central Government. Ordinarily, the rightful owner would be entitled to have the property restored to him. But the section enables the Central Government to deprive him of that property if it is of the opinion that it is not expedient or practicable to restore the whole or part of the property. The section mentions one reason why it may not be expedient or practicable, and that is that the property is in the occupation of a displaced person. Even if this is assumed to be an adequate reason, it makes it almost non-controlling by saying that any other reason will be good enough. This is the only meaning we can give to the word "otherwise". In other words, this means that if the Central Government likes the property or its lessee or licensee or transferee and it finds it irksome or does not want to annoy that person it could deprive the rightful owner of his property. The Central Government is not concerned with justness but whether it would be politic to restore the property. If the Central Government has decided to deprive the rightful owner of the property it may transfer to that person any property being, again in the opinion of the Central Government, as nearly as may be, of the same value as the property to be restored, but the section does not say value at what point of time; whether at the time the property was taken possession of by the Custodian the Central Government or the displaced person, or at the time the title of the rightful owner is extinguished. The section further gives an alternative to the Central Government to offer cash from the compensation pool, having regard to the value of the property. Here again no indication is given whether the cash has to be equivalent to the full value of the property and no indication as to the point of time at which value is to be ascertained. Under sub-section (2) after the rightful owner has been granted any immovable property from the compensation pool or has been paid any cash then his title is extinguished.

12. In our view, Section 20B violates both these provisions of the article. There is no doubt that to provide for rehabilitation of displaced persons was a public purpose but it does not serve any public purpose to provide that if a displaced person is in occupation of somebody's property he should not be given other property because it will not be expedient or practicable to do so. A public purpose may be served if it had been provided that a displaced person may not be ousted because his business would be ruined or that he would be completely thrown on the street, but to provide in the section that if the Central Government does not think it expedient or practicable for its own convenience or for the convenience of a lessee or licensee who is not a displaced person it may not restore property serves no public purpose. In our view, under the section the Central Government is entitled not to restore property to serve a purpose other than a public purpose and consequently the section is ultra vires Article 31 (2).

13. Further, in our opinion, the section does not fix any compensation or lay down any principles for compensation. Sub-section (1) (a) of Section 20B may perhaps be taken as laying down some principle, namely, that the value should be the same but it does not prescribe the point of time at which the value is to be ascertained. In sub-clause (b) nothing is said about the cash being equivalent to the value of the property which is sought not to be restored. The Central Government might, having regard to the value of the property, decide that cash to the extent of 50 per cent of its value should be paid. In doing this it would be having regard to the value of the property but it would be following another rule, namely, that the cash should be half of the value of the property which is laid down in the section

14. We are quite aware that the Central Government was faced with the problem mentioned in the "objects and reasons" set out above, and this problem had to be tackled, but the problem should and can be tackled in accordance with law and the Constitution.

15. It was sought to be argued before us that Article 31 (2A) applied in this case, but it seems to us that insofar as the property was still part of the compensation pool the effect of the extinguishment of the title of the rightful owner would be to vest the property in the Central Government. It may be that insofar as the title vested in the displaced person the case would come within Article 31 (2A), but then the section is not severable and it has to be declared void as a whole. We need not consider the point that even if the section is severable it would be void under Article 19(1) (f). The points we have mentioaed above would also be relevant in considering the reasonableness of the restrictions.

16. We may mention that the learned counsel on behalf of Lachman Dass and others, the displaced persons to whom the shops had been purported to have been transferred under the sanads, tried to attack the validity of the order of the Custodian General under Section 27 of the Evacuee Act on the ground that they were not heard. This point was not taken in the High Court and we cannot allow it to be raised before us at this stage.

17. In the result the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs, one hearing fee SSG/D.V.C. Appeals dismissed.

Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 47 (3) and 57 (3) — Grant of stage carriage permit — Procedure — Question of number of stage carriages on the route cannot be decided while entertaining application for stage carriage permit.

In view of Sections 47 and 57 before granting a stage carriage permit two independent steps have to be taken. Firstly there should be a determination by the R. T. A. under Section 47 (3), of the number of stage carriages for which stage carriage permits may be granted in that route. Thereafter applications for stage carriage permits in that route should be entertained. 1967-2 SCWR 857, Followed (Para 8)

Thus where the R. T. A. determines the number of stage carriages required on the route at the time of entertaining application for stage carriage permit the procedure is not in accordance with law. (Para 4)

If a contrary view, viz that the R. T. A. can determine the question as to the number of stage carriages required on a route at the time it considers applications made by operators for stage carriage permit for that route, is taken it will throw open the door for manipulations and nepotism. The operator who happens to apply for the route first will be in a commanding position. The R. T. A. will have no opportunity to choose between competing operators and hence public interest would suffer. Such a view cannot also be justified by suggesting that sub-section (3) of Section 57 is wide enough to allow the competing operators to apply for the route in question when the first application is published and representations called for. Section 57 (3) merely permits representations to be made in respect of the application published. Such representations cannot take the form of competing applications. The word "representations" in Section 57 (3) does not include applications for the route (Para 5, 7)

HEGDE, J.: The scope of Section 47(3) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) comes up for consideration in this appeal by certificate.

2. The facts of the case necessary for the purpose of deciding the point in issue are few, and they are as follows: —

On August 8, 1966 the appellant applied to the R. T. A., Coimbatore for a permit to ply a stage carriage on the route Bhavani to Vellithiruppur. That was entirely a new route. No stage carriage was plying on that route at that time. The R. T. A. published that application under Section 57 (3) of the Act. Respondents Nos. 2-3 and others made representations against that application contending that there was no need to grant a stage carriage permit for that route. The R. T. A. overruled their objection and granted the permit asked for on October 9, 1967. As against the order of the R. T. A. some of the objectors went up in appeal to the State Transport Appellate Tribunal, Madras. The Additional State Transport Appellate Tribunal allowed the appeal by its order of February 22, 1968 holding that the procedure adopted by the R. T. A. was not in accordance with law inasmuch as it had failed to determine the question of the need for a service in that route before entertaining the application for a stage carriage permit. The Tribunal held that the procedure adopted by the R. T. A. contravened Section 47 (3) of the Act. The appellant challenged that order before the High Court of Madras in Writ Petition No. 908 of 1968. The High Court dismissed that application. Hence this appeal.

3. Section 47 of the Act prescribes the procedure to be adopted by the R. T. A. in considering applications for stage carriage permit. That section reads:

"A Regional Transport Authority shall, in considering an application for a stage carriage permit, have regard to the following matters namely:

(a) the interests of the public generally;
(b) the advantages to the public of the service to be provided, including the saving of time likely to be effected thereby and any convenience arising from journeys not being broken;

(c) the adequacy of other passenger transport services operating or likely to operate in the near future, whether by road or other means, between the places to be served;

(d) the benefit to any particular locality or localities likely to be afforded by the service;

(e) the operation by the applicant of other transport services, including those in respect of which applications from him for permits are pending;

(f) the condition of the roads included in the proposed route or area;

and shall also take into consideration any representations made by persons already providing passenger transport facilities by any means along or near the proposed route or area or by any association representing persons interested in the provision of road transport facilities recognised in this behalf by the State Government, or by any local authority or police authority within whose jurisdiction any part of the proposed route or area lies;

Provided that other conditions being equal, an application for a stage carriage permit from a co-operative society registered or deemed to have been registered under any enactment in force for the time being shall, as far as may be, be given preference over applications from individual owners.

(2) A Regional Transport Authority shall refuse to grant a stage carriage permit if it appears from any time-table furnished that the provisions of this Act relating to the speed at which vehicles may be driven are likely to be contravened:

Provided that before such refusal an opportunity shall be given to the applicant to amend the time-table so as to conform to the said provisions.

(3) A Regional Transport Authority may having regard to the matters mentioned in sub-section (1), limit the number of stage carriages generally or of any specified type for which stage carriage permits may be granted in the region or in any specified area or on any specified route within the region."

4. Sub-section (3) of Section 47 of the Act requires the Regional Transport Authority to limit the number of stage carriage permits that may be granted in a route having regard to the matters mentioned in sub-section (1) of that section. The question for determination is whether the determination as to the number of stage carriages required on a route should be done at a stage anterior to that of entertaining applications for stage carriage permits or that it could be done at the time it considers applications made by operators for stage carriage permits in that route. The R. T. A. has proceeded on the basis that that question can be decided while considering the applications made to it for permits by operators whereas the Appellate Tribunal and the High Court have taken a contrary view.

5. Sub-section (3) of Section 47 of the Act if read by itself does not throw any light on the controversy before us but if Sections 47 and 57 of the Act are read together it appears to us to be clear that the view taken by the Appellate Tribunal and the High Court is the correct view. If contrary view is taken it will throw open the door for manipulations and nepotism. There may be possibility of the personality of the applicant influencing the decision of the R. T. A. on the question of need for a stage carriage permit in the route and thereby public interest which should be the main consideration while taking a decision under Section 47 (3) may suffer. If we accept the view taken by the R. T. A. as correct, an operator who happens to apply for the route first will be in a commanding position. The R. T. A. will have no opportunity to choose between competing operators and hence public interest might suffer.

6. Mr. Narasaraju, learned Counsel for the appellant tried to meet the difficulty by suggesting that sub-section (3) of Section 57 of the Act is wide enough to allow the competing operators to apply for the route in question when the first applicant's application is published and representations called for. Section 57 (3) reads:-

"On receipt of an application for a stage carriage permit or a public carrier's permit, the Regional Transport Authority shall make the application available for inspection at the office of the Authority and shall publish the application or the substance thereof in the prescribed manner together with a notice of the date before which representations in connection therewith may be submitted and the date, not being less than 30 days from such publication, on which, and the time and place at which, the application and any representation received will be consi-

7. We are unable to accept this contention. That sub-section merely permits representations to be made in respect of the application published. Such representations cannot take the form of competing applications. It is difficult to accept the contention that the word "representations" in Section 57 (3) includes applications for the route. That apart if we accept Mr. Narasaraju's contention then the whole thing will become unworkable. If at the time of making his representation an operator can also make an application for a stage carriage permit for that route, that application again will have to be published under Section 57 (3) and objections called for. Extending the logic of Mr. Narasaraju's argument as we ought to, at the time of making representations to those applications, further applications can be made. This may turn out to be an unending chain.

8. On an examination of the relevant provisions of the Act and the purpose behind Sections 47 and 57, we are convinced that before granting a stage carriage permit two independent steps have to be taken. Firstly there should be a determination by the R. T. A. under Section 47 (3), of the number of stage carriages for which stage carriage permits may be granted in that route. Thereafter applications for stage carriage permits in that route should be entertained. The R. T. A. is not competent to grant stage carriage permits for more carriages than fixed under Section 47 (3). Our above conclusion accords with the view expressed by this Court in Civil Appeal No. 95 of 1965 (SC), M/s. Jaya Ram Motor Service v. S. Rajarathnam. Therein the Court observed:-

"The scheme of Section 47 is that when a person makes an application under Sections 45 and 46 the Authority first considers it under Section 47 (1) in the light of the matters set out therein and also the representations if any, made by the persons mentioned therein. The Authority then fixes under Section 47 (2) having regard to the matters mentioned in Section 47 (1), the number of stage carriages for which permits may be granted in the region or on any specified route within such region. Having fixed the limit the Authority publishes under Section 57 (3), the application with a notice of the date before which representations in connection therewith may be submitted and the date on which such application and representations would be considered. The proviso to Section 57 (3) lays down that if the grant of a permit has the effect of increasing the number of vehicles operating in that region or in any specified area thereof or on the route within such region beyond the limit fixed under Section 47 (3), the Authority may dismiss the application summarily. If it does not exceed such limit and the Authority decides to grant a permit it has to consider the application and the representations submitted to it in conformity with the procedure laid down in Section 57. Therefore Section 47 envisages two stages of the inquiry; (i) the fixing of the number of permits under Section 47 (3) and (ii) the consideration thereafter of the application for grant of a permit and the representations if any by the persons mentioned in Section 47 (1). It would therefore seem that once the Authority has fixed the number of vehicles to be operated in the region or the area or the particular route and the number of permits to be granted therefor, the stage of inquiry under Section 47 (3) is over. The next thing that the Authority has to consider is whether grant of a permit would be within such limit or not. If it does not exceed the limit the Authority has to consider the application and the representation if any, in connection therewith and to grant or refuse to grant the permit under Section 48 (1). Therefore, once the limit is fixed, if the grant of an application does not have the effect of exceeding that limit, the only question before the Authority would be whether the applicant is a person fit to be granted the permit or not in the light of the matters set out in sub-section (1) of Section 47. The question of the number of permits to be granted, having been already canvassed and decided, cannot become the subject at that stage of any further controversy. This is clear from the fact that Section 48 (1) which empowers the Authority to grant or refuse to grant the permit starts with the words "subject to the provisions of Section 47". It is therefore clear that the Authority has first to fix the limit and after having done so, consider the application or representations in connection therewith in accordance with the procedure laid down in S. 57. As held in Abdul Mateen v. Ram Kailash Pandey, 1963-3 SCR 523, at p. 529=(AIR 1963 SC 64 at p. 67) the Authority may modify the limit fixed by it under Section 47 (3) but once such a limit is fixed, it cannot ignore it while considering the applications before it under Section 48. Section 47 (3), as observed there,

"is concerned with a general order limiting stage carriages generally etc., on a consideration of matters specified in Section 47 (1). That general order can be modified by the Regional Transport Authority, if it so decides, one way or the other. But the modification of that order is not a matter for consideration when the Regional Transport Authority is dealing with the actual grant of permits under Section 48 read with Sec. 57 for at that stage what the Regional Transport Authority has to do is to choose between various applicants. . . That, in our opinion, is not the stage when the general order passed under Section 47 (3) can be reconsidered for the order under Section 48 is subject to the provisions of Section 47, which includes Section 47 (3) under which a general order limiting the number of stage carriages etc. may have been passed."

That being so, if an application is refused such refusal is under Section 48 (1) and the appellant who is denied the permit has a right of appeal under Section 64 (1) (a)".

In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(From Calcutta: AIR 1966 Cal 120)

J. M. SHELAT AND V. BHARGAVA, JJ.

Arati Paul, Appellant v. Registrar, Original Side, High Court, Calcutta and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 745 of 1966, D/- 10-3-1969.

Arbitration Act (1940), Ss. 2 (a) and (b) and 21 — Agreement to refer disputes in pending suits to arbitration of sole Judge extra cursum curiae — Under terms of agreement Judge to act in dual capacity as arbitrator and a Judge — Order passed in pursuance of agreement in partition suit — On facts order held to be judgment and preliminary decree and not award — Registrar of High Court bound to file it on record under Rules of High Court — No mandamus can be issued against Registrar to take it off the record so long as the order is not vacated by appropriate remedy — (Constitution of

In a partition suit and a testamentary suit pending before Justice Mallick of the High Court the parties put forward an agreement referring their disputes in both the suits to the sole arbitration of Mallick J extra cursum curiae jurisdiction of the High Court. The agreement ran as follows — It is recorded that all the parties agreed to abide by any decision that will be given and no evidence need be taken except or to what his Lordship might desire and the evidence need not be recorded in any formal manner. Parties agree that his Lordship would have all the summary powers including the power to divide and partition the properties and to make such decrees as his Lordship thinks fit and proper and for the purpose of partition if necessary to engage or appoint Surveyors and Commissioners as his Lordship thinks best. It is further recorded that all parties agree that they will not prefer any appeal from or against the decree or order that may be passed by his Lordship the Hon'ble Mr Justice Mallick. In pursuance of this agreement Mallick, J., passed an order dated 1-4-1963 in the partition suit. This order was filed in the record as a judgment in spite of objection and thereupon the objector presented a letter of demand to the Registrar of the Original side of the High Court to recall, cancel and withdraw the filing of the order of Mallick, J., from the record of the suit and failing to get any response filed petition under Article 226 for a writ of mandamus against the Registrar. The main question in dispute was whether the order of Mallick, J., amounted to an award or a judgment in the suit.

Held (1) that in the facts and circumstances of the case the order passed by Mallick J. was not an award of an arbitrator but amounted to judgment and decree of Court. In a case like the present, where the arbitration agreement envisages that the Presiding Officer of the Court should himself act as an arbitrator, he, in such circumstances, will obviously occupy a dual capacity. He will be both an arbitrator to decide the matters referred to him by the agreement of the parties, and a Court before which the suit continues to remain pending having jurisdiction to deal with the suit in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act. Even assuming without deciding that there was no competent reference to arbitration by the presiding officer in a pending suit the order passed by Mallick, J., must be held to be a preliminary decree passed by him as a Court seized of the partition suit. On the other hand, even if it be held that there was a competent reference it was clear that, after deciding the matters left to his decision as an arbitrator by the parties, Mallick, J., proceeded further to deal with the suit himself as a Court and to pass a preliminary decree in it which course being adopted by him was envisaged by the parties themselves when they stated that he could make such decrees in the suit as he thought fit. The actual order passed by Mallick, J., also made it clear that, in passing that order, he purported to act as the Court deciding the suit and not as the arbitrator to whom some matters in dispute were referred by the parties. English and Indian Case law regarding nature of such order and its appealability discussed and distinguished.

(2) that the remedy sought by the writ petitioner could not be allowed so long as the judgment stood and was not vacated. Since the order of Mallick, J., was a judgment the Registrar under the Rules of the Calcutta High Court was bound to file it on the record and retain it there. The appropriate remedy was to have the judgment vacated. The High Court was therefore right in dismissing the writ petition. AIR 1966 Cal 120, Affirmed.

Mr. M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate, (M/s. D. N. Mukherjee and P. K. Sen, Advocates with him), for Appellant; Mr. B. Sen, Senior Advocate (S. C. Mazumdar, Advocate and G. S. Chatterjee, Advocates for Sukumar Basu, Advocate, with him), for Respondents (Nos. 1 and 2); M/s. N. N. Goswami and S. N. Mukherjee, Advocates, for Respondents (Nos. 3 and 4).

BHARGAVA, J. — This appeal, by special leave, is directed against a judgment of the Appellate Bench of the High Court of Calcutta dated 18th February, 1965* dismissing an appeal against an order of a single Judge by which he dismissed a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution on 26th August, 1964. The facts leading up to this litigation are that one Shrish Chandra Paul died in the year 1930, leaving behind his widow Pramila Sundari, his daughter Arati, and 4 sons Balai, Kanai, Netai and Gour. In the year 1945, Netai died leaving his mother Pramila Sundari as his sole heiress. On 27th September, 1946, a deed of gift in respect of two premises Nos. 60/11 and 60/12 in Gouri Beria Lane was executed by Pramila Sundari in favour of her three sons Balai, Kanai and Gour. On 18th March, 1952, there was an agreement for partition between Pramila Sundari and her three sons Balai, Kanai and Gour, by which the joint estate left by Shrish Chandra Paul was partitioned into four lots and a small portion of the property was left joint. On 13th June, 1957, Pramila Sundari instituted Suit No. 1045 of 1957 against Balai, Kanai and Gour for a declaration that the deed of gift and the agreement of partition were void and inoperative, and for a fresh declaration of the shares of the parties and partition of the joint properties. In this suit, Arati was also impleaded as a defendant. On 26th August, 1957, Pramila Sundari executed a will bequeathing her entire estate absolutely to Arati Paul and Gour in equal shares. On 13th January, 1958, Pramila Sundari died and, consequently, on 12th December, 1958, an order was made in Suit No. 1045 of 1957 transposing Arati Paul as the plaintiff. On 3rd February, 1960, Arati Paul applied in the Calcutta High Court for grant of Letters of Administration, with a copy of the will of Pramila Sundari annexed. This testamentary proceeding was contested and was marked in the year 1962 as Testamentary Suit No. 12 of 1962. On 17th December, 1962, the Testamentary Suit No. 12/1962 and the Partition Suit No. 1045/1957 appeared in the peremptory list of Mallick, J., and the Testamentary Suit was partly heard. On 2nd and 3rd January, 1963, there was further hearing in the testamentary suit. On 4th January 1963, an agreement was put forward before Mallick, J. referring the dispute in both the suits to the sole arbitration of Mallick, J. extra cursum curiae. Since this reference is of importance we may quote it in full:—

"It is recorded that all the parties consent to this Testamentary Suit as well as the partition suit being Suit No. 1045 of 1957 and all the disputes involved in these two matters be settled and referred to the sole arbitration of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice P. C. Mallick and the parties agreed to abide by any decision that will be given and no evidence need be taken except or to what his Lordship might desire and the evidence need not be recorded in any formal manner. Parties agree that his Lordship would have all the summary powers including the power to divide and partition the properties and to make such decrees as his Lordship thinks fit and proper and for the purpose of partition if necessary to engage or appoint Surveyors and Commissioners as his Lordship thinks best.

It is recorded that all the parties have referred this matter to the Learned Judge—in what is known as Extra Cursum Curiae jurisdiction of this Court.

It is further recorded that all parties agree that they will not prefer any appeal from or against the decree or order that may be passed by his Lordship the Hon'ble Mr Justice Mallick."

2 When this note was recorded all the parties to the two proceedings were represented through their counsel. In pursuance of this agreement, Mallick, J. passed an order in Suit No 1045/1957 on 1st April, 1963. It may be mentioned that the main dispute in the present case is whether this order of Mallick, J. in this partition suit amounts to an award or a judgment in a suit. On the same day, by a separate order, he also granted Letters of Administration in the Testamentary Suit. On 5th April, 1963, Arati Paul filed an objection to the recording of this order as a judgment. On 4th May, 1963, drafts of decrees drawn up in terms of that order were issued. On 13th May, 1963, Arati Paul applied for change of her Attorney in the partition Suit No 1045/1957. On 17th May, 1963, the order of Mallick, J. dated 1st April, 1963 was filed on the record of Suit No 1045/1957 as a judgment. On 24th July, 1963, the application of Arati Paul for change of Attorney was allowed. Thereafter, on 20th August, 1963, Arati Paul presented a Letter of Demand to the Registrar of the Original Side of the High Court to recall, cancel and withdraw the filing of the order of Mallick, J. dated 1st April, 1963 from the record of the suit and to take it off the file of that suit.

3 Failing to get any response, Arati Paul, on 4th September, 1963, presented a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution praying for issue of a writ in the nature of mandamus directing the Registrar of the High Court on the Original Side to forthwith recall, cancel and withdraw the filing of the said pretended Award (that is how the order of Mallick, J. was described in this petition) dated 1st April, 1963 as a judgment in the said Suit No 1045/1957 as part of the records of the said suit, and another writ of mandamus directing the Registrar of the High Court to forthwith take off the said pretended Award dated 1st April, 1963 from the file and/or records of the said Suit No. 1045/1957. In this petition, apart from the Registrar of the High Court on the Original Side, Balai, Kanai and Gour were also impleaded as opposite parties. This petition under Article 226 of the Constitution was numbered as Matter No 366 of 1963 and was summarily rejected by Banerjee, J. on 5th September, 1963. On 16th September, 1963, Appeal No. 228 of 1963 was entertained against this judgment under the Letters Patent, but an application presented for an interim injunction restraining the Registrar from taking any steps pursuant to the judgment of Mallick, J. dated 1st April, 1963 pending disposal of the appeal was rejected. On 27th November, 1963, Arati Paul obtained special leave to appeal from this Court against the refusal of the interim injunction by the interlocutory order dated 16th September, 1963. While this appeal was still pending in this Court, the Appellate Bench of the High Court, on 28th April, 1964, allowed Appeal No 228 of 1963, directed issue of a Rule in Matter No 366 of 1963, and ordered stay of all proceedings pursuant to the order of Mallick, J. dated 1st April, 1963, till the final disposal of the Rule. Since the appeal in this Court had become infructuous, it was not prosecuted and was dismissed for non-prosecution on 29th April, 1964. On 10th June, 1964, two of the parties Kanai and Balai took out a notice of motion for revocation of Letters of Administration which had been granted to Arati Paul by the order of Mallick, J. dated 1st April, 1963 in the Testamentary Suit. This notice was returnable on 15th June, 1964. Matter No 366 of 1963, having been remanded by the Appellate Bench, appeared for final hearing before Sinha, J. on 15th July, 1964, but it was directed to go out of the list as an objection was taken on behalf of Kanai and Balai to the matter being taken up by him on the ground that he was a member of the Appellate Bench which had directed issue of the Rule in that Matter. On 16th July, 1964, this Matter No. 366/1963 was mentioned before the Chief Justice for being assigned to some other Judge, when a direction was made by the Chief Justice that a letter should be written by the party concerned to his Secretary. On 27th July, 1964, the Notice of Motion taken out by Kanai and Balai for revocation of Letters of Administration was partly heard by Mallick, J. who recorded the following minutes—

"Part Heard The Rule issued by the Appeal Court in Matter No. 366/63 in the matter of Arati Paul v. Registrar, O. S., appears to be intimately connected with the application that is now pending before me. I direct that this matter with the said Matter No. 366 be placed before the Hon'ble C. J. for proper determination. Let this matter along with the matters appear day after tomorrow when I shall give directions. Interim Order to continue except that Arati Paul will collect rent."

It appears that, simultaneously with these proceedings, an application for taking proceedings for Contempt of Court were also pending before him in this connection. Hearing in Matter No. 366/1963 was concluded on 12th August, 1964, and then an order was made that this Matter as well as the proceedings relating to Notice of Motion for revocation of the Letters of Administration and the application for taking proceedings for contempt should appear in the list for judgment one after the other. On 26th August 1964, Mallick, J. passed an order discharging the Rule in Matter No. 366/1963 as well as dismissing the other two applications. Subsequently, on 1st September, 1964, the preliminary decree drawn up on the basis of the order of Mallick, J. dated 1st April, 1963 in Partition Suit No. 1045/1957 was signed by him, and on 3rd September, 1964, the decree was filed. On 21st September, 1964, Arati Paul filed Appeal No. 226 of 1964 challenging the order dated 26th August, 1964 passed by Mallick, J. dismissing Matter No. 366 of 1963. The appeal was dismissed by the Appellate Bench of the High Court on 18th February, 1965 and the order of the High Court in the appeal was filed on 16th March, 1965. Arati Paul then applied for a certificate under Article 133 (1) of the Constitution for leave to appeal to this Court. That having been refused, she obtained special leave from this Court and has now come up in this appeal challenging the confirmation by the Appellate Bench of the order of dismissal of Matter No. 366 of 1963.

4. The prayer in the writ petition (Matter No. 366/1963) has been pressed before us by Mr. Chagla on behalf of the appellant on the sole ground that the order of Mallick, J. dated 1st April, 1963 was in the nature of an award made by an arbitrator and not a judgment in the partition suit, so that the appellant was entitled to obtain a writ for its recall, cancellation and withdrawal and for taking it off the record of the suit. Being a mere award of an arbitrator, it could not be treated as a judgment in the suit, nor could a decree be drawn up on its basis. On behalf of the respondents other than the Registrar of the High Court on the Original Side, Mr. Goswami has argued that, even though, under the agreement dated 4th January, 1963, Mallick, J. was requested to act extra cursum curiae and the suit was left to his arbitration, he, in fact, when passing the order dated 1st April, 1963, acted as a Court and passed a preliminary decree. According to him, a preliminary decree in a suit for partition can only be passed by a Court and not by an arbitrator when giving an award in the dispute referred to him. He has, therefore, urged that the Registrar was right in filing that order on the record of Suit No. 1045 of 1957 as a judgment, and no writ of mandamus can be issued to him to recall, cancel or withdraw it or take it off the record. Learned Counsel for the Registrar also urged that all that the Registrar did was to file the order of Mallick, J. in accordance with the Rules of Court, because it was a judgment passing a preliminary decree in the suit, so that the appellant was not entitled to the writ of mandamus sought in Matter No. 366 of 1963.

5. Mr. Chagla, in support of his argument, relied primarily on two decisions of Courts in England and on the principle enunciated by Russell in his book on "The Law of Arbitration", 17th Edn. In this book at p. 117, Russell has enunciated the principle as follows:—

"The subject-matter of an action may be referred to a Judge as arbitrator. The Judge in such a case will, if such is the intention of the parties, be merely an arbitrator and have no special powers by virtue of the fact that he is a Judge, and his award will not be subject to appeal." After laying down this principle, Russell goes on to elaborate it in the subsequent notes with reference to some decisions, and one of these principles enunciated is:

"When, with the consent of both parties, a judge deviates from the regular course of procedure of the court, he ceases to act judicially and becomes an arbitrator, whose decision is subject to no appeal." In support of this last proposition, Russell has quoted the decisions in Bickett v. Morris, (1866) 1 Sc & Div 47 (HL) and White v. Buccleuch (Duke), (1866) 1 Sc & Div 70 (HL). We examined the decisions in these two cases, but could not find any specific statement in them that the decision given by a Judge on deviation from the regular course of procedure of the Court has to be held to be an award, though it was held in both cases that it would not be subject to an appeal.

6. The principal case on which reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant is the decision of the House of Lords in Robert Murray Burgess v. Andrew Morton, 1896 AC 136. In that case, a suit was first brought for recovery of a certain amount and the cause was set down for trial before the Lord Chief Justice, when there being no likelihood of its being reached, the parties, with the consent of the learned Judge, agreed to withdraw it from trial, and to state a special case for the decision of the court. It was held by the House of Lords that the special case so stated did not raise directly any question of law and its decision only depended on questions of fact, so that the statement of the special case did not confer jurisdiction on the Court to deal with it as such. The learned Judges of the Divisional Court seized of the special case pointed out the incompetency and inexpediency of trying such a question by means of a special case, but expressed their willingness to do the best they could to decide it, if the parties desired them to do so, and on that footing, they heard the case and gave judgment. On appeal, the Court of Appeal reversed that judgment. This judgment of the Court of Appeal was brought up before the House of Lords which had to consider the nature of the judgment given by the Divisional Court. Lord Watson in his speech held—

"There are several decisions of this House, in cases coming from Scotland, which appear to me to affirm that the judgment of a court below, pronounced extra cursum curiae, is in the nature of an arbitrator's award, and that, as a general rule at least, no appeal from it will lie. An appeal was held, on that ground, to be incompetent in Craig v. Duffus, (1849) 6 Bell's SC App 208, Dudgeon v. Thomson (1854) 1 Macq 711 and Magistrates of Renfrew v. Hoby, (1855) 2 Macq 478." Lord Shird also expressed a similar view, taking note of the fact that, as soon as it became apparent to the learned Judges of the Divisional Court that the special case raised only a question of fact for their determination, they would have been warranted in declining to give judgment on it. It was apparent that the learned Judges yielded to the entreaties of both parties in entertaining and disposing of the case, and on this basis, expressed his opinion as follows—

"I agree in thinking that the proceeding was extra cursum curiae, and that the decision of the dispute between the parties was of the nature of an award by arbitrators as, indeed, the learned Judges of the Divisional Court seem themselves to have thought, as appears not only from the terms of Wills J's judgment, but from the observations of both Judges when the defendant proposed to appeal."

7. Reliance was also placed on the decision of Goddard, J. in Wyndham v. Jackson, (1937) 3 All ER 677. The facts of that case were that the plaintiff issued a writ in the Chancery Division claiming an account and payment of all sums due to her under a contract entered into by the plaintiff with the defendant. An order was made in the action by consent directing an account and the master, who dealt with that order, extended the ambit of his enquiry beyond the terms of the order at the invitation of both parties, gave a decision on a matter which was not covered by the Judge's order for an account, and issued a certificate to the effect that a certain sum was due from the defendant to the plaintiff. The question that was raised before Goddard, J. by the plaintiff was that she was entitled to recover the amount certified by the master on the ground that the certificate was equivalent to an award having been made pursuant to an oral submission by counsel, who asked him to deal with all matters in dispute, though not technically covered by the order directing an account. It was also submitted on her behalf that the minute in the master's book, indicating an order that he was prepared to make on the plaintiff's application for an order for payment, was also an award entitling her, not only to the amount mentioned but also to the costs of the Chancery proceedings. After considering the views expressed in a number of cases, Goddard, J. held—

"I must take it that it has been finally decided in a matter between the parties, that the certificate was given ex cursum curiae. Then as I find it was the result of a hearing which both parties requested, and to which they assented, I think it falls within the line of cases on which the plaintiff relies, and can be enforced as an award."

This case went up in appeal before the Court of Appeal whose decision is reported in Wyndham v. Jackson, (1938) 2 All ER 109. That Court differed from Goddard, J. on the nature of the order made by the master and held that the determination by the master was not a final determination and was never intended to be treated as a final arrangement between the parties. That matter was still to go before the Judge who had made the order for account and the master's certificate could not be binding until it had been confirmed by the Judge. The position of the master was held to be exactly analogous to the position of an arbitrator to whom the court may have referred a matter to make a report to the court in order that the court may give a final decision between the parties. On this view, the Appeal Court did not go into the question whether the decision given by the master amounted to a decision given extra cursum curiae and whether it was enforceable as an award. The award of the master, being treated as provisional and subject to confirmation by the Judge, could obviously not be enforced as such. Thus, the view expressed by Goddard, J. that the decision of the master could be enforced as an award, if it had been final, was neither affirmed nor set aside.

8. The cases in India relied upon are two decisions of the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts. In Sayad Zain v. Kalabhai Lallubhai, (1898) ILR 23 Bom 752, before the case came to a regular hearing before the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Surat, the parties as well as their pleaders signed an application which ran as follows:—

"We have decided that the Court should make a settlement of the dispute between us according to Chapter XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code, and we will abide by whatever decision the Court may give.

We have specially decided that the Court should have full authority to obtain information from the parties in whatever way the Court may think proper, but the parties are not to produce any evidence except documentary records."

The Subordinate Judge, in pursuance of this agreement, proceeded to deal with the case and ordered defendant to pay plaintiff a certain sum, having dispensed with the requirement of going through the formal procedure of rejecting the suit and registering their application as a fresh suit, because the parties referred him to the decision in Raoji Trimbak Nagarkar v. Govind Vinayak Nagarkar, (1897) Bom PJ 413. An appeal against this decision was taken to the High Court of Bombay which noted the fact that the Subordinate Judge had referred to the case mentioned above and held:—

"The very mention of that case shows that the parties must have intended that the decision of the Subordinate Judge as arbitrator should be final. In that case, as in this the parties solemnly agreed by themselves and by their pleaders to abide by the decision of the Court to be made in a particular way. They cannot, therefore, appeal from it."

The Court further expressed the opinion that:

"The fact that the express provisions of Chapter XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code were knowingly disregarded, shows that the proceedings were extra cursum curiae, and thus the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was in the nature of an arbitrator's award, against which an appeal cannot be entertained if the competency of the Appellate Court is objected to by the party holding the judgment. The fact that the Subordinate Judge gave his award in the form of a decree will not make it a decree from which a regular appeal can lie."

In Baikanta Nath Goswami v. Sita Nath Goswami, (1911) ILR 38 Cal 421 after the hearing of a suit in a Munsif Court had commenced and some evidence had been recorded, the parties agreed to leave the questions in dispute between them to the determination of the Munsif after he had inspected the locality, and also agreed not to raise any objection to the decision so arrived at by the Munsif and to hold themselves bound by the decision of the Munsif. It was specifically stated in the agreement that neither of the parties shall be competent to raise any objection to the decision or to prefer an appeal. Acting on this submission, the Munsif made a local inspection and passed an order with which the plaintiffs were not content, so that they applied to the Munsif under Section 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, for a review. The Munsif granted the review and passed a second order in modification of his first order, and again embodied the order in what purported to be a decree in the suit. Against this decree, an appeal was filed by the defendants before the District Judge who entertained the appeal and made an order of remand. On second appeal, the High Court of Calcutta held that the first judgment of the Munsif was in the nature of an award and that it did not lose that character because he embodied the operative part of that judgment in what purported to be a decree in the suit. He was in fact an arbitrator by the submission of the parties and his decision was an award. It was not open to him to alter that award when made or to review his decision. It was further held that no appeal, consequently, lay to the District Judge against that decision. It is on the basis of these cases that it was argued that, in the present case also, the order made by Mallick, J. should be held by us to be in the nature of an award made by an arbitrator, so that it cannot be treated as a decree and filed as such in the partition suit which was pending before him.

9. As against these cases cited on behalf of the appellant, our attention has been drawn on behalf of the respondents to the views in Halsbury's Laws of England, and to certain decisions of Courts in India. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edn Vol. 2, at p. 8 in para. 15, it is stated —

"An arbitration agreement must be an agreement to refer disputes to some person or persons other than a court of competent jurisdiction. In principle, a judge sitting extra cursum curiae may sit as arbitrator under an arbitration agreement and a reference to a foreign court has been treated as an arbitration agreement for the purpose of exercising the jurisdiction to grant a stay of proceedings arising out of the same subject-matter. An agreement that the decision of a judge sitting in court should be unappealable is however, despite the language of some of the decisions cited, not an arbitration agreement, the decision, when given, is a judgment not an award and the judge is not placed in the position of an arbitrator." Reliance is placed particularly on the last sentence of the above extract from Halsbury's Laws of England.

10. In Nidumarthi Mukkanti v. Thammarai Ramayya, (1903) ILR 26 Mad 76 parties in a suit pending before the District Munsif presented a petition undertaking that both parties would abide by the decision of the Court that may be passed, as it thinks just, after perusing the documents filed by both parties and all the records in the said suit, and after measuring the sites and inspecting the marks, etc., which are thereon. The District Munsif ordered accordingly, inspected the site, and found in favour of the plaintiff and pronounced judgment giving him the order claimed, and granted the injunction. It was held by the Madras High Court on appeal that the District

Munsif acted as arbitrator by consent of parties and that, consequently no appeal lay from his decision which must be looked on as an award. It was, however, added that, as no attempt had been made to attack that award on any of the grounds specified in Section 521 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court must look on the decree of the District Munsif as one passed in accordance with the award and uphold it as such.

11. In Chinna Venkatasami Naicken v. Venkatasami Naicken, ILR 42 Mad 625 = (AIR 1920 Mad 800) in a suit for money due upon a mortgage bond, after the examination of some witnesses, parties agreed to refer the questions of law and fact arising in the case to the decision of three persons, viz., the Subordinate Judge and two friends of the parties. An award was made by the majority. Thereupon, an application was presented by the defendants to set aside the award on various grounds. The Subordinate Judge overruled the objections and passed a decree in accordance with the award. In the revision before the Madras High Court, the main ground taken was that the reference to the Subordinate Judge as one of the arbitrators was illegal and that the whole award was vitiated thereby. Seshagiri Ayyar, J., in confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge held —

"In my opinion, therefore, although the procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge in dealing with the matter as if it was a reference under the second schedule and as if the provisions of the Code applied was wrong, inasmuch as a decree was passed in terms of the award, the defendant as a party to the reference is not entitled to contest its finality and to request that the case should be heard again."

Wallis, C. J., said —

"I think a reference of the suit to the Presiding Judge must be held to be altogether extra cursum curiae and not the less so when two others are joined with him, and that the decree passed in accordance with their decision must be regarded as a consent decree, and as not subject to the provisions of the second schedule."

12. In N. Venkata Somavajulu Garu v. A. Venkanna, ILR 53 Mad 31 = (AIR 1934 Mad 337) in a suit claiming an easement of necessity in respect of certain lands, the District Munsif, at the request of the defendant made a local inspection of the site, whereafter the plaintiff was examined-in-chief and some documents were filed. Thereafter, the parties requested the Court to give a decision on the evidence already on the record and intimated that they proposed to adduce no further evidence. The Munsif gave his decision partly in favour of the plaintiff and partly against him. The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge who dismissed the appeal, holding it to be barred by reason of the joint statement given by the parties before the Munsif. On further appeal, the High Court of Madras held that, although the proceeding was not extra cursum curiae, the right of appeal was nevertheless barred by reason of the special agreement.

13. In K. P. Dalal v. R. S. Jamadar, AIR 1945 Bom 478 in an application registered as a suit for ejectment from a premises, the Judge trying the suit, at the first hearing of the suit, after pleadings of parties had been put in, enquired of the advocates of the parties as to whether they wanted a formal trial or whether they were prepared to leave the matter to him to be summarily decided as an arbitrator after hearing the respective advocates and inspecting the premises. Both the advocates agreed to the learned Judge hearing the facts from them and after inspection of the premises by the Court to submit to his decision as suggested. Thereafter, the Judge inspected the premises and ultimately on a further agreement by both parties that the matters in dispute should be decided by the Judge as an arbitrator, he gave his decision. When the case came up in revision before the Bombay High Court, the learned Judge of that Court referred to the quotations from Halsbury's Laws of England and Russell on Arbitration which we have noticed earlier, and expressed his opinion that he did not think that those observations necessarily meant that the Judge ceased to be a Judge and became a pure arbitrator in the sense that he could refer the dispute to himself and also remit the award to himself. The order of the trial Judge dismissing the application and making no order as to costs was upheld on the view that the trial Judge had not lost his capacity as a Judge and had not become a pure arbitrator governed by the Arbitration Act and, therefore, the provisions of that Act would not apply to him, so that the order passed by the trial Judge was correct.

14. In Baijnath v. Dhaní Ram, ILR 51 All 903 = (AIR 1929 All 747) a suit for declaration, removal of certain encroachments, and a perpetual injunction came for trial before the Munsif where the parties agreed that the Munsif should decide the case on inspection of the documents filed by the parties and on inspection of the locality. They further agreed to accept the decision of the Munsif. The Munsif wrote a judgment and decreed the suit in part. There was an appeal to the District Judge which was dismissed and the second appeal came before the High Court of Allahabad which was also dismissed. While the appeal before the District Judge was pending an application for review of judgment was also presented before the Munsif. In disposing of this application, the Munsif held that he was an arbitrator and that his decision was binding on the parties, so that an application for review did not lie as there was no sufficient cause for review. This order was again taken up in Revision before the High Court, and the question arose whether the Munsif could not entertain the application for review because he was an arbitrator. The Court held:—

"The Munsif, in accepting the position of an arbitrator, had a two-fold capacity. He was an arbitrator, but he was also the court. If the arbitrator left anything undecided, the parties would be entitled to go to the court and to ask the court to remit the award to the arbitrator. The fact that the two capacities were constituted in the same person should not deprive a party of his right of having matters set right."

On this view, the Court was of the opinion that an application for review lay against the judgment of the Munsif, allowed the revision and directed the Munsif to take up the application for review afresh and consider it on the merits.

15. In Kotamma v. Mangamma, AIR 1957 Andh Pra 700, in a suit for mandatory injunction directing the defendants to remove certain constructions and for a permanent injunction restraining them from obstructing the flow of surplus water from plaintiff's land, the parties, after a Commissioner appointed to inspect the locality had prepared certain plans and submitted his reports, signed and filed a memorandum before the District Munsif in the following terms:—

"Both parties agreed to abide by the decision of the Hon'ble Court after personal inspection. The parties are not adducing oral evidence. Documentary evidence can be received."

The District Munsif inspected the locality, placed on record a detailed note of the physical features of the locality, etc., and on the basis of the Commissioner's plans and reports and his own personal inspection, gave a judgment for the plaintiffs. A decree was also drawn up in the usual course. The first defendant preferred an appeal which was rejected by the first appellate court on the ground that it was incompetent. In second appeal before the Andhra Pradesh High Court, the question arose whether the first appellate Court was right in holding that no appeal lay to it from the decree of the trial Court. A learned single Judge of the Andhra Pradesh High Court differed from the view expressed in Nidamarthi Mukkanti's case, (1903) ILR 26 Mad 76 (Supra) and held that there could not be a reference to arbitration by the Judge to himself. He expressed the view by saying

"It would be fantastic to say that in a case like the present, the Court made a reference to itself, fixed the time for the making of the award, stayed its hand till the expiry of the time fixed for the submission of the award, received the award, gave time for objections to the award, heard the objection and, finding no grounds for setting aside the award, pronounced judgment in accordance therewith."

He went on to hold—

"The Arbitration Act of 1910 makes it clear that a reference to arbitration could be made only in accordance with the Act and the procedure prescribed by the Act should have been followed before Sections 17 and 39 of the Act barring appeals from decrees on awards, could be invoked. Consequently, the decision of the trial Court could not be treated as the award of an arbitrator and the decree that followed, could not be held to be a decree on an award and therefore not open to appeal."

He then proceeded to examine the question whether, there being no statutory provisions barring a right of appeal in that case, there was any principle of law which denied the parties of the right of appeal. He noted the fact that, in that case, there was no express agreement not to appeal, but the controversy turned on the question whether, by their conduct, the parties should be deemed to have given up their right of appeal and whether the waiver of the right of appeal should be implied from the terms of the agreement between the parties.

The learned Judge held that there had been no waiver of the right of appeal, so that the appeal before the first appellate Court was competent. The order dismissing that appeal was set aside and the case was remanded for a decision of the appeal on merits.

16 Reference may also be made to a decision of the Privy Council in Pisani v. Attorney-General of Gibraltar, (1874) LR 5 PC 516. In that case, the Crown claimed certain lands as escheated for want of heirs of the deceased owner. The defendants to the action were a purchaser from that owner, a person who claimed that the purchaser was only a trustee for him, and certain legatees and beneficiaries under a will of the deceased. During the course of trial it became evident that the title of the Crown by escheat was unsustainable, but, instead of dismissing the suit, the Court, with the consent of the parties, allowed an amendment of the pleadings by the addition of a prayer that the rights of the several defendants might be ascertained and declared by the decree of the Court. The Court then enquired into the rival claims of the defendants, and declared their respective rights. One of the defendants preferred an appeal from the judgment to the Privy Council and a preliminary objection was taken to the competency of the appeal. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that, though the amendment of the pleadings in the Court below could not have been made except by consent of parties and though the Court below had been invited by the rival claimants to adjudicate upon their rights inter se, there was no stipulation that the right of appeal should be given up. The parties did not contemplate that the Judge was to hear the cause otherwise than as a Judge or that the litigation was not to go on subject to all the incidents of a cause regularly heard in Court, including an appeal to the Judicial Committee. There was nothing in the proceedings suggesting that the parties waived their right of appeal. It was in this context that the Judicial Committee made the following observations—

"It is true that there was a deviation from the cursum curiae, but the Court had jurisdiction over the subject and the assumption of the duty of another tribunal is not involved in the question. Departures from ordinary practice by consent are of everyday occurrence, but unless there is an attempt to give the Court jurisdiction which it does not possess, or something occurs which is such a violent strain upon its procedure that it puts it entirely out of its course, so that a Court of appeal cannot properly review the decision, such departures have never been held to deprive either of the parties of the right of appeal."

The Privy Council added that it was wrong to regard the decision of the Court as an award of an arbitrator or to attribute an intention to the parties that the decision should not be open to appeal.

17. A review of all these decisions shows that the question as to the nature of an order made in circumstances similar to those with which we are concerned has been considered both in England and in India primarily for the purpose of deciding whether such an order is subject to an appeal like an ordinary judgment of a Court from which an appeal lies. In some cases, the right of appeal was negatived on the ground that such a decision was in the nature of an arbitrator's award. In other cases, it has been treated as a judgment amounting to a decision by consent of parties. In the case before us, the position is different. No appeal was ever sought to be filed against the order of Mallick, J. dated 1st April, 1963. Further the language of the agreement of the parties, on the basis of which Mallick, J. proceeded to make that order was different from that considered in these various decisions. At the first stage, the parties got it recorded that the matters were to be settled and referred to the sole arbitration of Mallick, J. The parties agreed to abide by any decision that might be given by him and that no evidence need be taken except or to whatever extent Mallick, J. might desire. The evidence need not be recorded in any formal manner. Mallick, J. was to have all the summary powers including the power to divide and partition the properties. The conferment of these powers on Mallick, J., who was already seized of the partition suit, was clearly intended to enable him to function as an arbitrator so as not to be bound by the rules of procedure applicable to him as a Court. At the same time, the parties added that Mallick, J. was to make such decrees as he thought fit and proper and, for the purpose of partition, if necessary, he could engage or appoint surveyors and Commissioners as he thought best. On the face of it, an arbitrator could not pass any decree. The decree could only be passed by Mallick, J. in his capacity of Court seized of the suit. Even if it be held that the first part of the agreement had the effect of bringing about a reference to him in his capacity as arbitrator, he did not cease to be seized of the partition suit as a Court. Even under the Arbitration Act, if a reference is made to an arbitrator in a suit pending in a Court, the Court does not cease to have jurisdiction over the suit. All that is required by the provisions of the Arbitration Act is that no further proceedings are to be taken by the Court, except in accordance with the other provisions of that Act. The suit continues to remain pending before the Court. In a case like the present, where the arbitration agreement envisages that the Presiding Officer of the Court should himself act as an arbitrator, he, in such circumstances, will obviously occupy a dual capacity. He will be both an arbitrator to decide the matters referred to him by the agreement of the parties, and a Court before which the suit continues to remain pending having jurisdiction to deal with the suit in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act. It is a question whether a reference to arbitration by a Presiding Judge, before whom a suit is pending, can be competently made under the Arbitration Act, but that is a point on which we need express no opinion, because if it be held that there was no reference to arbitration in the present case, the order passed by Mallick, J. must be held to be a preliminary decree passed by him as a Court seized of the partition suit. On the other hand, even if it be held that there was a competent reference, it is clear that, after deciding the matters left to his decision as an arbitrator by the parties, Mallick, J., proceeded further to deal with the suit himself as a Court and to pass a preliminary decree in it which course being adopted by him was envisaged by the parties themselves when they stated that he could make such decrees in the suit as he thought fit. The actual order passed by Mallick, J. also makes it clear that, in passing that order, he purported to act as the Court deciding the suit, and not as the arbitrator to whom some matters in dispute were referred by the parties. At the beginning of the order, Mallick J. described himself as "the Court." When making the operative order, he used the following language:—

"In the result, for the present, I will pass a preliminary decree as under:—"

On the face of it, when he passed this order, he acted as a Judge seized of the suit who alone was competent to pass the preliminary decree in the suit. Consequently, we cannot accept the submission made by Mr Chagla that the order made by Mallick, J should be held to be an award of an arbitrator pure and simple and not a decree by a Court.

18 We are not concerned in this appeal with the question whether it was appropriate for Mallick, J to have dealt with the suit in this manner, nor whether the actual order made by him passing the preliminary decree was correct or was liable to be set aside on the ground of the incorrect procedure adopted by him. As we have mentioned earlier, the sole relief claimed before the High Court was the issue of a writ of mandamus directing the Registrar on the Original Side to recall, cancel and withdraw this order and to take it off the record, on the ground that it was an award and not a judgment of the Court. Since we have held that it was a judgment of the Court, the Registrar on the Original Side, under the Rules of the Calcutta High Court, was bound to file it on the record and retain it there. The appellant could have sought appropriate remedy for having that judgment vacated and, if such a remedy had been sought against that judgment directly, the question whether it was a good judgment and should be retained on the record or not could have been appropriately decided. The remedy sought by the appellant of seeking a writ to restrain the Registrar on the Original Side from keeping the judgment on the record of the suit could not possibly be allowed, while the judgment stood and was not vacated.

19 In the result, we have to hold that the order of the High Court dismissing the petition filed by the appellant was correct and justified. The appeal is dismissed, but, in view of the special circumstances of this case, we direct parties to bear their own costs.

(V 50 C 209)

(From Punjab)*

J G SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Giani Ram and others, Appellants v.
Ramji Lal and others, Respondents

Civil Appeal No 438 of 1966, D/- 11-3-1959

(A) Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act (1 of 1920), Section 8 — Alienation of ancestral land without necessity by Hindu Jat — Suit by competent reversioner — Effect — Declaratory decree enures in favour of all heirs including female heirs — (Custom (Punjab) — Succession) — (Hindu Succession Act (1956), Sections 2, 4 (1)) — Unreported decision in S. A. No 254 of 1962, D/- 18-11-1963 (Punj), Reversed.

Under the customary law in force in the Punjab a declaratory decree obtained by the reversionary heir in an action to set aside the alienation of ancestral property enured in favour of all persons who ultimately took the estate on the death of the alienor. The decree obtained by a competent reversioner did not make the alienation a nullity, it removed the obstacle to the right of the reversioner entitled to succeed when the succession opened and restored the property alienated to the estate of the alienor.

A Hindu Jat of Hissar district alienated a share in ancestral land without legal necessity in 1916. In 1920 his eldest son sued and obtained a declaratory decree that the sale was ineffective against his reversionary rights. The alienor died in 1959 leaving behind him his widow, three sons and two daughters.

Held that after the enactment of the Hindu Succession Act the estate devolved, by virtue of Sections 2 and 4 (1) of the Act, upon the three sons, the widow and the two daughters and it could not be said that because in the year 1920 the wife and the daughters were incompetent to challenge the alienation of ancestral property, they could not inherit his estate when the succession opened after that Act came into force. Unreported decision in (S. A. No 254 of 1962, D/- 18-11-1963 (Punj), Reversed.

(B) Civil P. C. (1905), Order 41, Rule 33 — "Which ought to have been passed" —

(S. A. No. 254 of 1962, D/- 18-11-1963 — Punj)

Meaning of — Decree allowing claims of female heirs who had not appealed passed — (Custom (Punjab) — Succession) — (Words and phrases).

The expression "which ought to have been passed" means "which ought in law to have been passed". If the Appellate Court is of the view that any decree which ought in law to have been passed, but was in fact not passed by the subordinate court, it may pass or make such further or other decree or order as the justice of the case may require.

Held on facts that as the claim of the alienee to retain any part of ancestral land after the death of the alienor was negatived it would be perpetrating grave injustice to deny to the widow and the two daughters their share in the property to which they were in law entitled, and that the case was one in which the power under Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure ought to have been exercised and the claim not only of the three sons but also of the widow and the two daughters ought to have been decreed though they had not appealed against the decree of the lower appellate court.

(Para 9)

(C) Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act (1 of 1920), Section 8 — Alienation of ancestral land without necessity by Hindu Jat in 1916 — Decree obtained by competent reversioner in 1920 declaring alienation ineffective against his reversionary interest — Death of alienor after Hindu Succession Act — Held that the latter Act did not retrospectively enlarge the power of the holder of ancestral land and did not nullify the decree obtained before the Act — (Hindu Succession Act (1956), Section 4).

(Para 4)

Mr. Mohan Behari Lal, Advocate, for Appellants; M/s. I. M. Lal and M. L. Agarwal, Advocates, for Respondents.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: In 1916 Jwala—a Hindu Jat—governed by the customary law of the Punjab sold to one Shadi, without legal necessity, a fourth share in 891 bighas 3 biswas, which was ancestral in his hands. Giani Ram son of Jwala instituted Suit No. 75 of 1920 in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Hissar, for a declaration that the sale of ancestral lands of Jwala in favour of Shadi was null and void and was ineffective against his reversionary rights. The suit was decreed by the Senior Subordinate Judge Hissar.

The effect of the declaratory decree was that the alienations could not enure beyond the lifetime of Jwala.

2. Jwala died on October 16, 1959, leaving him surviving three sons—Giani Ram, Manphool and Chandgi—his wife Rajni, and two daughters Phulwati and Chhanno. Under the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 which came into force on June 17, 1956, the estate of Jwala devolved upon his widow, his sons and his daughters in equal shares. In an action filed by the three sons of Jwala, his daughters and widow against the legal representatives of Shadi for a decree for possession of the lands alienated by Jwala the Senior Subordinate Judge, Hissar decreed the suit for a half share in the property claimed by the plaintiffs. The learned Judge was of the view that only the sons of Jwala could claim the benefit of the decree in Suit No. 75 of 1920 and since their share in the estate of Jwala was in the aggregate only a half, the remaining half having devolved upon the widow and the two daughters, a decree for a half share in the lands alienated could issue against the alienee.

3. In appeal by the plaintiff to the District Court, Hissar, the decree was modified. The learned District Judge decreed the claim in its entirety but only in favour of the three sons. In his view the sons were entitled to the ancestral property alienated by Jwala and the widow and the two daughters had no interest therein—the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act notwithstanding. Against that decree a second appeal was preferred by the heirs of Shadi. The High Court of Punjab set aside the decree passed by the District Court and restored the decree of the Trial Court. In the view of the High Court under the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, the two daughters and widow of Jwala could inherit a share in the estate of Jwala, but since by Section 8 of the Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act 1 of 1920 only those persons could take the benefit of the declaratory decree obtained by any one of the reversioners, who could contest the alienation by the vendor, and it was a "settled rule of custom that a female heir cannot contest the sale" by a male owner, a half share in the estate of Jwala which devolved upon the sons could be claimed by them, and the widow and the daughters could not obtain benefit of the decree. The High Court also held that the suit filed by the widow and the two daughters had been dismissed by the Trial Court and the District Court and as they had not filed an appeal in the High Court or even cross objections, the order of dismissal qua them had become final, and no decree could be passed in their favour for possession of any part of the estate. With special leave the appellants have appealed to this Court.

4. A preliminary objection raised by counsel for the respondents that the suit in its entirety should have been dismissed because by the enactment of the Hindu Succession Act Jwala was to be deemed a full owner and notwithstanding the decree passed in Suit No 75 of 1920 his sons had after that Act no subsisting reversionary interest in the property, must stand rejected. The High Court has granted a decree in favour of the three sons for a half share in the property, and the decree is not challenged in an appeal by the respondents. The respondents cannot now be permitted to challenge that part of the decree in any event there is nothing in the Hindu Succession Act which retrospectively enlarges the power of a holder of ancestral land or nullifies a decree passed before the Act.

5. The Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act 1 of 1920 was enacted to restrict the rights exercisable by members of the family to contest alienations made by a holder of ancestral property. By virtue of Section 6 of the Act no person is entitled to contest an alienation of ancestral immovable property unless he is descended in the male line from the great-great-grandfather of the alienor. Under the customary law in force in the Punjab a declaratory decree obtained by the reversionary heir in an action to set aside the alienation of ancestral property entered in favour of all persons who ultimately took the estate on the death of the alienor for the object of a declaratory suit filed by a reversionary heir impeaching an alienation of ancestral estate was to remove a common apprehended injury, in the interest of the reversioners. The decree did not make the alienation a nullity—it removed the obstacle to the right of the reversioner entitled to succeed when the succession opened. By the decree passed in suit No 75 of 1920 filed by G. Ram Lal it was declared that the alienations by Jwala were not binding after his lifetime, and the property will revert to his estate. It is true that under the customary law the wife and the daughters of a holder of ancestral property could not sue to obtain a declaration that the alienation of ancestral property will not bind the reversioners after the death of the alienor. But a declaratory decree obtained in a suit instituted by a reversioner competent to sue has the effect of restoring the property alienated to the estate of the alienor.

6. The effect of the declaratory decree in suit No 75 of 1920 was merely to declare that by the sale interest conveyed in favour of the alienee was to endure during the lifetime of the alienor. The conclusion is therefore inevitable that the property alienated reverted to the estate of Jwala at the point of his death and all persons who would, but for the alienation, have taken the estate will be entitled to inherit the same. If Jwala had died before the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 was enacted the three sons would have taken the estate to the exclusion of the widow and the two daughters. After the enactment of the Hindu Succession Act the estate devolved, by virtue of Sections 2 and 4 (1) of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, upon the three sons, the widow and the two daughters. We are unable to agree with the High Court that because in the year 1920 the wife and the daughters of Jwala were incompetent to challenge the alienation of ancestral property by Jwala, they could not, after the enactment of the Hindu Succession Act, inherit his estate when succession opened after that Act came into force.

7. The second ground on which the learned Judge has founded his judgment also does not appeal to us. The three sons, the two daughters and the widow of Jwala had filed the suit claiming possession of the entire property from the alienee. That suit was decreed by the Trial Court in favour of the sons only to the extent of a half share in the property alienated. The Court held that the widow and the daughters were not entitled to a share because "only those persons can bring a suit for possession on the death of Jwala who had the right to challenge the alienation made by Jwala." In appeal the District Court granted a decree for possession of the entire property on the view that the alienee had no subsisting interest after the death of Jwala. But the District Court granted a decree for possession of the entire property alienated only in favour of the three sons, because in the view of the Court the daughters and the widow of Jwala were not entitled to any share in the property. According to the High Court if the widow and the daughters were entitled to the share in the property, they had disentitled themselves to that right, because they had not preferred an appeal or filed cross objections to the decree appealed from. The sons, daughters and widow of Jwala filed a suit for a decree for possession of the entire property and their primary claim was that the alienee had no subsisting interest. The District Court accepted that claim and granted a decree in favour of the three sons for the entire property which was alienated. If the alienees are unable to convince the Court that they had any subsisting interest in the property in dispute after the death of Jwala the Court will be competent to adjust the rights between the sons, the daughters and the widow of Jwala in that property.

8. Order 41, Rule 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure was enacted to meet a situation of the nature arising in this case. In so far as it is material the rule provides:

"The Appellate Court shall have power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and to pass or make such further or other decree or order as the case may require, and this power may be exercised by the Court notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or objection." The expression "which ought to have been passed" means "which ought in law to have been passed". If the Appellate Court is of the view that any decree which ought in law to have been passed, but was in fact not passed by the Subordinate Court, it may pass or make such further or other decree or order as the justice of the case may require.

9. If the claim of the respondents to retain any part of the property after the death of Jwala is negatived it would be perpetrating grave injustice to deny to the widow and the two daughters their share in the property to which they are in law entitled. In our view, the case was one in which the power under Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure ought to have been exercised and the claim not only of the three sons but also of the widow and the two daughters ought to have been decreed.

10. The appeal is allowed and the decree passed by the High Court is modified. There will be a decree for possession of the lands in suit in favour of the three sons, the widow and the two daughters of Jwala. The interest of the three sons is one-half in the lands in suit and the interest of the widow and the two daughters is the other half in the lands. The plaintiffs will be entitled to mesne profits from the date of the suit under Order 20, Rule 12, Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal will be allowed with costs throughout.
DRR Appeal allowed.

M. L. Abdul Jabbar Sahib (In all the Appeals), Appellant v. H. Venkata Sastri and Sons and others etc., Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 272 to 274 of 1966,
D/- 4-2-1969.

(A) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 3 — Word "attested" — Meaning — Essential conditions of valid attestation — Identifier or registering officer is not attesting witness — Registration Act (1908), Section 59 — (Words and Phrases — Attested).

The word "attested", occurs in Sec. 3, T. P. Act, as part of the definition itself. To attest is to bear witness to a fact. The essential conditions of a valid attestation under Section 3 of T. P. Act are: (1) two or more witnesses have seen the executant sign the instrument or have received from him a personal acknowledgment of his signature; (2) with a view to attest or to bear witness to this fact each of them has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant. It is essential that the witness should have put his signature animo attestandi, that is, for the purpose of attesting that he has seen the executant sign or has received from him a personal acknowledgment of his signature. If a person puts his signature on the document for some other purpose, e. g. to certify that he is a scribe or an identifier or a registering officer, he is not an attesting witness. (Para 8)

* (O. S. A. Nos. 65, 70 and 71 of 1956,
D/- 28-7-1961—Mad.)

Prima facie, the registering officer puts his signature on the document in discharge of his statutory duty under Section 59 of Registration Act and not for the purpose of attesting it or certifying that he has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature (Para 10)

(B) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Sections 100, 3 — Scope of Section 100 — Second part of Section 100 does not attract Section 59 of Registration Act — Security bond is not required to be attested — AIR 1939 Mad 202 and AIR 1940 Mad 140, Overruled, O S. A. Nos 65, 70, 71 of 1956, D/- 23-7-1961 (Mad), Reversed — (Registration Act (1908), Sections 59, 17 (1) (b))

The first paragraph of Section 100 of T P Act consists of two parts. The first part concerns the creation of a charge over immovable property. A charge may be made by act of parties or by operation of law. No restriction is put on the manner in which a charge can be made. Where such a charge has been created the second part comes into play. It provides that all the provisions herebefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge. The second part does not address itself to the question of creation of a charge. It does not attract the provisions of Section 59 of Registration Act relating to the creation of a mortgage (Para 14)

With regard to the applicability of the provisions relating to a simple mortgage, the second part of the first paragraph makes no distinction between a charge created by act of parties and a charge by operation of law. Now a charge by operation of law is not made by a signed, registered and attested instrument. Obviously, the second part has not the effect of attracting the provisions of Section 59 to such a charge (Para 15)

If a charge can be made by a registered instrument only in accordance with Section 59 of Registration Act the subsequent transferee will always have notice of the charge in view of Section 3 of T P. Act under which registration of the instrument operates as such a notice. But the basic assumption of the dictum of notice enunciated in the second paragraph is that there may be cases where the subsequent transferee may not have notice of the charge. The plain implication of this paragraph is that a charge can be made without any writing (Para 16)

If a non-testamentary instrument creates a charge of the value of Rs 100/- or upwards, the document must be registered under Section 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act. But there is no provision of law which requires that an instrument creating the charge must be attested by witnesses (Para 17)

Thus, where in suit on promissory notes, a security bond is executed by defendant in respect of immovable properties for the benefit of decree-holder as a charge for decree amount such a security bond is not required to be attested. It is valid and operative if it is duly registered AIR 1939 Mad 202 and AIR 1940 Mad 140, Overruled, O S. A. Nos 65, 70, 71 of 1956, D/- 28-7-1961 (Mad), Reversed, AIR 1950 Nag 117, Approved. (Para 18)

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), Sections 47, 73 (1) Proviso (e), Order 7, Rule 7 and Order 6, Rule 17 — Decree declaring that the security bond in respect of immovable property would enure for the benefit of plaintiffs decree-holders for the decretal amount — This relief granted on oral prayer of plaintiffs — Decree should not be construed as containing merely a recital of the fact that a security bond had been exempted, because of omission to amend prayer by adding prayer for enforcement of charge — On its true construction the decree held declared that the security bond created a charge over the properties in favour of plaintiffs for payment of decretal amount and gave them liberty to apply for sale of properties for the discharge of the incumbrance — Properties sold and assets held by court — Under Section 73 (1) proviso (e) proceeds of sale, after defraying expenses of the sale, must be applied in the first instance in discharging the amount due to the decree-holders and the balance left over distributed amongst other decree-holders applying for rateable distribution. (Paras 19, 21)

(D) Civil P. C. (1908), Sections 21, 73 — Letters Patent (Mad), Clause 12 — Decree-holder creditors applying for rateable distribution of assets held by executing court in respect of another decree passed by High Court cannot challenge the decree under which the assets were held, as invalid, on the ground that High Court had no territorial jurisdiction under Clause 12 of Letters Patent to pass decree for sale of properties outside its local limits of its ordinary original jurisdiction — (Evidence Act (1872), Section 115). and Respondent No. 1 (In C. A. No. 274 of 1966).

The following Judgment of the Court
was delivered by :

BACHAWAT, J. On February 23, 1953 the appellant instituted C. S. No. 56 of 1953 on the Original Side of the Madras High Court under the summary procedure of Order 7 of the Original Side Rules against Hajee Ahmed Batcha claiming a decree for Rs. 40,556-1-2 and Rs. 8327-12-9 said to be due under two promissory notes executed by Hajee Ahmed Batcha.
On March 9, 1953, Hajee Ahmed Batcha obtained leave to defend the suit on condition of his furnishing the security for a sum of Rs. 50,000 to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the High Court. On March 26, 1953 Hajee Ahmed Batcha executed a security bond in favour of the Registrar of the Madras High Court charging several immovable properties for payment of Rs. 50,000. The condition of the bond was that if he paid to the appellant the amount of any decree that might be passed in the aforesaid suit the bond would be void and of no effect and that otherwise it would remain in full force. The bond was attested by B.

Somnath Rao. It was also signed by K. S. Narayana Iyer, Advocate, who explained the document to Hajee Ahmed Batcha and identified him. All the properties charged by the bond are outside the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the Madras High Court.
The document was presented for registration on March 29, 1953 and was registered by D. W. Kittoo, the Sub-Registrar of Madras-Chingleput District. Before the Sub-Registrar, Haji Ahmed Batcha admitted execution of the document and was identified by Senkaranarayan, and Kaki Abdul Azib. The identifying witnesses as also the Sub-Registrar signed the document. Hajee Ahmed Batcha died on February 14, 1954 and his legal representatives were substituted in his place in C. S. No. 56 of 1953. On March 19, 1954 Ramaswami, J. passed a decree for Rs. 49,891-13-0 with interest and costs and directed payment of the decretal amount on or before April 20, 1954. While passing the decree, he observed:— "It is stated that the defendant has executed a security bond in respect of their immovable properties when they obtained leave to defend and this will stand enured to the benefit of the decree-holder as a charge for the decree amount."

2. Clauses 3 and 4 of the formal decree provided:—

"(3) that the security bond executed in respect of their immovable properties by defendants 2 to 4 in pursuance of the order dated 9th March 1953 in application No. 797 of 1953 shall stand enured to the benefit of the plaintiff as a charge for the amounts mentioned in clause 1
supra;

(4) that in default of defendants 2 to 4 paying the amount mentioned in Cl. 1 supra on or before the date mentioned in Clause 2 supra the plaintiff shall be at liberty to apply for the appointment of Commissioners for sale of the aforesaid properties."

3. The appellant filed an application for (a) making absolute the charge decree dated March 31, 1954 and directing sale of the properties; and (b) appointment of Commissioners for selling them. On April 23, 1954 the Court allowed the application, appointed Commissioners for selling of the properties and directed that the relevant title deeds and security bond be handed over to the Commissioners. The Commissioners sold the properties on May 29 and 30, 1954. The sales were confirmed and the sale proceeds were deposited in Court on July 2, 1954.

4. All the three respondents are simple money creditors of Hajee Ahmed Batcha. The respondents Venkata Sastri and Sons filed O S No 13 of 1953 in the Sub-Court, Vellore, and obtained a decree for Rs 5,500 on March 27, 1953. Respondent II R Gowamma instituted O S No 14 of 1953 in the same Court and obtained a money decree on April 14, 1953. The two decree-holders filed applications for execution of their respective decrees. One Rama Sastri predecessor of respondents II R Chidambara Sastri and II R Copal Krishna Sastri obtained a money decree against Hajee Ahmed Batcha in O S No 364 of 1951/52 in the Court of the District Munsiff, Shimoga, got the decree transferred for execution through the Court of the District Munsiff, Vellore, and filed an application for execution in that Court. On June 7, 1954 the aforesaid respondents filed applications in the Madras High Court for (i) transfer of their execution petitions pending in the Vellore Courts to the file of the High Court and (ii) an order for rateable distribution of the assets realized in execution of the decree passed in favour of the appellant in C S No 56 of 1953. The appellant opposed the applications and contended that as the properties were charged for the payment of his decretal amount, the sale proceeds were not available for rateable distribution amongst simple money creditors. The respondents contended that the security bond was invalid as it was not attested by two witnesses and that decree passed in C S No 56 of 1953 did not create any charge. Ralakrishna Ayyar, J. dismissed all the applications as also exemption petitions filed by the respondents. He held that the decree in C S No 56 of 1953 did not create a charge on the properties. But following the decision in Veerappa Chettiar v Subramanya Ayyar, ILR 52 Mad 123 = (AIR 1929 Mad 1) (FB) he held that the security bond was sufficiently attested by the Sub-Registrar and the identifying witnesses. The respondents filed appeals against the orders. On March 25, 1953

the Divisional Bench hearing the appeals referred to a Full Bench the following question

"Whether the decision in ILR 52 Mad 123 = (AIR 1929 Mad 1) (FB) requires reconsideration"

5. The Full Bench held:

"In our opinion, such signatures of the registering officer and the identifying witnesses endorsed on a mortgage document can be treated as those of attesting witnesses if (1) the signatories are those who have seen the execution or received a personal acknowledgment from the executant of his having executed the document, (2) they sign their names in the presence of the executant and (3) while so doing they had the animus to attest. The mere presence of the signatures of the registering officer or the identifying witnesses on the registration endorsements would not by themselves be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of a valid attestation, but it would be competent for the parties to show by evidence that any or all of these persons did in fact intend to and did sign as attesting witness as well."

6. The Full Bench held that the decision in Veerappa Chettiar's Case, ILR 52 Mad 123 = (AIR 1929 Mad 1) (FB) (supra) can be held to be correct to this limited extent only and not otherwise. At the final hearing of the appeals, the Divisional Bench held that (1) a charge by act of parties could be created only by a document registered and attested by two witnesses, (2) the security bond was not attested by two witnesses and was therefore invalid, (3) the decree in C S No 56 of 1953 should be construed as containing nothing more than a recital of the fact of there having been a security bond in favour of the plaintiff, and the sale in execution of the decree must be regarded as a sale in execution of a money decree, and (4) the respondents were entitled to an order for rateable distribution. Accordingly, the Divisional Bench allowed the appeals, directed attachment of the sale proceeds and declared that the respondents were entitled to rateable distribution along with the appellant. The present appeals have been filed after obtaining special leave from this Court.

7. The following questions arise in these appeals. (1) Is the security bond attested by two witnesses, (2) if not, is it invalid? (3) does the decree in C S No 56 of 1953 direct sale of the properties for the discharge of a charge thereon, and

(4) are the respondents entitled to rateable distribution of the assets held by Court? As to the first question, it is not the case of the appellant that K. S. Narayana Iyer is an attesting witness. The contention is that the Sub-Registrar D. W. Kittoo and the identifying witnesses Senkaranarayana and Kaki Abdul Aziz attested the document. In our opinion, the High Court rightly rejected this contention.

8. Section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act gives the definition of the word "attested" and is in these words:—

"'Attested', in relation to an instrument, means and shall be deemed to have meant attested by two or more witnesses each of whom has seen the executant sign or affix his mark to the instrument, or has seen some other person sign the instrument in the presence and by the direction of the executant, or has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person, and each of whom has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant; but it shall not be necessary that more than one of such witnesses shall have been present at the same time and no particular form of attestation shall be necessary."

It is to be noticed that the word "attested", the thing to be defined, occurs as part of the definition itself. To attest is to bear witness to a fact. Briefly put, the essential conditions of a valid attestation under Section 3 are: (1) two or more witnesses have seen the executant sign the instrument or have received from him a personal acknowledgment of his signature; (2) with a view to attest or to bear witness to this fact each of them has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant. It is essential that the witness should have put his signature animo attestandi, that is, for the purpose of attesting that he has seen the executant sign or has received from him a personal acknowledgment of his signature. If a person puts his signature on the document for some other purpose, e.g., to certify that he is a scribe or an identifier or a registering officer, he is not an attesting witness.

9. "In every case the Court must be satisfied that the names were written animo attestandi", see Jarman on Wills, 8th Ed. p. 137. Evidence is admissible to show whether the witness had the intention to attest. "The attesting witnesses must subscribe with the intention that the subscription made should be complete at-testation of the will, and evidence is admissible to show whether such was the intention or not," see Theobald on Wills, 12th Ed. p. 129. In Girja Datt v. Gangotri, AIR 1955 SC 346 (351) the Court held that the two persons who had identified the testator at the time of the registration of the will and had appended their signatures at the foot of the endorsement by the Sub-Registrar, were not attesting witnesses as their signatures were not put "animo attestandi". In Abinash Chandra v. Dasrath Malo, ILR 56 Cal 598=(AIR 1929 Cal 123) it was held that a person who had put his name under the word "scribe" was not an attesting witness as he had put his signature only for the purpose of authenticating that he was a "scribe". In Shiam Sundar Singh v. Jagannath Singh, 54 Mad LJ 43=(AIR 1927 PC 248) the Privy Council held that the legatees who had put their signatures on the will in token of their consent to its execution were not attesting witnesses and were not disqualified from taking as legatees.

10. The Indian Registration Act, 1908 lays down a detailed procedure for registration of documents. The registering Officer is under a duty to enquire whether the document is executed by the person by whom it purports to have been executed and to satisfy himself as to the identity of the executant: Section 34 (3). He can register the document if he is satisfied about the identity of the person executing the document and if that person admits execution: (Section 35 (1)). The signatures of the executant and of every person examined with reference to the document are endorsed on the document: (Sec. 58). The registering officer is required to affix the date and his signature to the endorsements: (Section 59). Prima facie, the registering officer puts his signature on the document in discharge of his statutory duty under Section 59 of Registration Act and not for the purpose of attesting it or certifying that he has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature.

11. The evidence does not show that the registering officer D. W. Kittoo put his signature on the document with the intention of attesting it. Nor is it proved that he signed the document in the presence of the executant. In these circumstances he cannot be regarded as an attesting witness, see Surendra Bahadur v. Behari Singh 1939-2 Mad LJ 762 = (AIR 1939 PC 117). Likewise the identifying witnesses Senkaranarayana and Kaki

Abdul Aziz put their signatures, on the document to authenticate the fact that they had identified the executant. It is not shown that they put their signatures for the purpose of attesting the document. They cannot therefore be regarded as attesting witnesses.

12 It is common case that B Somnath Rao attested the document. It follows that the document was attested by one witness only.

13 As to the second question, the argument on behalf of the respondents is that Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act attracts Section 59 and that a charge can be created only by a document signed, registered and attested by two witnesses in accordance with Sec 59 where the principal money secured is Rs 100 or upwards. The High Court accepted this contention following its earlier decisions in Viswanadhan v. M. S. Menon, ILR (1939) Mad 190=(AIR 1939 Mad 202) and Shiva Rao v. Shanmugasundaraswami, ILR (1910) Mad 306=(AIR 1910 Mad 140) and held that the security bond was invalid, as it was attested by one witness only. We are unable to agree with this opinion. Section 100 is in these terms—

"Where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property, and all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge."

Nothing in this section applies to the charge of a trustee on the trust property for expenses properly incurred in the execution of his trust, and, save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, no charge shall be enforced against any property in the hands of a person to whom such property has been transferred for consideration and without notice of the charge."

14. The first paragraph consists of two parts. The first part concerns the creation of a charge over immovable property. A charge may be made by act of parties or by operation of law. No restriction is put on the manner in which a charge can be made. Where such a charge has been created the second part comes into play. It provides that all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge. The second part does not address itself to the question of creation of a charge. It does not attract the provisions of Section 59 relating to the creation of a mortgage.

15 With regard to the applicability of the provisions relating to a simple mortgage, the second part of the first paragraph makes no distinction between a charge created by act of parties and a charge by operation of law. Now a charge by operation of law is not made by a signed, registered and attested instrument. Obviously, the second part has not the effect of attracting the provisions of Section 59 to such a charge. Likewise the Legislature could not have intended that the second part would attract the provisions of Section 59 to a charge created by act of parties. Had this been the intention of the Legislature the second part would have been differently worded.

16 If a charge can be made by a registered instrument only in accordance with Section 59, the subsequent transferee will always have notice of the charge in view of Section 3 under which registration of the instrument operates as such a notice. But the basic assumption of the doctrine of notice enunciated in the second paragraph is that there may be cases where the subsequent transferee may not have notice of the charge. The plain implication of this paragraph is that a charge can be made without any writing.

17. If a non-testamentary instrument creates a charge of the value of Rs 100 or upwards, the document must be registered under Section 17 (1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act. But there is no provision of law which requires that an instrument creating the charge must be attested by witnesses.

18. Before Section 100 was amended by Act 20 of 1929 it was well settled that the section did not prescribe any particular mode of creating a charge. The amendment substituted the words "all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge" for the words "all the provisions hereinbefore contained as to a mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to the owner of such property, and the provisions of Sections 81 and 82 shall, so far as may be, apply to the person having such charge". The object of the amendment was to make it clear that the rights and liabilities of the parties in case of a charge shall so far as may be, the same as the rights and liabilities of the parties to a simple mortgage. The amendment was not intended to prescribe any particular mode for the creation of a charge. We find that the Nagpur High Court came to a similar conclusion in Bapurao v. Narayan, ILR (1949) Nag 802 at pp. 819-822=(AIR 1950 Nag 117 at pp. 124-125). It follows that the security bond was not required to be attested by witnesses. It was duly registered and was valid and operative.

19. As to the third question, we find that the decree dated March 19, 1954 declared that the security bond in respect of the immovable properties would enure for the benefit of the appellant as a charge for the decretal amount. This relief was granted on the oral prayer of the plaintiffs. We are unable to agree with the High Court that in view of the omission to amend the plaint by adding a prayer for enforcement of the charge, the decree should be construed as containing merely a recital of the fact that a security bond had been executed. In our opinion, the decree on its true construction declared that the security bond created a charge over the properties in favour of the plaintiffs for payment of the decretal amount and gave them the liberty to apply for sale of the properties for the discharge of the incumbrance. Pursuant to the decree the properties were sold and the assets are now held by the Court. The omission to ask for an amendment of the plaint was an irregularity, but that does not affect the construction of the decree.

20. It was suggested that the decree was invalid as the High Court had no territorial jurisdiction under clause 12 of its Letters Patent to pass a decree for sale of properties outside the local limits of its ordinary original jurisdiction. For the purpose of these appeals, it is sufficient to say that the respondents cannot raise this question in the present proceedings. If the decree is invalid and the sale is illegal on this ground, the respondents cannot maintain their applications for rateable distribution of the assets. They can ask for division of the sale proceeds only on the assumption that the properties were lawfully sold. It is therefore unnecessary to decide whether the objection as to the territorial jurisdiction of the High Court has been waived by the judgment-debtor and cannot now be agitated by him and persons claiming through him, having regard to the decisions in Hiralal Patni v. Kali Nath, 1962-2 SCR 1969 S.C./73 XII G—5

747 at pp. 751-2=(AIR 1962 SC 199 at pp. 200-201), Bahrein Petroleum Co., Ltd. v. P. J. Pappu, (1966) 1 SCR 461 at pp. 462-3=(AIR 1966 SC 634 at pp. 635-636), Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Chidambaram Chetty, ILR 43 Mad 675=(AIR 1920 Mad 1019) (FB).

21. As to the 4th question we find that the immovable properties have been sold in execution of a decree ordering sale for the discharge of the encumbrance thereon in favour of the appellant. Section 73 (1), proviso (c) therefore applies and the proceeds of sale after defraying the expenses of the sale must be applied in the first instance in discharging the amount due to the appellant. Only the balance left after discharging this amount can be distributed amongst the respondents. It follows that the High Court was in error in holding that the respondents were entitled to rateable distribution of the assets along with the appellant.

22. In the result, the appeals are allowed, the orders passed by the Divisional Bench of the Madras High Court are set aside and the orders passed by the learned Single Judge are restored. There will be no order as to costs.
SSG/D.V.C. Appeals allowed.

J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI AND
A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Sampat Prakash, Petitioner v. The State of Jammu and Kashmir, Respondent.

Writ Petn. No. 361 of 1968, D/- 6-2-1969.

(A) Public Safety — Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act (13 of 1964), Ss. 13A, 10 and 3 (1) (a) (i) — Section 13A is an exception to Section 10 and other relevant sections — Order of detention with view to detain for more than three months but not more than six months — No necessity to obtain opinion of Advisory Board.

Section 13A authorises the State in the cases specified to detain a person without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board, if he is to be detained for a period longer than three months, but not longer than six months from the date of detention. (Para 5)

Section 13A opens with the words "notwithstanding anything contained in this

Act", and provides that a person may be detained for a period not longer than six months without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board. It is plainly contemplated thereby that the Government may decide not to refer the case of the detenu to the Advisory Board, because the period for which he is to be detained is not to exceed six months. Section 13A is an exception to Section 10 as well as to all other relevant provisions of the Act, and in case of conflict Section 13A prevails. (Para 6)

(B) Public Safety — Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act (13 of 1961), S. 3 (1) (a) (i) — Detention under S. 3 (1) (a) (i) for six months — Opinion of Advisory Board not obtained by virtue of Section 13A (1) — On expiry of six months fresh order of detention issued after cancellation of original order — No proof that Government's action was actuated by illwill or taken for some collateral purpose — Grounds for detention supplied to the detenu along with both orders of detention found not to be identical — Held Government could not be said to have acted mala fide in passing original order or fresh order of detention — (Constitution of India, Articles 32 and 22).

(C) Public Safety — Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act (13 of 1961), Ss. 8 (2), 3 (1) (a) (i) — Order of detention under S. 3 (1) (a) (i) — Grounds for detention specified in annexure appended to order — Order clearly stating that facts relevant to grounds, except those which the Government considered to be against public interest to disclose, intimated to the detenu — Grounds, held, could not be said to be vague and indefinite merely because annexure was somewhat indefinite and vague due to withholding of those facts.

(D) Public Safety — Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act (13 of 1961), S. 3 — Detention — Restrictions to be imposed on detenu — Extent of — (Constitution of India, Arts. 22 and 32).

A detenu is not a convict. Our Constitution, notwithstanding the broad principles of the rule of law, equality and liberty of the individual enshrined therein, tolerates, on account of peculiar conditions prevailing, legislation which is a negation of the rule of law, equality and liberty. But it is implicit in the Constitutional scheme that the power to detain is not a power to punish for offences which an executive authority in his subjective satisfaction believes a citizen to have committed. Power to detain is primarily intended to be exercised in those rare cases when the larger interest of the State demand that restrictions shall be placed upon the liberty of a citizen curbing his future activities. The restrictions so placed must, consistently with the effectiveness of detention, be minimal.

Mr. M. K. Ramamurthi, Senior Advocate, (Mrs. Shyamla Pappu and Mr. Vineet Kumar, Advocates, with him), for Petitioner, M/s. R. Gopalakrishnan and R. N. Sachthley Advocates, for Respondents.

SHAH, J.: On March 16, 1968 the petitioner was arrested and ordered to be detained under S. 3 (1) (a) (i) of the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act 13 of 1961. On March 20, 1968, he was served with the grounds of detention. On May 3, 1968, the petitioner moved a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to this Court. The petition was rejected by this Court on October 10, 1968. In the meanwhile the order dated March 16, 1968, was revoked on September 10, 1968, and another order was served upon the petitioner on the same day. On September 24, 1968, he was served with the grounds of detention for the fresh order, and his case was referred to the Advisory Board on October 26, 1968. On October 30, 1968, the Advisory Board recommended that the petitioner be detained. The petitioner then moved this petition on November 11, 1968 for a writ of habeas corpus.

2. Two contentions in the nature of preliminary objections were raised in support of the petition. It was urged that (1) the petitioner was, in spite of a specific request, denied a personal hearing before the Advisory Board, and (2) that the Chief Minister who was in charge of the portfolio relating to preventive detention did not apply his mind to the case of the petitioner before making the order of detention. (An affidavit is filed by the Secretary to the Government of Jammu and Kashmir affirming that the petitioner made no request for production before the Board for a personal hearing. He has also affirmed that the Chief Minister did consider the case of the petitioner and directed that the petitioner be detained in custody under the Preventive Detention Act.) In view of this affidavit, Counsel for the petitioner did not press the two preliminary contentions.

3. Counsel urged that the order of detention was invalid because (1) that the case of the petitioner was not referred to the Advisory Board till September 24, 1968 and on that account his detention was invalid, and he could not be continued in detention thereafter; (2) that in making the detention order the authorities acted mala fide; and (3) the grounds in support of the order were vague and indefinite.

4. By Article 22 of the Constitution certain protection is conferred upon persons who are detained under orders of preventive detention. But Article 35 (c) in its application to the State of Jammu & Kashmir provides:

"no law with respect to preventive detention made by the Legislature of the State of Jammu and Kashmir, whether before or after the commencement of the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1954, shall be void on the ground that it is inconsistent with any of the provisions of this (Part III) Part, but any such law shall, to the extent of such inconsistency, cease to have effect on the expiration of fifteen years from the commencement of the said Order, except as respects things done or omitted to be done before the expiration thereof."

The protection of clauses (5), (6) and (7) of Article 22 insofar the provisions of the Act enacted by the Jammu and Kashmir Legislature are inconsistent therewith does not avail the petitioner. By Section 3 the Government of Jammu and Kashmir is entitled, if satisfied with respect to any person that with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order, to make an order directing that such person be detained. By Section 8 it is provided:

"(1) When a person is detained in pursuance of a detention order, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, but not later than five days from the date of detention, communicate to him the grounds on which the order has been made, and shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order of the Government.

(2) Nothing in sub-section (1) shall require the authority to disclose facts which it considers to be against the public interest to disclose."

Section 9 provides for the constitution of Advisory Board and Section 10 deals with references to the Advisory Board. By that section the Government is required within thirty days from the date of detention under the order to place before the Advisory Board the grounds on which the order has been made and the representation, if any, made by the person affected by the order. By Section 12 it is provided:

"(1) In any case where the Advisory Board has reported that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for the detention of a person, the Government may confirm the detention order and continue the detention of the person concerned for such period as it thinks fit.

(2) In any case where the Advisory Board has reported that there is in its opinion no sufficient cause for the detention of the person concerned, the Government shall revoke the detention order and cause the person to be released forthwith."

Section 13 prescribes the maximum period of detention for which any person may be detained in pursuance of any detention order. Section 13A which was added by Act 8 of 1967 enables the State to detain a person for a period of two years. Section 13A provides:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, any person detained under a detention order made in any of the following classes of cases or under any of the following circumstances may be detained for a period longer than three months, but not longer than six months, from the date of detention, without obtaining the opinion of any Advisory Board, namely, when such person has been detained with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to —

(i) the security of the State;

(ii) the maintenance of public order;

"Provided that where any such person has been detained with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State and the grounds on which the detention order has been made are not communicated to him under the proviso to Section 8 (1), such person may be detained for a period of two years from the date of detention without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board.

(2) In the case of every person detained with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order, the provisions of this Act shall have effect subject to the following modifications, namely:—

(a) in sub-section (3) of Section 3, for the words "Twelve days", the words "twenty-four days" shall be substituted.

(b) in sub-section (1) of Section 8,—

(i) for the words "five days" the words "ten days" shall be substituted,

(u) the following proviso shall be inserted at the end, namely —

"Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply to the case of any person detained with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State, if the authority making the order, by the same or a subsequent order directs that the person detained may be informed that it would be against public interest to communicate to him the grounds on which the detention order has been made.

(c) in Section 10,—

(i) after the words, "In every case where a detention order has been made under this Act" occurring in the beginning, the brackets and words "(other than a case to which the proviso to Section 8 (1) applies)" shall be inserted, and

(u) for the words "thirty days", the words "sixty days" shall be substituted,

(d) in Section 11, for the words "ten weeks" the words "five months" shall be substituted"

5. The effect of Section 13A insofar as it is relevant to this case is to authorise the State in the cases specified to detain a person without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board, if he is to be detained for a period longer than three months, but not longer than six months from the date of detention. By sub-section (2) the periods prescribed for the various steps under the Act are doubled: for making report to the District Magistrate when he exercises the power of detention the period is extended to twenty-four days for the Government to serve the grounds of the order under Section 8 (1) the period is extended to ten days, and for the Advisory Board to make its report in cases covered by Section 13A the period is extended to sixty days. Again by the proviso to Section 8 (1) the Government is entitled to withhold in serving grounds upon the detenu that it would be against public interest to communicate to him the grounds on which the detention order has been made.

6. Relying upon the terms of Sec. 10 (1) as amended by Section 13A it was urged that the Government was bound to refer the case of the petitioner within sixty days from the date of detention and since no reference was made the detention of the petitioner under the order dated March 16, 1968, was unauthorised. This argument is plainly unsustainable. Section 13A opens with the words "notwithstanding anything contained in this Act", and provides that a person may be detained for a period not longer than six months without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board. It is plainly contemplated thereby that the Government may decide not to refer the case of the detenu to the Advisory Board, because the period for which he is to be detained is not to exceed six months. Section 13A is an exception to Section 10 as well as to all other relevant provisions of the Act, and in case of conflict Section 13A prevails. The petitioner was detained for six months from March 16, 1968 to September 16, 1968 without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board. We will be justified in accepting the contention of the State that it was intended, when the order was passed detaining the petitioner, that he was not to be kept in detention for a period longer than six months and his case fell within the terms of Section 13A (1) and on that account it was not necessary to obtain the opinion of the Advisory Board.

7. It was said by Counsel for the petitioner that the plea of the State was inconsistent with the course of events, and the State Government had taken shelter under the provisions of Section 13A (1) even though they had at no stage any desire to release the petitioner from jail at the expiry of or within six months. The Court will not be justified in assuming from the circumstance that a fresh order has been issued that the Government acted mala fide in making the original order or the fresh order. The only plea raised by the petitioner in support of that plea is in paragraph 15 of the petition, that the cancellation of the earlier order of detention and the service of the fresh order of detention on the petitioner was "a part and parcel of the scheme of the State to suppress the peaceful trade union movement", and that the fresh order of detention was passed mala fide. No particulars are furnished which justify an inference that in resorting to the provisions of the Act the Government's action was actuated by ill-will or taken for some collateral purpose.

8. Reliance was also placed upon the recitals in the grounds supplied to the petitioner on March 16, 1968 and under the fresh detention order dated September ber 16, 1968, and it was contended that the grounds being identical an inference followed that the previous detention order was continued on the same grounds on which the original order was passed. On comparing the grounds it cannot be said that they are identical. It is stated in the last part of the Annexure to the grounds of detention under order dated September 16, 1968, that from the middle of January to March 1968 the petitioner went underground and during that period he used to attend secret meetings in which he used to stress upon the Government employees that their demands cannot be conceded by the Government unless they resort to violence and that the petitioner was violent by nature and was a perpetual threat to the maintenance of public order. It cannot also be said that merely because the previous order had been passed under which the petitioner was intended to be detained for a period of six months and thereafter in consequence of further information the Government was required to issue a fresh order, the original order or the fresh order was illegal.

9. The plea that the grounds were vague and indefinite cannot also be accepted. It is recited in the order that the petitioner was informed that his detention was ordered on grounds specified in the Annexure appended thereto, which also contained facts relevant thereto except those which the Government considered to be against the public interest to disclose. By virtue of sub-section (2) of Section 8, it is open to the Government not to disclose facts which it considers to be against the public interest to disclose. In the present case the order clearly states that the Government were of the view that facts relevant to the grounds except those which the Government considered to be against public interest to disclose were intimated to the petitioner. The Annexure may appear somewhat indefinite and vague. But that is obviously because facts which in the view of the Government, were against public interest to disclose, were withheld from the petitioner. The Government have power to withhold information about those facts, and they did so. The grounds cannot in the circumstances be said to be vague and indefinite.

10. One more question needs to be dealt with. The petitioner who was present in the Court at the time of hearing of this petition complained that he is subjected to solitary confinement while in detention. It must be emphasized that a detenu is not a convict. Our Constitution, notwithstanding the broad principles of the rule of law, equality and liberty of the individual enshrined therein, tolerates, on account of peculiar conditions prevailing, legislation which is a negation of the rule of law, equality and liberty. But it is implicit in the Constitutional scheme that the power to detain is not a power to punish for offences which an executive authority in his subjective satisfaction believes a citizen to have committed. Power to detain is primarily intended to be exercised in those rare cases when the larger interest of the State demand that restrictions shall be placed upon the liberty of a citizen curbing his future activities. The restrictions so placed must, consistently with the effectiveness of detention, be minimal.

11. The petition fails and is dismissed.

The defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiff certain quantity of float iron lying in the mining area and gave them the right to win and remove the iron ore. A few days thereafter, the defendant wrote a letter to the plaintiff agreeing to assign the said lease area in favour of the plaintiff on his paying a stipulated sum, at his option, to be decided within three months. The letter agreeing to assign the mining area was an offer only. The plant was not an acceptance and the service of the copy of a plaint along with the writ of summons was not a communication of the acceptance, (1864) 33 Beav 529, Distinguished.

It is not usual to accept a business offer by a plant, nor is it usual to communicate an acceptance by serving a copy of the plaint through the medium of the Court.

Observations Under the old chancery practice the mere filing of a bill in a suit to enforce specific performance was regarded as sufficient acceptance of the defendant's offer unless the offer had been withdrawn before the filing of the suit. But it may well be doubted whether this rule can apply under the present Indian practice and procedure. A plaint in a suit for specific performance should allege a concluded contract (Civil P. C., Sch. I, App. A, Form 48). The offer as well as acceptance should precede the institution of suit. (The precise point, however held did not arise in the case).

Ethurajulu Naidu, B. N. Sen, O. P. Khaitan, A. N. Parkh, K. R. Chaudhuri and K. Rajendra Chaudhuri, Advocates, with him), for Respondent No. 2.

BACHAWAT, J: The plaintiffs instituted a suit (O. S. No. 55 of 1957) against the defendant alleging that by a contract dated September 2, 1957 the defendant had agreed to assign to the plaintiffs his leasehold interest under a mining lease in respect of 184 acres of land in Kudrekavave Kaval, Hosadurga Taluk, and claiming specific performance of the contract. The Trial Court decreed the suit. The defendant filed an appeal against the decree. The High Court allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit. The present appeal has been filed by the plaintiffs after obtaining a certificate under Article 133 of the Constitution. The main question arising in this appeal is whether there was a contract alleged in the plaint.

2. Under a contract dated August 3, 1957, the defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiffs 40,000 tons of float iron lying in the aforesaid mining area and gave them the right to win and remove the iron ore. We are not directly concerned with this contract in this appeal. On September 2, 1957 the defendant wrote the following letter to the plaintiffs—

"Further to our agreement dated 3rd August 1957 I hereby agree to assign the said lease area of 184 acres for iron and manganese ores, in your favour, subject to your paying me one lakh and eighty thousand rupees at your option to be decided by you within three months from this date".

3. This document though worded as an agreement was in point of law an offer only. As a matter of fact, on September 2, 1957 the plaintiffs had not agreed to purchase the mining lease. Until both parties were bound there could be no concluded contract. The promise to keep the offer open for three months was not supported by any consideration. The defendant was at liberty to revoke the offer at any time before its acceptance by the plaintiffs. On October 31, 1957, the defendant posted a letter to the plaintiffs revoking the offer. This letter reached the plaintiffs on November 6, 1957. Before that date the plaintiffs did not accept the offer either orally or by any letter sent to the defendant.

4. On November 1, 1957, the plaintiffs filed a suit (O. S. No. 46 of 1957) against the defendant claiming a declaration that they were entitled to remain in possession of the mining area. The primary object of the suit was to enforce the plaintiffs' rights under the contract dated August 3, 1957. The defendant filed his written statement in that suit on November 5, 1957. The High Court held that the plaintiffs accepted the offer of September 2, 1957 by their plaint in O. S. No. 46 of 1957, and that this acceptance was communicated to the defendant before November 6, 1957. We are unable to agree with this finding.

5. The pleadings and issues raised the question whether a contract was made on September 2, 1957. If the plaintiffs desired to set up a new case that the contract was concluded in November 1957 they should have amended their pleadings accordingly. We need not say anything more on this point because we find that the plaintiffs have failed to establish the new case.

6. In paragraphs 14 and 19 of the plaint in O. S. No. 46 of 1957 the plaintiffs alleged that by the letter dated September 2, 1957 the defendant agreed to assign the mining lease, that they were ready and willing to perform the contract and that they reserved their right to file a suit for specific performance. The suggestion was that the contract was concluded on September 2, 1957 and that in breach of the contract the defendant failed to apply for and obtain the necessary consent of the Central Government to the assignment of the mining lease. Paragraph 17 and the prayer portion of the plaint suggested that by virtue of this contract and the earlier contract dated August 3, 1957 they were entitled to remain in possession of the mining area. The suggestion was an attempt to add to the terms of the offer of September 2, 1957. On acceptance of the offer according to its terms the plaintiffs could not get a possessory right before execution of a conveyance of the mining lease. In point of law, the plaint was not an acceptance of the offer, nor was it intended to be an acceptance. It is not usual to accept a business offer by a plaint; nor is it usual to communicate an acceptance by serving a copy of the plaint through the medium of the Court. We shall be straining the language of Sections 2 (b), 3 and 7 of the Contract Act if we were to hold that the plaint was an acceptance and that the service of a copy of the plaint along with the writ of summons was a communication of the acceptance.

7. Under the old chancery practice the mere filing of a bill in a suit to enforce specific performance was regarded as sufficient acceptance of the defendant's offer unless the offer had been withdrawn before the filing of the suit, see Boys v. Ayerst, (1822) 6 Madd 316 (324)=56 ER 1112 (1115), Agar v. Biden, (1833) 2 L.J. Ch 3, Fry on Specific Performance, 8th Ed., Article 306, page 142, Pomeroy on Specific Performance, 3rd Ed., Art. 66, pp. 169-170. It may well be doubted whether this rule can apply under our present practice and procedure. A plaint in a suit for specific performance should allege a concluded contract, see the Code of Civil Procedure 1st Schedule Appendix A, Form No. 48. The offer as well as the acceptance should precede the institution of the suit. However, the precise point does not arise in this case. O. S. No. 46 of 1957 was not a suit for specific performance of the contract. Before the present suit for specific performance of the contract was instituted, the offer had been withdrawn.

8. Counsel for the appellant relying on Bloxam's Case, (1864) 33 Beav 529 submitted that the communication of an acceptance was not necessary. The argument is misconceived. We have held that the plaint in O. S. No. 46 of 1957 was not an acceptance. There was no other acceptance either oral or in writing. Mere mental assent of the plaintiffs to the defendant's proposal is not sufficient. In the peculiar facts of Bloxam's Case, (1864) 33 Beav 529 a contract to take shares was concluded by an oral application for shares followed by allotment though no notice of allotment was given to the applicant. Ordinarily there is no contract unless there is an acceptance of the application for shares and the acceptance is communicated to the applicant, see In re: Pellatt's Case, (1867) 2 Ch A 527. In the last case Lord Cairns, L. J., pointed out that Bloxam's case, (1864) 33 Beav 529 turned on its own special facts. Bloxam was orally informed that if he did not receive an answer within a certain time he was to consider his application granted. In the peculiar circumstances, Bloxam could be regarded as having dispensed with the necessity of the communication of the acceptance. In the present case we are not concerned with a contract to take shares. The defendant made an offer to assign a mining lease. No acceptance was made or communicated to the defendant before he withdrew the offer. There was no concluded contract and the appeal must fail on this ground.

9 The High Court held that the assignment of the mining lease could not be lawfully made without the sanction of the State Government and the approval of the Central Government and that as the governments concerned could not be compelled to accord the necessary sanction and approval, the contract to assign the mining lease could not be specifically performed and on this ground the High Court dismissed the suit. We do not think it necessary to express any opinion on this question. The appeal is liable to be dismissed in view of our conclusion that there was no concluded contract between the parties

10. In the result, the appeal is dismissed. The appellant will pay one set of costs to the respondents

D/- 20-2-1969

(A) Income-tax Act (1922), Sec. 60 (1) — Reference under Section 66 (1) — High Court cannot embark upon reappraisal of evidence and arrive at finding of fact contrary to those of Appellate Tribunal — (1965) 1 ITJ 98 (Cal), Reversed.

The High Court is not a Court of Appeal in a reference under Section 66 (1) and it is not open to the High Court in such a reference to embark upon a reappraisal of the evidence and to arrive at findings of fact contrary to those of the Appellate Tribunal. It is the duty of the High Court while hearing the reference to confine itself to the facts as found by the Appellate Tribunal and to answer the question of law in the context of those facts. It is true that the finding of fact will be defective in law if there is no evidence to support it or if the finding is perverse. But in the hearing of a reference under Section 66 (1), it is not open to the assessee to challenge such a finding of fact unless he has applied for the reference of the specific question under Section 66 (1). (Para 5)

Where the assessee in his application under Section 66 (1) expressly raised the question about the validity of the finding of the Appellate Tribunal as regards an agreement but the question was not referred by the Appellate Tribunal to the High Court, the contention of the assessee with regard to the question must be deemed to have been rejected. In absence of any application by assessee before High Court under Section 66 (2) requiring to call for statement of case on that question the High Court would be in error in embarking upon a reappraisal of the evidence as regards that agreement. (1965) 1 ITJ 98 (Cal), Reversed.

(B) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2) (xv) — Assessee selling agents in India for principal company in London for variety of goods such as chemicals, dyes, explosives etc. — Amount paid by assessee as compensation to ex agents whom it replaced — Absence of proof of exact terms and conditions of agreement between assessee and its principal in England — Amount held could not be said to be "expenditure laid out wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the business" under Section 10 (2) (xv) — (1965) 1 ITJ 98 (Cal), Reversed. (Para 6)

(C) Income-tax Act (1922), Sections 3, 4 — Rule of diversion of income by an overriding title — Applicability — Amount of compensation paid by assessee, the selling agents to ex agents who were replaced by assessee — Absence of proof of precise terms of agreement between assessee and its principal — Payment was not by overriding title created either by act of parties or by operation of law — (1965) 1 ITJ 98 (Cal), Reversed.

An obligation to apply the income in a particular way before it is received by the assessee or before it has accrued or arisen to the assessee results in the diversion of income. An obligation to apply income accrued, arisen or received amounts merely to the apportionment of income and the income so applied is not deductible. The true test for the application of the rule of diversion of income by an overriding title is whether the amount sought to be deducted in truth never reached the assessee as his income. (Para 7) of goods manufactured or purchased by its London principals since 1-4-1948 paid during relevant period commission to the ex agents whom it had replaced in absence of proof of precise terms of agreement between assessee and its principals in London, the payment of compensation to ex agents was not by an overriding title created either by act of parties or by operation of law. Thus the inclusion of these amounts for relevant accounting years in computation of total income of the assessee was justified and correct. (1965) 1 ITJ 98 (Cal), Reversed.

Mr. Sukumar Mitra, Senior Advocate (M/s. S. K. Aiyar, R. H. Dhebar, R. B. Sachthey and B. D. Sharma, Advocates with him), for Appellant (In all the appeals); Mr. M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate (M/s. T. A. Ramachandran and D. N. Gupta, Advocates with him), for Respondent (In all the appeals).

RAMASWAMI, J.: These appeals are brought by certificate from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court dated 28th September, 1964 in Income Tax Reference No. 18 of 1961.

2. The respondent (hereinafter called the assessee) is a private limited company incorporated in India and is a subsidiary of the Imperial Chemical Industries, London, which holds the entire share capital of the assessee. The business of the assessee consists mainly of acting as selling agents in India for a large variety of goods such as chemicals, dyes, explosives etc. manufactured or purchased by its London principals and sold in India. The Imperial Chemical Industries (Export) Glasgow (hereinafter referred to as the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd.) is another subsidiary of I. C. I. London which holds the entire share capital of I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. The I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. had appointed as their selling agents in India four companies, viz., (1) Gillanders Arbuthnot and Co. Ltd., Calcutta, (2) Best and Co. Ltd., Madras, (3) Anglo-Thai Co. Ltd., Bombay and (4) Shaw Wallace and Co. Ltd. With effect from 1st April, 1948, the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. terminated the services of the aforesaid selling agents and appointed the assessee as its sole selling agent. The I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. had agreed to pay to the former selling agents compensation at the rate of two-fifths, two-fifths and one and two-fifths of the commission earned by the assessee for the three years from 1st April, 1948. The compensation was paid to the four companies through the accounts of the assessee. For this purpose the modus operandi adopted was as follows:— The compensation payable to the former agents was spread over a period of three years and on the assumption that the turnover was constant, the compensation payable to the selling agents was on an average, an amount equal to the 11/15th of the commission earned by the assessee at the normal rates. In order to arrive at the amount of commission to be credited to the assessee's profit and loss account each year the assessee in the first place credited the commission account and debited the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. account with the full amount of compensation earned by it at normal rates on sales effected during the year. Next the assessee transferred from the commission account to a special reserve account called the 'Explosives Ex-Agents Compensation Reserve Account', the proportion payable to the ex-agents as compensation, namely, 11/15th $(2/5 + 2/5 + 7/5 = 11/5 \times 1/3 = 11/15)$ (leaving 4/15th towards commission account) so that funds might be accumulated for payment to the four companies from time to time.

3. The year of account of the assessee is from 1st October to 30th September every year As a result of the above figures appeared in the assessee's books of method of accounting, the following accounts.—

	Gross Commission	Transfer to Reserve for compensation	Net Commission
1st April 1948 to 30th September 1948	Rs. 2,91,398	Rs. 2,03,503	Rs. 87,893
Year ending 30th September 1949	Rs 7,67,294	Rs. 5,41,526	Rs 2,25,768
Year ending 30th September 1950	Rs. 7,52,204	Rs. 5,29,284	Rs. 2,22,920
Year ending 30th September 1951	Rs 10,20,922	Rs. 4,00,052	Rs. 6,20,870
TOTAL .	Rs 23,31,816	Rs 16,74,365	Rs 11,57,451

For the assessment years 1949-50, 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 the assessee showed the net amounts of commission earned on the selling agencies by the I C I (Export) Ltd., adding a foot-note that the amounts were arrived at after deducting the amount of compensation payable to the out-going agents. By his order dated 28th January, 1957 for the assessment year 1951-52 the Income Tax Officer held that the deductions were not permissible. In an appeal preferred by the assessee the Appellate Assistant Commissioner confirmed the assessment by his order dated 25th November, 1957. The assessee took the matter in further appeal to the Appellate Tribunal which dismissed the appeal. The Appellate Tribunal held that there was no justification for the absence of a written agreement between the I C I (Export) Ltd and the assessee when the former selling agencies were terminated and the assessee was appointed as the sole selling agent. It was observed that the assessee was not collecting any commission on behalf of the out-going agents and it was not their legal obligation to pay compensation to the out-going agents. If the assessee was not entitled to more than 3/5th of commission during the first two years, it should have credited that amount whereas the assessee had actually credited four-fifteenth on a notional basis which was not in consonance with the arrangement. The conclusion reached by the Appellate Tribunal was that "there was no agreement between the assessee and the I C I (Export) Ltd and "if there was one it was not acted upon". It was held by the Appellate Tribunal that the payment of compensation was not because of an overriding title created either by the act of the parties or by operation of law.

4. At the instance of the assessee the following question of law was referred

"Whether the inclusion by the Income Tax Officer of Rs 2,03,503, Rs. 5,41,526, Rs 5,29,284 and Rs 4,00,052 in the assessment for the years 1949-50, 1950-51, 1951-52 and 1952-53 for the relevant accounting years ending the 30th September, 1948, 1949, 1950 and 1951 respectively in the computation of the total income of the assessee is justified and correct?" The High Court answered the question in the negative in favour of the assessee holding that the inclusion of the amount of compensation in the total income of the assessee for the relevant assessment years was not justified.

5. On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the High Court had no legal justification for interfering with the finding of the Appellate Tribunal, that there was no proof of the agreement between the assessee and the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd, with regard to the quantum of commission to be paid to the assessee for the period between 1st April 1948 and 31st March, 1951. On this point reference was made by Mr. Chagla to (a) the letter dated 11th March, 1947 from the I C I (Export) Ltd. to M/s. Gillanders Arbuthnot and Co, (b) the affidavits of Mr. W. A. Bell and Mr J. W. Donaldson and (c) the letter dated 3rd January, 1958 of M/s Lovelocke and Lewes, Chartered Accountants, Calcutta. It was argued that these documents established that there was an agreement between the I C I (Export) Ltd and the assessee, that for the period 1st April, 1948 to 31st March, 1951 the assessee was entitled to receive as its commission only the amounts representing the difference between the normal rates of commission and the compensation payable to the former agents.

during that period. The Appellate Tribunal had considered all these documents and reached the conclusion that there was no agreement between the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. and the assessee and "if there was one it was not acted upon". The Appellate Tribunal remarked that the letter dated 11th March, 1947 from the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. set forth only the terms and conditions subject to which the selling agencies of the out-going agents were terminated. It was silent on the crucial question of commission to be paid to the assessee during the three years from the date of its appointment as sole selling agent. The affidavits of Mr. Bell and Mr. Donaldson were produced for the first time before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The affidavits were made many years after the crucial date of the appointment of the assessee as the sole selling agent of the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. The affidavits did not mention the amount of commission to be paid to the outgoing agents and the affidavits were also not consistent with the entries in the books of accounts of the assessee. The letter of M/s. Lovelocke and Lewes was produced at a very late stage during the hearing of the appeal before the Tribunal and even otherwise the letter merely explains the method of accounting adopted by the assessee and did not carry the matter any further. In the circumstances, the Appellate Tribunal held that there was no agreement between the assessee and the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. and if there was any such agreement it was not acted upon. It is manifest that the finding of the Appellate Tribunal on this question is a finding on question of fact and the High Court was not entitled to interfere with this finding. It is well established that the High Court is not a Court of Appeal in a reference under Section 66 (1) of the Act and it is not open to the High Court in such a reference to embark upon a reappraisal of the evidence and to arrive at findings of fact contrary to those of the Appellate Tribunal. It is the duty of the High Court while hearing the reference to confine itself to the facts as found by the Appellate Tribunal and to answer the question of law in the context of those facts. It is true that the finding of fact will be defective in law if there is no evidence to support it or if the finding is perverse. But in the hearing of a reference under Section 66(1) of the Act it is not open to the assessee to challenge such a finding of fact unless he has applied for the reference of the specific question under Section 66 (1). In India Cements Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras, (1966) 60 ITR 52=(AIR 1966 SC 1053) it was held by this Court that in a reference the High Court must accept the findings of fact reached by the Appellate Tribunal and it is for the party who applied for a reference to challenge those findings of fact, first by an application under Section 66 (1). If the party concerned has failed to file an application under Section 66 (1) expressly raising the question about the validity of the finding of fact, he is not entitled to urge before the High Court that the finding is vitiated for any reason. The same view has been expressed by this Court in Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras v. Sri Meenakshi Mills Ltd., Madurai, (1967) 63 ITR 609 = (AIR 1967 SC 819) and Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay City I v. Greaves Cotton and Co. Ltd., (1968) 68 ITR 200 (SC). In the present case the assessee has in his application under Section 66 (1) expressly raised the question about the validity of the finding of the Appellate Tribunal as regards the agreement but the question was not referred by the Appellate Tribunal to the High Court and the contention of the assessee with regard to the question must be deemed to have been rejected. The assessee did not thereafter move the High Court under Section 66 (2) of the Act requiring it to call for a statement of the case on that specific question. We are therefore of opinion that the High Court was in error in embarking upon a reappraisal of the evidence before the Appellate Tribunal and setting aside the findings of the Appellate Tribunal that "there was no agreement as alleged in the affidavits of Mr. W. A. Bell and Mr. J. W. Donaldson" and "if there was such an agreement it was not acted upon".

6. It was argued by Mr. Chagla that even if the agreement was not established, the amount paid by the assessee as compensation to the ex-agents was an expenditure laid out wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the business and as such is allowable under Section 10 (2) (xv) of the Act. The contrary view point was urged on behalf of the appellant. It was pointed out that the assessee was acting as the agent of the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. for the payment of compensation to the ex-agents and the payment was made not in the character of a trader but in the character of the agent of its principal. The contention of the appellant was that the assessee got the right to sell goods after 1st April, 1948 and for getting that right the assessee parted with a portion of its commission for the first two years after 1st April, 1948 and paid very much more than the commission earned in the third year. This position was borne out by the accounts of the respondent which show that the assessee received the commission at full rates and out of it created a reserve account of which these compensations were made to the ex-agents. We have already referred to the finding of the Appellate Tribunal that no agreement between the assessee and the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. has been proved. In the absence of proof of the exact terms and conditions of the agreement it is not possible to accept the argument of the assessee that the amount paid as compensation to the ex-agents was an "expenditure laid out wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the business" under Section 10 (2) (xv) of the Act.

7 It was finally contended on behalf of the respondent that by virtue of an overriding title the income was diverted before it reached the assessee, and so, the amount of compensation paid to the ex-agents did not form part of the income of the assessee. In other words, the contention was that the compensation payable to the ex-agents was diverted from the income of the assessee by an overriding title arising under the agreement between the assessee and the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. The argument was stressed that the commission payable as compensation to the ex-agents did not form part of the income of the assessee. We are unable to accept this argument as correct. We have already pointed out that the finding of the Appellate Tribunal is that the precise terms of the agreement between the assessee and the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. have not been established. In any event, even on the basis of the affidavits of Mr. Bell and Mr. Donaldson the payment of compensation to the ex-agents was apparently made by the assessee for and on behalf of the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. The assessee's documents suggest that the payment of compensation was the exclusive liability of the I. C. I. (Export) Ltd. and the assessee was not under a legal obligation to pay the amount of compensation to the out-going agents. It is not established that the payment of compensation was by an overriding title created either by the act of the parties or by the operation of law. An obligation to apply the income in a particular way before it is received by the assessee or before it has accrued or arisen to the assessee results in the diversion of income. An obligation to apply income accrued, arisen or received amounts merely to the apportionment of income and the income so applied is not deductible. The true test for the application of the rule of diversion of income by an overriding title is whether the amount sought to be deducted in truth never reached the assessee as his income. The leading case on the subject is Raja Bejoy Singh Dudhuria v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1933-1 ITR 135 = (AIR 1933 PC 145) where the step mother of the Raja had brought a suit for maintenance and a compromise decree was passed in which the step mother was to be paid Rs. 1,100 per month, which amount was declared a charge upon the properties in the hands of the Raja by the Court. The Raja sought to deduct this amount from his assessable income, which was disallowed by the High Court at Calcutta. On appeal to the Judicial Committee Lord Macmillan observed as follows —

"But their Lordships do not agree with the learned Chief Justice in his rejection of the view that the sums paid by the appellant to his step mother were not 'income' of the appellant at all. This in their Lordships' opinion is the true view of the matter.

When the Act by Section 3 subjects to charge 'all income' of the individual, it is what reaches the individual as income which it is intended to charge. In the present case the decree of the Court by charging the appellant's whole resources with a specific payment to his step mother has to that extent diverted his income from him and has directed it to his step-mother, to that extent what he receives for her is not his income. It is not a case of the application by the appellant of part of his income in a particular way, it is rather the allocation of a sum out of his revenue before it becomes income in his hands".

Another case of the Judicial Committee is reported in P. C. Mullick v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1938-6 ITR 206 = (AIR 1938 PC 118), where, a testator appointed the appellants as executors and directed them to pay Rs. 10,000 out of the income on the occasion of his addya sraddha. The executors paid Rs. 5,537 for such expenses, and sought to deduct the amount from the assessable income. The Judicial Committee confirmed the decision of the Calcutta High Court disallowing the deduction and observed that the payments were made out of the income of the estate coming to the hands of the executors and in pursuance of an obligation imposed upon them by the testator. The Judicial Committee observed that it was not a case in which a portion of the income had been diverted by an overriding title from the person who would have received it otherwise and distinguished Bejoy Singh Dudhuria's case, 1933-1 ITR 135=(AIR 1933 PC 145) (supra). In Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay City II v. Sitaldas Tirathdas, 1961-41 ITR 367=(AIR 1961 SC 728), Hidayatullah, J., speaking for the Court observed as follows:—

"There is a difference between an amount which a person is obliged to apply out of his income and an amount which by the nature of the obligation cannot be said to be a part of the income of the assessee. Where by the obligation income is diverted before it reaches the assessee, it is deductible; but where the income is required to be applied to discharge an obligation after such income reaches the assessee, the same consequence, in law does not follow. It is the first kind of payment which can truly be excused and not the second. The second payment is merely an obligation to pay another a portion of one's income, which has been received and is since applied. The first is a case in which the income never reaches the assessee, who even if he were to collect it, does so, not as part of his income, but for and on behalf of the person to whom it is payable".

In view of the principle laid down in these authorities we are of opinion that the payment of compensation by the assessee to the ex-agents was not by an overriding title created either by act of the parties or by operation of law. We accordingly reject the argument of Mr. Chagla on this aspect of the case.

8. For the reasons expressed we hold that the judgment of the Calcutta High Court dated 28th September, 1964, should be set aside and the question referred by the Appellate Tribunal should be answered in the affirmative and against the assessee. The appeals are accordingly allowed with costs. One hearing fee.

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.: This is an appeal by a tenant who had rented a shop No. 2687 in Kinari Bazar, Delhi from the respondent on Rs. 13.50 P. per month. In those premises he was selling Usha sewing machines and fans. It appears that the level of the shop was too high from the road and his clients were troubled in going to his shop and so he lowered the level and thereby altered the premises to suit his convenience. The landlord thereupon filed a suit against him for his eviction under Section 13 (1) (k) of the Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952. The suit was filed on November 13, 1957. The trial Court ordered on February 19, 1959, ejectment and payment of Rs 145 as arrears of rent. An appeal against the order of the trial Court was dismissed by the appellate authority on November 16, 1959. A revision application was then filed by the tenant on March 25, 1960. During the course of that revision he invoked the provisions of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 which had come into force on February 9, 1959 and relied upon Section 14 (1) (j) of the new Act read with Section 57. Previously he had not relied upon the new Act although the Act had been in force during the pendency of the previous proceedings. The High Court acting under Section 14 (1) (j) and sub-sec (10) of the same section, gave him the alternative of paying compensation in the sum of Rs. 500/- which it appears that the landlord himself had assessed as the damages caused by the act of the tenant. The landlord later filed an application for review of the order and pointed out that the new Act was not applicable to the case in view of the first proviso of Section 57 sub-section (2). The High Court thereupon granted the review and reversed its earlier order and ordered the eviction of the tenant.

2. In this appeal it is contended that the High Court was in error in passing the order on review and that the previous order was the correct order in the light of the provisions of the Act of 1958. We have therefore to consider which of the two orders of the High Court is the correct order and whether the review was properly granted or not.

3. As is very frequent in our country, Rent Control Acts are changed from time to time causing numerous difficulties in their interpretation and application. Here too, we have a succession of Acts which were passed, to say nothing of the amendments which were made in the body of each of the Acts as they came. We are concerned first with the Act of 1952, namely, The Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952. Section 13 (1) (k) of that Act gave a right to the landlord to evict a tenant who whether before or after the commencement of the Act had caused or permitted to be caused substantial damage to the premises, or notwithstanding previous notice, had used or dealt with the premises in a manner contrary to any condition imposed on the landlord by the Government or the Delhi Improvement Trust while giving him a lease of the land on which the premises were situated. We are not concerned with the latter part but with the first part where the tenant before or after the commencement of the Act had caused or permitted to be caused substantial damage to the premises. Whether the lowering of the floor was causing substantial damage to the premises is a question into which we need not go, because the concurrent finding of the Courts of fact is that it did so. This question was not raised before us. Therefore, if Sec. 13 (1) (k) of the Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952 applied, the eviction of the tenant was the proper order to make in view of the finding that he had caused substantial damage to the premises. However, the matter comes to the Court because of the passing of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 which came into force on February 9, 1959. Section 57 (1) of that Act provided that the Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act 1952 in so far as it was applicable to the Union Territory of Delhi, was being repealed. While repealing it, a special saving was however made by sub-section (2) of the same section in favour of all suits and other proceedings which were then pending under the repealed Act and it was provided that those suits and proceedings should be continued and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the Act as if that Act had continued to be in force and the new Act had not been passed. This would have really been a very proper provision to make to separate the operation of the two Acts but the Legislature went still further and added two provisos. We are concerned only with the first of the two provisos on which much dispute has arisen in this case. That proviso reads as follows:

"Provided that in any such suit or proceeding for the fixation of standard rent or for the eviction of a tenant from any premises to which Section 54 does not apply, the Court or other authority shall have regard to the provisions of this Act." This proviso contains a proviso within itself which excepts the case of premises to which Section 54 of the Act does not apply. That section provides as follows:

"Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950, or the Slum Areas (Improvement and Clearance) Act, 1956 or the Delhi Tenants (Temporary Protection) Act, 1956."

The effect of the proviso which we have quoted above is vanously described by Counsel on opposite sides. According to Mr. C. B. Agarwala who argued for the tenant, the words "to which Section 54 does not apply" govern the words "any such suit or proceeding" and not the words "any premises". The High Court in the order passed on review was of the opinion that these words governed the words "any premises". In our opinion, this is the correct view to take of the matter.

4. To begin with, it must be noticed that the proviso speaks of two things, namely, the fixation of standard rent and the eviction of a tenant from any premises. The words "from any premises" cannot be connected with the phrase "for the fixation of standard rent", because then the preposition would have been "of any premises" or "for any premises" and not "from any premises." This means that the first phrase has to be read as complete in itself beginning from the words "for the fixation" and ending with the words, "standard rent". The second phrase then reads "or for the eviction of a tenant from any premises." The words "from any premises" go very clearly with the words "eviction of a tenant" and not with the words "any suit or proceeding".

5. The question then arises, where does the phrase "to which Section 54 does not apply" connect itself? According to Mr. Agarwala that phrase must be connected with the words "in any such suit or proceeding." Since the suits contain two kinds of matters, namely, fixation of standard rent and eviction of a tenant from any premises, we have to turn to the provisions of the statutes to which Section 54 refers, namely, the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950, the Slum Areas (Improvement and Clearance) Act, 1956 and the Delhi Tenants (Temporary Protection) Act, 1956. The first two do not deal at all with the fixation of fair rent and the third speaks of fair rent, but it does not provide for its fixation. It would be pointless to use the language "any suit or proceeding to which Sec. 54 does not apply" in relation to fixation of standard rent. It follows therefore that the phrase "to which Section 54 does not apply" really governs 'premises'. Read in that way, all the three Acts fall in line, because they provide for premises and not for fixation of standard rent. The Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950, the Slum Areas (Improvement and Clearance) Act, 1956 and the Delhi Tenants (Temporary Protection) Act, 1956 all deal with premises and property and therefore the phrase "to which Section 54 does not apply" is connected with the word "premises". That is the view which the High Court has taken and we think rightly. The proviso did not apply and the matter had to be governed by the old Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952 which had been repealed.

6. It was contended before us that this legislation was intended to soften action against tenants still further and that the policy of the law had been to give more and more protection to the tenants and we must therefore read the statute in consonance with that policy. This would be an argument to consider if the language of the statute was not quite clear. But the language is clear enough to show that the proviso applies only to those cases in which Section 54 cannot be made applicable. It is admitted before us that this area is subjected to the Slum Areas (Improvement and Clearance) Act, 1956. If that is so, then, on the terms of the proviso on which much reliance is placed by Mr. Agarwala, the provisions of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 cannot be taken into consideration. They are to be taken into consideration only in those cases to which the Acts mentioned in Section 54 do not apply, that is to say, in respect of premises not governed by those statutes. Since this shop is governed by one of the statutes, the proviso has no application. The High Court's view was therefore right. In the circumstances, the appeal fails and will be dismissed with costs.

J. C. SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Smt. Swaran Lata Ghosh, Appellant v. Harendra Kumar Banerjee and another, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No. 662 of 1968, D/- 12-3-1969.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 33, O. 20, Rr. 4 and 5; O. 49, R. 3 (5) — Contested suit — Trial Court decreeing claim without delivering judgment — High Court also in appeal confirming trial Court's decision without recording reasons — Held there was no real trial of defendant's case.

In a suit in which the pleadings of the parties raised substantial issues of fact for trial, the trial Court after holding a lengthy trial merely decreed the claim without delivering a judgment. In the appeal in which several grounds on merits were raised, the High Court also merely recorded that the plaintiff had sufficiently proved the case.

Held that there had been no real trial of the defendant's case. (Para 13)

Trial of a civil dispute in Court is intended to achieve, according to law and the procedure of the Court, a judicial determination between the contesting parties of the matter in controversy. A judicial determination of a disputed claim where substantial questions of law or fact arise is satisfactorily reached, only if it be supported by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves to the Judge, a mere order deciding the matter in dispute not supported by reasons is no judgment at all. Recording of reasons is intended to ensure that the decision is not the result of whim or fancy, but of a judicial approach to the matter in contest it is also intended to ensure adjudication of the matter according to law and the procedure established by law. A party to the dispute is ordinarily entitled to know the grounds on which the Court has decided against him, and more so, when the judgment is subject to appeal. The Appellate Court will then have adequate material on which it may determine whether the facts are properly ascertained, the law has been correctly applied and the resultant decision is just. (Para 6)

Similarly it was unfortunate that the High Court in appeal merely recorded that they thought that the plaintiff had sufficiently proved the case in the plaint without recording their reasons. It is true that a Judge of a Chartered High Court is not obliged to record a judgment strictly according to the provisions contained in Rules 4 (2) and 5 of O. 20, Code of Civil Procedure. But the privilege of not recording a judgment is intended normally to apply where the action is undefended, where the parties are not at issue on any substantial matter, in a summary trial of an action where leave to defend is not granted, in making interlocutory orders or in disposing of formal proceedings and the like. Order 49 R 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure undoubtedly applies to the trial of suits but the question is not one merely of power but of exercise of judicial discretion in the exercise of that power. The function of a judicial trial is to hear and decide a matter in contest between the parties in open court in the presence of parties according to the procedure prescribed for investigation of the dispute, and the rules of evidence. The conclusion of the Court ought normally to be supported by reasons duly recorded. This requirement transcends all technical rules of procedure. (Paras 6, 10)

Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Appellant, Mr. S. C. Majumdar, Advocate, for Respondents.

SHAH, J.: Birendra Krishna Ghosh — hereinafter called "Ghosh" — was practising as an attorney-at-law in the High Court of Calcutta. He died in August 1950. H. K. Banerjee — the first respondent herein — commenced in 1951 an action in the High Court of Calcutta on the original side against Swaran Lata and Arun Kumar — widow and minor son respectively of Ghosh — for a decree for Rs. 15,000/- claiming that it was the balance of "capital deposits" due to him from Ghosh and Rs. 1,535/- interest due thereon. The plaintiff claimed that he had deposited with Ghosh Rs. 6,000/- on December 10, 1948, for the "specific purpose of investing the amount" and the latter agreed to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum and to repay the same or any portion thereof when demanded; that on or about February 17, 1948, he had deposited Rs. 10,000/- with Ghosh also for "the specific purpose of investing" that sum, and the latter had agreed to pay interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum and to repay, the same or part thereof when demanded, that under the agreement Ghosh paid diverse sums of money as interest, and on July 3, 1947 Ghosh repaid Rs. 1,000/- out of Rs. 6,000/- deposited, and that the balance of Rs. 15,000/- and Rs. 1,535/- interest due thereon were repayable by the defendants to the plaintiff.

2. Swaran Lata filed a written statement denying the claim of the plaintiff. She denied that the sums of Rs. 6,000/- and Rs. 10,000/- were entrusted to or deposited with her husband as alleged by the plaintiff, she denied that her husband repaid any amounts towards interest or part payment of principal, and she submitted that the suit was in any event barred by the law of limitation.

3. The trial of the suit commenced before Law, J., on July 12, 1962. In support of the plaintiff's case four witnesses were examined. The plaintiff tendered in evidence extracts from certain Bank accounts and correspondence. He produced no documentary evidence in support of his case that any amount was deposited with Ghosh, on terms set out in the plaint. Apparently he relied upon the entries in the extracts from the statements of account with the United Bank of India Ltd., the Imperial Bank of India, the Hooghly Bank Ltd. and correspondence between him and Swaran Lata. The learned Judge by order dated August 17, 1962, passed the following order:

"There will be a decree for Rs. 15,000/- with interest on judgment on Rs. 15,000/- at 6 per cent per annum and costs. No interim interest allowed." Pursuant to that order a decree was drawn up.

4. Against the decree Swaran Lata appealed to the High Court under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and raised several grounds in the memo of appeal on the merits. The High Court disposed of the appeal by a short judgment observing:

"We think that the plaintiff sufficiently proved the case made in the plaint. On the 10th December, 1946 the plaintiff entrusted and deposited with Birendra Krishna Ghosh a sum of Rs. 6,000/- for the express and specific purpose of investing the sum to yield interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. He also entrusted and deposited with Birendra Krishna Ghosh on the 17th February 1948 a sum of Rs. 10,000/- for "the express and specific purpose of investing the sum to yield interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum."

The Court observed that the amounts paid to Ghosh were deposits, within the meaning of Article 60 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and since interest was paid in respect of both the deposits within three years of the institution of the suit, no question of limitation arose, and the Trial Court had "rightly decreed the suit." The High Court, however, modified the decree passed by the Trial Court and declared that the liability of the defendants was not personal and was limited only to "the assets and properties" of Ghosh received by them. With special leave, Swaran Lata Ghosh has appealed to this Court.

5. The defendants had filed a written statement denying the averments in the plaint and had contested the claim of the plaintiff. The learned Judge apparently raised no issues. We have found in the printed paper book no record of any issues raised. On behalf of the plaintiff, witnesses were examined to prove the two deposits and the terms of the deposit which it was claimed were orally agreed upon. There was no documentary evidence supporting the case of the plaintiff relating to the agreements between him and Ghosh. There was also no documentary evidence supporting the case of payment of interest on the amounts deposited, or of re-payment of a part of the principal. Indisputably the pleadings of the parties raised substantial issues of fact for trial, and a lengthy trial was held. But the learned Trial Judge delivered no judgment. He merely decreed the claim. The decree was on the face of it erroneous, because it directed Swaran Lata and her minor son Arun Kumar personally to pay the amount decreed.

6. Trial of a civil dispute in Court is intended to achieve, according to law and the procedure of the Court, a judicial determination between the contesting parties of the matter in controversy. Opportunity to the parties interested in the dispute to present their respective cases on questions of law as well as fact, ascertainment of facts by means of evidence tendered by the parties, and adjudication by a reasoned judgment of the dispute upon a finding on the facts in controversy and application of the law to the facts found, are essential attributes of a judicial trial. In a judicial trial the Judge not only must reach a conclusion which he regards as just, but, unless otherwise permitted, by the practice of the Court or by law, he must record the ultimate mental process leading from the dispute to its solution. A judicial determination of a disputed claim where substantial questions of law or fact arise is satisfactorily reached, only if it be supported by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves to the Judge; a mere order deciding the matter in dispute not supported by reasons is no judgment at all. Recording of reasons in support of a decision of a disputed claim serves more purposes than one. It is intended to ensure that the decision is not the result of whim or fancy, but of a judicial approach to the matter in contest: it is also intended to ensure adjudication of the matter according to law and the procedure established by law. A party to the dispute is ordinarily entitled to know the grounds on which the Court has decided against him, and more so, when the judgment is subject to appeal. The Appellate Court will then have adequate material on which it may determine whether the facts are properly ascertained, the law has been correctly applied and the resultant decision is just. It is unfortunate that the learned Trial Judge has recorded no reasons in support of his conclusion, and the High Court in appeal merely recorded that they thought that the plaintiff had sufficiently proved the case in the plaint.

7. The defendants it is true led no oral evidence and produced no documentary evidence. But the defendants had apparently no personal knowledge about the transactions and there is no clear evidence on the record that the first defendant Swaran Lata had in her possession any books of account of the deceased which she could have produced and had withheld. The burden of proving the claim in all its details lay upon the plaintiff. Absence of documentary evidence in support of the case made the burden more onerous.

8. We are unable to agree with Counsel for the plaintiff that "for all practical purposes" the action was undefended and that the Trial Judge recorded merely formal evidence in proof of the plaintiff's case. The defendants had filed a written statement denying the plaintiff's claim, had appeared by Counsel at the trial, and had challenged the plaintiff's evidence by intensive cross-examination. The plaintiff who was the principal witness was asked as many as 317 questions and his examination appears to have taken the better part of a day. In the course of the examination in attempting to elicit the truth the learned Judge took no mean or insignificant part. Three more witnesses were also examined.

9. We are also unable to agree that the only plea raised at the trial and in the Court of appeal was about the personal liability of the defendants. The evidence led at the trial and the cross-examination amply establish that the defendants defended the claim on the merits. The High Court in appeal modified the decree and restricted it to the estate inherited by the defendants from Ghosh. But there is no reason to hold that the only point argued before the Trial Court related to the extent of liability of the defendants. The grounds in the memorandum of appeal belie that submission.

10. It is true that Rules 1 to 8 of Order 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure are by the express provision contained in Order 49, Rule 3 Clause (5), inapplicable to a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction. A Judge of a Chartered High Court is not obliged to record a judgment strictly according to the provisions contained in Rules 4 (2) and 5 of Order 20, Code of Civil Procedure. But the privilege of not recording a judgment is intended normally to apply where the action is undefended, where the parties are not at issue on any substantial matter, in a summary trial of an action where leave to defend is not granted, in making interlocutory orders or in disposing of formal proceedings and the like. Order 49 R. 3 of the C. P. C. undoubtedly applies to the trial of suits but the question is not one merely of power but of exercise of judicial discretion in the exercise of that power. The function of a judicial trial is to hear and decide a matter in contest between the parties in open Court in the presence of parties according to the procedure prescribed for investigation of the dispute, and the rules of evidence. The conclusion of the Court ought normally to be supported by reasons duly recorded. This requirement transcends all technical rules of procedure.

11. We may assume that the learned Trial Judge was satisfied that the claim of the plaintiff deserved to be decreed. But the judgment of the learned Trial Judge was not final it was subject to appeal and unless there was a reasoned judgment recorded by the Trial Judge, an appeal against the judgment may turn out to be an empty formality. A Court of appeal generally attaches great value to the views formed by the Judge of First Instance who had seen the witnesses and noted their demeanour. How the Judge who tried the suit reacted to the evidence of a witness may not always be found from the printed record.

12. The plaintiff's case was founded upon extracts of Bank accounts, the extracts however do not evidence the agreement under which the money passed from the plaintiff to Ghosh. The plaintiff had to prove not only that money passed from him to Ghosh, he had to prove that money passed under the agreement pleaded by him. Oral testimony of the plaintiff had to be examined in the context of several weighty circumstances e.g., complete absence of documentary evidence in the handwriting of Ghosh, absence of correspondence relating to the transactions between Ghosh and the plaintiff, absence of books of account in support of the transactions; improbability of a transaction of the nature pleaded between an attorney and the plaintiff; absence of any previous business or professional relationship between Ghosh and the plaintiff; absence of vouchers supporting the alleged payment of interest and repayment of part of the principal and other important circumstances. In reaching a conclusion the Court had to consider the probabilities and the circumstances in which the plaintiff alleged that he had deposited the two sums of money with Ghosh. It was essentially a case in which there should have been a full record of the reasons which persuaded the learned Trial Judge to reach the conclusion he did. A mere order directing payment of the money, not supported by reasons, does not do duty for a judgment according to law.

13. We are, therefore, constrained to come to the conclusion that there has been no real trial of the defendant's case. It is a very unfortunate state of affairs that eighteen years after the date on which the suit was instituted, we have to remand the suit for trial according to law. But we see no other satisfactory alternative.

14. The decree passed by the High Court is set aside. The suit stands remanded to the Court of First Instance for trial according to law. It will be open to the learned Judge who tries the suit to proceed on the evidence already on the record. If the parties desire to lead any additional evidence, he will give them opportunity in that behalf. If the learned Judge is of the opinion that the witnesses should be examined over again before him, he may adopt that course.

15. As costs till now incurred are thrown away on account of circumstances for which the parties may not be held responsible, we direct that there will be no order as to costs till this date.

16. We may state that the observations made by us in the course of this judgment are not intended to express any opinion by this Court on the merits of the dispute.

J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI AND
A. N. GROVER, JJ.

State of West Bengal and another, Appellants v. Jugal Kishore More and another, Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 14 of 1968, D/-10-1-1969.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 82 — Extradition Act (1962) Section 3 — Fugitive Offenders Act (1881) (44 and 45 vict, C. 69) — Presidency Magistrate issuing warrant and sending it to Secretary, Home Department for onward transmission to Government of India for taking further steps for securing presence of accused in India from Hong Kong to undergo trial — Held, issue of warrant and procedure followed in transmitting warrant were not illegal, not even irregular — Though provisions of Extradition Act could not be availed of, that did not bar the requisition made by External Affairs Ministry to authorities in Hong Kong — Fugitive Offenders Act is not rendered inapplicable because India is no more a British possession — AIR 1968 Cal 220, Reversed.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate held an enquiry and recorded an order on July 19, 1965, that on the materials placed before him, a prima facie case was made out of a criminal conspiracy, hatched within his jurisdiction and 'M' was one of the conspirators. He accordingly directed that a non-bailable warrant in Form II Sch. V of the Code of Criminal Procedure be issued for the arrest of 'M' and the warrant be sent to the Secretary Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal, with a request to take all necessary steps to ensure execution of the warrant. The Chief Presidency Magistrate forwarded to the Government of West Bengal, the warrant with attested copies of the evidence recorded at the enquiry and photostat copies of documents tendered by the prosecution in evidence "in accordance with the procedure laid down in Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, letter No. K/52/6131/41 dated 21st May, 1955." The warrant was forwarded by the Government of West Bengal to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India. The Ministry of External Affairs forwarded the warrant to the High Commissioner for India, Hong Kong, who in his turn, requested the Colonial Secretary, Hong Kong, for an order extraditing 'M' under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, (44 and 45 Vict., c. 69), to India for trial for offences described in the warrant. The Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, endorsed the warrant and directed the Hong Kong Police, "pursuant to section 13 of Part II and Section 26 of Part IV of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881", to arrest 'M'. 'M' was arrested on November 24, 1965. By order dated April 4, 1966, the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, overruled the objection raised on behalf of 'M' that the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed in the matter under Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, since the Republic of India was no longer a "British Possession". On May 16, 1966, father of 'M' moved in the High Court of Calcutta a petition under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and Article 227 of the Constitution for an order quashing the warrant of arrest issued against 'M' and all proceedings taken pursuant thereto and restraining the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the Union of India from taking any further steps pursuant to the said warrant of arrest and causing 'M' to be extradited from Hong Kong to India.

Held, the Chief Presidency Magistrate had the power to issue the warrant for the arrest of 'M', because there was prima facie evidence before him that 'M' had committed certain offences which he was competent to try. The warrant was in Form II of Sch. V of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the warrant was to be successfully executed against 'M' who was not in India, assistance of the executive Government had to be obtained. It was not an invasion upon the authority of the Courts when they were informed that certain procedure may be followed for obtaining the assistance of the executive Department of the State in securing through diplomatic channels extradition of fugitive offenders. Issue of the warrant and the procedure followed in transmitting the warrant were not illegal, not even irregular.

It was true that under the Extradition Act 34 of 1962 no notification had been issued including Hong Kong in the list of the Commonwealth countries from which extradition of fugitives from justice may be secured. The provisions of the Extradition Act, 1962 could not be availed of for securing the presence of 'M' for trial in India. But that did not operate as a bar to the requisition made by the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, if they were able to persuade the Colonial Secretary, Hong Kong, to deliver 'M' for trial in this country.

By Section 82 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a warrant of arrest may be executed at any place in India. That provision does not impose any restriction upon the power of the Police Officer. The section only declares, in that, every warrant issued by any Magistrate in India may be executed at any place in India. Execution of the warrant is not restricted to the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate issuing the warrant or of the Court to which he is subordinate. Merely, because for the purpose of the extradition procedure, in a statute passed before the attainment of independence by the former colonies and dependencies, certain territories continue to be referred to as "British Possessions", the statute does not become inapplicable to those territories. The expression "British Possession" in the old statutes merely survives as an artificial mode of reference, undoubtedly not consistent with political realities, but does not imply for the purpose of the statute or otherwise political dependence of the Government of the territories referred to. It is not for the Courts of India to take umbrage at expressions used in the statutes of other countries and to refuse to give effect to Indian laws which govern the problems arising before them. India is now a sovereign republic, but that by itself does not render the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, inapplicable to India. AIR 1954 SC 517, held needed to be reconsidered but not referred to larger Bench in view of repeal of the Act by Extradition Act of 1962.

'Extradition' is the surrender by one State to another of a person desired to be dealt with for crimes of which he has been accused or convicted and which are justiciable in the courts of the other State. Surrender of a person within the State to another State—whether a citizen or an alien—is a political act done in pursuance of a treaty or an arrangement ad hoc. It is founded on the broad principle that it is in the interest of civilized communities that crimes should not go unpunished, and on that account it is recognised as a part of the comity of nations that one State should ordinarily afford to another State assistance towards bringing offenders to justice. The law relating to extradition between independent States is based on treaties. But the law has operation—national as well as international. It governs international relationship between the sovereign States which is secured by treaty obligations. But whether an offender should be handed over pursuant to a requisition is determined by the domestic law of the State on which the requisition is made. Though extradition is granted in implementation of the international commitments of the State the procedure to be followed by the Courts in deciding, whether extradition should be granted and on what terms, is determined by the municipal law.

The functions which the Courts in the two countries perform are therefore different. The Court within whose jurisdiction the offence is committed decides whether there is prima facie evidence on which a requisition may be made to another country for surrender of the offender. When the State to which a requisition is made agrees consistently with its international commitments to lend its aid the requisition is transmitted to the Police authorities, and the Courts of that country consider, according to their own laws, whether the offender should be surrendered—the enquiry is in the absence of express provisions to the contrary relating to the prima facie evidence of the commission of the offence which is extraditable, the offence not being a political offence nor that the requisition being a subterfuge to secure custody for trial for a political offence. pellants; Mr. A. S. R. Chari, Senior Advocate, (M/s. B. P. Maheshwari and Sobhag Mal Jain, Advocates with him), for Respondent No. 1.

SHAH, J.: In the course of investigation of offences under Sections 420, 467, 471 and 120B I. P. Code the Officer in charge of the investigation submitted an application before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, for an order that a warrant for the arrest of Jugal Kishore More and certain other named persons be issued and that the warrant be forwarded with the relevant records and evidence to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, for securing extradition of More who was then believed to be in Hong Kong. It was stated in the application that More and others "were parties to a criminal conspiracy in Calcutta between May 1961 and December 1962 to defraud the Government of India in respect of India's foreign exchange", and their presence was required for trial.

2. The Chief Presidency Magistrate held an enquiry and recorded an order on July 19, 1965, that on the materials placed before him, a prima facie case was made out that a criminal conspiracy was "hatched in Calcutta" within his jurisdiction, and More was one of the conspirators. He accordingly directed that a non-bailable warrant in Form II Sch. V of the Code of Criminal Procedure be issued for the arrest of More, and the warrant be sent to the Secretary Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal, with a request to take all necessary steps to ensure execution of the warrant. A copy of the warrant was sent to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, for information. In the warrant More was described as Manager, Premko Traders of 7, Wyndhan Street and 28, King's Road, Hong Kong. The Chief Presidency Magistrate forwarded to the Government of West Bengal, the warrant with attested copies of the evidence recorded at the enquiry and photostat copies of documents tendered by the prosecution in evidence "in accordance with the procedure laid down in Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, letter No. K/52/6131/41 dated 21st May, 1955". The warrant was forwarded by the Government of West Bengal to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India. The Ministry of External Affairs forwarded the warrant to the High Commissioner for India, Hong Kong, who in his turn, requested the Colonial Secretary, Hong Kong, for an order extraditing More under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, (44 and 45 Vict, c 69), to India for trial for offences described in the warrant. The Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, endorsed the warrant and directed the Hong Kong Police, "pursuant to Section 13 of Part II and Section 26 of Part IV of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881", to arrest More. The order recited —

"Whereas I have perused this warrant for the apprehension of Jugal Kishore More, . . . accused of an offence punishable by law in Calcutta, Republic of India, which warrant purports to be signed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, and is sealed with the seal of the Court of the said Magistrate, and is attested by S K Chatterjee, Under Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs of the Republic of India and sealed with the seal of the said Ministry,

And whereas I am satisfied that this warrant was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue the same,

And whereas it has been represented to me that the said Jugal Kishore More is suspected of being in the Colony,

And whereas Order in Council S R and O No 28 of 1918 by virtue of which Part II of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, was made to apply to a group of British Possessions and Protective States including Hong Kong and British India, appears to remain in full force and effect so far as the law of Hong Kong is concerned

Now therefore under Section 13 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, I hereby endorse this Warrant and authorise and command you in Her Majesty's name, forthwith to execute this Warrant in the Colony to apprehend the said Jugal Kishore More, . . . wherever he may be found in the Colony and to bring him before a Magistrate of the said Colony to be further dealt with according to law"

3 More was arrested on November 24, 1965. By order dated April 4, 1966, the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, overruled the objection raised on behalf of More that the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed in the matter under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, since the Republic of India was no longer a "British Possession"

4 On May 16, 1966, Hanuman Prasad —father of More—moved in the High Court of Calcutta a petition under Section 489 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and Article 227 of the Constitution for an order quashing the warrant of arrest issued against More and all proceedings taken pursuant thereto and restraining the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the Union of India from taking any further steps pursuant to the said warrant of arrest and causing More to be extradited from Hong Kong to India. The petition was heard before a Division Bench of the High Court. A Roy, J, held that the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was not illegal and the procedure followed for securing extradition of More was not irregular. In his view the assumption made by the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, that for the purpose of the Fugitive Offenders Act, India was a "British Possession" was irrelevant since that was only a view expressed by him according to the municipal law of Hong Kong, and by acceding to the requisition for extradition and surrender made upon that country by the Government of India in exercise of sovereign rights the status of the Republic of India was not affected

5 In the view of Gupta, J, the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the steps taken pursuant to the warrant were without jurisdiction, that the request made to the Hong Kong Government by the Government of India was also without authority in the absence of a notified order under Section 3 of the Extradition Act, 1962, and the High Court could not ignore the "laws of the land, even to support a gesture of comity to another nation," that, what was done by the Hong Kong authorities pursuant to the request made for the surrender of More was "not an instance of international comity but was regarded as the legal obligation under the Fugitive Offenders Act under which the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, regarded India as a Colony or Possession of the British Commonwealth". The case was then posted for hearing before B Mukherji, J. The learned Judge held that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no power to issue the warrant of arrest in the manner he had done, — a manner which in his view was "unknown to the Code of Criminal Procedure", since the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, had ceased, on the coming into force of the Constitution, to be part of the law of India and could not on that account be resorted to for obtaining extradition of offenders from another country; that the instructions issued by the Government of India by letter No. 3516-J dated June 14, 1955, laying down the procedure to be followed by the courts for securing extradition of offenders from the Commonwealth countries should have been ignored by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and that the Extradition Act 34 of 1962 did not authorise the Chief Presidency Magistrate to issue a warrant and to send it to the Secretary, Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal; that there "was no legal basis for the requisition made by the Central Government to Hong Kong" for extradition or surrender of More or for the issue of the warrant by the Chief Presidency Magistrate; and that the demand made by the Government of India to the Government of Hong Kong by making a requisition to Hong Kong for the arrest of More "was not a political act, beyond the purview of law and judicial scrutiny", and being inconsistent with the law was liable to be rectified. He observed that the Central Government had the power under Section 3 of the Extradition Act, 1962, to issue a notification for including Hong Kong in the list of countries from which offenders may be extradited, but since the Government had not issued any notification under that clause in exercise of the executive power the Government could not attempt in violation of the statutory procedure to seek extradition which the law of India did not permit. The learned Judge accordingly ordered that the warrant of arrest dated July 30, 1965, issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, against More and all subsequent proceedings taken by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the other respondents be quashed. The State of West Bengal has appealed to this Court with special leave.

6. Extradition is the surrender by one State to another of a person desired to be dealt with for crimes of which he has been accused or convicted and which are justiciable in the courts of the other State. Surrender of a person within the State to another State — whether a citizen or an alien — is a political act done in pursuance of a treaty or an arrangement ad hoc. It is founded on the broad principle that it is in the interest of civilized communities that crimes should not go unpunished, and on that account it is recognised as a part of the comity of nations that one State should ordinarily afford to another State assistance towards bringing offenders to justice. The law relating to extradition between independent States is based on treaties. But the law has operation — national as well as international. It governs international relationship between the sovereign States which is secured by treaty obligations. But whether an offender should be handed over pursuant to a requisition is determined by the domestic law of the State on which the requisition is made. Though extradition is granted in implementation of the international commitments of the State the procedure to be followed by the Courts in deciding, whether extradition should be granted and on what terms, is determined by the municipal law.

7. As observed in Wheaten's International Law, Vol. I, 6th Edn., p. 213:

"The constitutional doctrine in England is that the Crown may make treaties with foreign States for the extradition of criminals, but those treaties can only be carried into effect by Act of Parliament, for the executive has no power, without statutory authority, to seize an alien here and deliver him to a foreign power."

Sanction behind an order of extradition is, therefore, the international commitment of the State under which the Court functions, but Courts jealously seek to protect the right of the individual by insisting upon strict compliance with the conditions precedent to surrender. The Courts of the country which make a requisition for surrender deal with the prima facie proof of the offence and leave it to the State to make a requisition upon the other State in which the offender has taken refuge. Requisition for surrender is not the function of the Courts but of the State. A warrant issued by a Court for an offence committed in a country from its very nature has no extra-territorial operation. It is only a command by the Court in the name of the sovereign to its officer to arrest an offender and to bring him before the Court. By making a requisition in pursuance of a warrant issued by a Court of a State to another State for assistance in securing the presence of the offender, the warrant is not invested with extra-territorial operation. If the other State requested agrees to lend its aid to arrest the fugitive the arrest is made either by the issue of an independent warrant or endorsement or authentication of the warrant of the Court which issued it. By endorsement or authentication of a warrant the country in which an offender has taken refuge signifies its willingness to lend its assistance, in implementation of the treaties or international commitments and to secure the arrest of the offender. The offender arrested pursuant to the warrant or an endorsement is brought before the Court of the country to which the requisition is made, and the Court holds an inquiry to determine whether the offender may be extradited. International commitment or treaty will be effective only if the Court of a country in which the offender is arrested after enquiry is of the view that the offender should be surrendered.

8 The functions which the Courts in the two countries perform are therefore different. The Court within whose jurisdiction the offence is committed decides whether there is prima facie evidence on which a requisition may be made to another country for surrender of the offender. When the State to which a requisition is made agrees consistently with its international commitments to lend its aid the requisition is transmitted to the Police authorities, and the Courts of that country consider, according to their own laws, whether the offender should be surrendered — the enquiry is in the absence of express provisions to the contrary relating to the prima facie evidence of the commission of the offence which is extraditable, the offence not being a political offence nor that the requisition being a subterfuge to secure custody for trial for a political offence.

9 Prior to January 26, 1950, there was in force in India the Indian Extradition Act 15 of 1903, which as the preamble expressly enacted was intended to provide for the more convenient administration of the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873, and the Foreign Jurisdiction Act of 1881 — both enacted by the British Parliament. The Act enacted machinery in Ch II for the surrender of fugitive criminals in case of Foreign States i.e., States to which the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 applied and in Ch II for surrender of fugitive offenders in case of "His Majesty's Dominions". The Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 sought to give effect to arrangements made with foreign States with respect to the surrender to such States of any fugitive criminals Her Majesty may by Order in Council, direct and to prescribe the procedure for extraditing fugitive offenders to such foreign States.

10. As observed in Halsbury's Law of England Vol 16, 3rd Edn, 1161 at p. 567:

"When a treaty has been made with a foreign State and the Extradition Acts have been applied by Order in Council, one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State may, upon a requisition made to him by some person recognised by him as a diplomatic representative of that foreign State, by order under his hand and seal, signify to a police magistrate that such a requisition has been made and require him to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive criminal if the criminal is in, or is suspected of being in, the United Kingdom."

11 The warrant may then be issued by a police magistrate on receipt of the order of the Secretary of State and upon such evidence as would in his opinion justify the issue of the warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in England.

12 The procedure for extradition of fugitive offenders from "British possessions" was less complicated. When the Extradition Act was applied by Order in Council unless it was otherwise provided by such Order, the Act extended to every "British possession" in the same manner as if throughout the Act the "British possessions" were substituted for the United Kingdom but with certain modifications in procedure.

13. Under Part I of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 a warrant issued in one part of the Crown's Dominion for apprehension of a fugitive offender, could be endorsed for execution in another Dominion. After the fugitive was apprehended he was brought before the Magistrate who heard the case in the same manner and had the same jurisdiction and powers as if the fugitive was charged with an offence committed within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. If the Magistrate was satisfied, after expiry of 15 days from the date on which the fugitive was committed to prison, he could make an order for surrender of the fugitive on the warrant issued by the Secretary of State or an appropriate officer. There was also provision for "inter-colonial backing of warrants" within groups of "British possessions" to which Part I of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 had been applied by Order in Council. In such groups a more rapid procedure for the return of fugitive offenders between possessions of the same group was in force. Where in a "British possession", of a group to which part II of the Act applied, a warrant was issued for the apprehension of a person accused of an offence punishable in that possession and such term is or was suspected of being, in or on the way to another British possession of the same group, a magistrate in the last-mentioned possession if satisfied that the warrant was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue the same, was bound to endorse such warrant, and the warrant so endorsed was sufficient authority to apprehend, with the jurisdiction of the endorsing Magistrate, the person named in the warrant, and to bring him before the endorsing Magistrate or some other Magistrate in the same possession. If the magistrate before whom a person apprehended was brought was satisfied that the warrant was duly authenticated and was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue it, and the identity of the prisoner was established he could order the prisoner to be returned to the British possession in which the warrant was issued, and for that purpose to deliver into the custody of the persons to whom the warrant was addressed or of any one or more of them, and to be held in custody and conveyed to that possession, there to be dealt with according to law as if he had been there apprehended. This was in brief the procedure prior to January 26, 1950.

14. The President of India adapted the Extradition Act, 1903, in certain particulars. The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 and the Extradition Act, 1870, in their application to India were however not repealed by the Indian Parliament and to the extent they were consistent with the constitutional scheme they remained applicable. In order to maintain the continued application of laws the British Parliament, notwithstanding India becoming a Republic, enacted the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949 which by Section 1 provided:—

“(1) On and after the date of India's becoming a republic, all existing law, that is to say, all law which, whether being a rule of law or a provision of an Act of Parliament or of any other enactment or instrument whatsoever, is in force on that date or has been passed or made before that date and comes into force thereafter, shall, until provision to the contrary is made by the authority having power to alter that law and subject to the provisions of sub-section (3) of this section, have the same operation in relation to India, and to persons and things in any way belonging to or connected with India, as it would have had if India had not become a republic.

(3) His Majesty may by Order in Council make provision for such satisfaction of any existing law to which this Act extends as may appear to him to be necessary or expedient in view of India's becoming a republic while remaining a member of the Commonwealth, and subsection (1) of this section shall have effect in relation to any such laws as modified by such an order in so far as the contrary intention appears in the order. An Order in Council under this section:—

(a) may be made either before or after India becomes a republic, and may be revoked or varied by a subsequent Order in Council; and

(b) shall be subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament.”

15. In 1954 this Court was called upon to decide a case relating to extradition to Singapore, a British Colony, of a person alleged to be a fugitive offender: State of Madras v. C. G. Menon, 1955-1 SCR 280 = (AIR 1954 SC 517). In that case Menon and his wife were apprehended and produced before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, pursuant to warrants of arrest issued under the provisions of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. Arrests were made in pursuance of requisition made by the Colonial Secretary of Singapore requesting the assistance of the Government of India to arrest and return to the Colony of Singapore the Menons under warrants issued by the Police Magistrate of Singapore. Menons pleaded that the Fugitive Act, 1881, under which the action was sought to be taken against them was repugnant to the Constitution of India and was void and unenforceable. The Chief Presidency Magistrate referred two questions of law for decision of the High Court of Madras:—

(1) Whether the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, applies to India after 26th January, 1950, when India became a Sovereign Democratic Republic; and

(2) Whether, even if it applied, it or any of its provisions, particularly Part II thereof, is repugnant to the Constitution of India, and is therefore void and/or inoperative.

The High Court held that the Fugitive Offenders Act was inconsistent with the fundamental right of equal protection of the laws guaranteed by Article 14 of the Constitution and was void to that extent and unenforceable against the petitioners. In appeal brought to this Court it was observed:

"It is plain from the * * * provisions of the Fugitive Offenders Act as well as from the Order in Council that British Possessions which were contiguous to one another and between whom there was frequent inter-communication were treated for purposes of the Fugitive Offenders Act as one integrated territory and a summary procedure was adopted for the purpose of extraditing persons who had committed offences in these integrated territories. As the laws prevailing in those possessions were substantially the same, the requirements that no fugitive will be surrendered unless a prima facie case was made against him was dispensed with. Under the Indian Extradition Act, 1903, also a similar requirement is insisted upon before a person can be extradited.

The situation completely changed when India became a Sovereign Democratic Republic. After the achievement of independence and the coming into force of the new Constitution by no stretch of imagination could India be described as a British Possession and it could not be grouped by an Order in Council amongst those Possessions. Truly speaking, it became a foreign territory so far as other British Possessions are concerned and the extradition of persons taking asylum in India, having committed offences in British Possessions could only be dealt with by an arrangement between the Sovereign Democratic Republic of India and the British Government and given effect to by appropriate legislation. The Union Parliament has not so far enacted any law on the subject and it was not suggested that any arrangement has been arrived at between these two Governments. The Indian Extradition Act, 1903, has been adapted but the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, which was an Act of the British Parliament has been left severely alone. The provisions of that Act could only be made applicable to India by incorporating them with appropriate changes into an Act of the Indian Parliament and by enacting an Indian Fugitive Offenders Act. In the absence of any legislation on those lines, it seems difficult to hold that Section 12 or Section 14 of the Fugitive Offenders Act has force in India by reason of the provisions of Article 372 of the Constitution. The whole basis for the applicability of Part II of the Fugitive Offenders Act has gone. India is no longer a British Possession and no Order in Council can be made to group it with other British Possessions. The political background and shape of things when Part II of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, was enacted and envisaged by that Act having completely changed, it is not possible without radical legislative changes to adapt that Act to the changed conditions. That being so, in our opinion, the tentative view expressed by the Presidency Magistrate was right.

After this judgment was delivered, the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, issued a notification on May 21, 1955, to all State Governments of Part A, B, C & D States. It was stated in the notification that in a certain case of extradition of an offender, the Supreme Court of India recently ruled that in the changed circumstances, the English Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, is no longer applicable to India. There can therefore, be no question of issuing a warrant of arrest, addressed to a foreign police or a foreign Court, in respect of persons who are residing outside India except in accordance with the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(2) In the circumstances, to obtain a fugitive offender from the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth countries, the following procedure may be adopted as long as the new Indian Extradition law is not enacted and the Commonwealth countries continue to honour our requests for the surrender of the fugitive offenders notwithstanding decisions of the Supreme Court,

(a) The Magistrate concerned will issue a warrant for the arrest of the fugitive offender to Police officials of India in the usual form prescribed under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(b) The warrant for arrest, accompanied by all such documents as would enable a prima facie case to be established against the accused will be submitted by the Magistrate to the Government of India in the Ministry of External Affairs, through the State Government concerned.

3 This ministry, in consultation with the Ministries of Home Affairs, and Law, will make a requisition for the surrender of a fugitive offender in the form of a letter, requesting the Secretary of State (in the case of dominions, the appropriate authority in the dominion) to get the warrant endorsed in accordance with law. This letter will be addressed to the Secretary of State (or other appropriate authority in case of Dominions) through the High Commissioner for India in the United Kingdom/Dominion concerned and will be accompanied by the warrant issued by the Magistrate at (a) of para 2 above and other documents received therewith." The Chief Presidency Magistrate Calcutta made out the warrant for the arrest of More pursuant to that notification and sent the warrant to the Secretary, Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal. Validity of the steps taken in accordance with the notification by the Chief Presidency Magistrate is questioned in this appeal.

16. To complete the narrative, it is necessary to refer to the Extradition Act 34 of 1962. The Parliament has enacted Act 34 of 1962 to consolidate and amend the law relating to the extradition of fugitive criminals. It makes provisions by Ch. II for extradition of fugitive criminals to foreign States and to commonwealth countries to which Ch. III does not apply. Chapter III deals with the return of fugitive criminals to commonwealth countries with extradition arrangements. By Section 12 it is provided:

"(1) This Chapter shall apply only to any such commonwealth country to which, by reason of an extradition arrangement entered into with that country, it may seem expedient to the Central Government to apply the same.

(2) Every such application shall be by notified order, and the Central Government may, by the same or any subsequent notified order, direct that this Chapter and Chapters I, IV and V shall, in relation to any such commonwealth country apply subject to such modifications, exceptions, conditions and qualifications as it may think fit to specify in the order for the purpose of implementing the arrangement."

Section 13 provides that the fugitive criminals from commonwealth countries may be apprehended and returned. Chapter IV deals with the surrender or return of accused or convicted persons from foreign States or commonwealth countries. By Section 19 it was provided that:—

"(1) A requisition for the surrender of a person accused or convicted of an extradition offence committed in India and who is or is suspected to be, in any foreign State or a commonwealth country to which Chapter III does not apply, may be made by the Central Government:—

(a) to a diplomatic representative of that State or country at Delhi; or

(b) to the Government of that State or country through the diplomatic representative of India in that State or country; and if neither of these modes is convenient, the requisition shall be made in such other mode as is settled by arrangement made by the Government of India with that State or country.

(2) A warrant issued by a magistrate in India for the apprehension of any person who is, or is suspected to be, in any commonwealth country to which Chapter III applies shall be in such form as may be prescribed."

By Clause (a) of Section 2 the expression "commonwealth country" means "a commonwealth country specified in the First Schedule and such other commonwealth country as may be added to that Schedule by the Central Government by notification in the Official Gazette, and includes every constituent part, colony or dependency of any commonwealth country so specified or added". But in the Schedule to the Act "Hong Kong" is not specified as one of the commonwealth country and no notification has been issued by the Government of India under Section 2 (a) adding to the First Schedule "Hong Kong" as a commonwealth country. It is common ground between the parties that the provisions of the Extradition Act, 1962, could not be resorted to for making the requisition for surrender of the fugitive offender from Hong Kong and no attempt was made in that behalf.

17. Validity of the action taken by the Chief Presidency Magistrate must, therefore, be adjudged in the light of the action taken pursuant to the notification issued by the Government of India on May 21, 1955. Counsel for the respondent More urged that the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was intended to be and could in its very nature be a legal warrant enforceable within India: it had no extra-territorial operation, and could not be enforced outside India, and when the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, purported to endorse that warrant for enforcement within Hong Kong he had no authority to do so. But this Court has no authority to sit in judgment over the order passed by the Hong Kong Central Magistrate. The Magistrate acted in accordance with the municipal law of Hong Kong and agreed to the surrender of the offender; his action cannot be challenged in this Court.

18. It may also be pointed out that Form II of the warrant prescribed in Schedule V of the Code of Criminal Procedure only issues a direction under the authority of the Magistrate to a Police Officer to arrest a named person and to produce him before the Court. It does not state that the warrant shall be executed in any designated place or area. By Section 82 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a warrant of arrest may be executed at any place in India. That provision does not impose any restriction upon the power of the Police Officer. The section only declares, in that, every warrant issued by any Magistrate in India may be executed at any place in India. Execution of the warrant is not restricted to the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate issuing the warrant or of the Court to which he is subordinate.

19 In Emperor v Vinayak Damodar Savarkar, (1911) ILR 35 Bom 225 the Bombay High Court considered the question whether a person who was brought to the country and was charged before a Magistrate with an offence under the Indian Penal Code was entitled to challenge the manner in which he was brought into the country from a foreign country. Savarkar was charged with conspiracy under Sections 121, 121A, 122 and 123 of the Indian Penal Code. He was arrested in the United Kingdom and brought to India after arrest under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. When the ship in which he was being brought to India was near French territory Savarkar escaped from police custody and set foot on French territory at Marseilles. He was arrested by the police officers without reference to the French police authorities and brought to India. It was contended at the trial of Savarkar that he was not liable to be tried in India, since arrest by the Indian police officers in a foreign territory was without jurisdiction. Scott, C J., who delivered the principal judgment of the Court rejected the contention. He observed

"Where a man is in the country and is charged before a Magistrate with an offence under the Penal Code it will not avail him to say that he was brought there illegally from a foreign country." It is true that Savarkar was produced before the Court and he raised an objection about the validity of the trial on the plea that he was illegally brought to India after unlawful arrest in foreign territory. In the present case we are concerned with a stage anterior to that. The respondent More though arrested in a foreign country lawfully by the order of the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, had not been surrendered and the invalidity of the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate is set up as a ground for refusing to obtain extradition of the offender. But on the principle of Vinayak Damodar Savarkar's case, (1911) ILR 35 Bom 225 the contention about the invalidity of the arrest cannot affect the jurisdiction of the Courts in India to try More if and when he is brought here.

20. The Indian Extradition Act 15 of 1903 which was enacted to provide for the more convenient administration of the English Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873 and the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, remained in operation. But after January 26, 1950, India is no longer a "British Possession". In C G Menon's case, 1955-1 SCR 280=(AIR 1954 SC 517) it was decided by this Court that application of Sections 12 and 14 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, for surrendering an offender to a Commonwealth country in pursuance of a requisition under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, is inconsistent with the political status of India. It is somewhat unfortunate that the Court hearing that case was not invited to say anything about the operation of the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949.

21. But C G Menon's case, 1955-1 SCR 280=(AIR 1954 SC 517) was a reverse case, in that, the Colonial Secretary of Singapore had made a requisition for surrender of the offender for trial for offences of criminal breach of trust in Singapore. Whether having regard to the political status of India since January 26, 1950, the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, in so far as it purported to treat India as a "British Possession" imposed an obligation to deliver offenders in pursuance of the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949, is a question on which it is not necessary to express an opinion. By the declaration of the status of India as a Republic, India has not ceased to be a part of the Commonwealth and the United Kingdom and several Colonies have treated the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, as applicable to them for the purpose of honouring the requisition made by the Republic of India from time to time. In Re Government of India and Mubarak Ali Ahmed 1952-1 All ER 1060 an attempt to resist in the High Court in England the requisition by the republic of India to surrender an offender who had committed offences in India and had fled justice failed. Mubarak Ali a native of Pakistan was being tried in the Courts in India on charges of forgery and fraud. He broke his bail and fled to Pakistan and thereafter to England. He was arrested on a provisional warrant issued by the London Metropolitan Magistrate on the application of the Government of India. After hearing legal submissions the Metropolitan Magistrate made an order under Section 5 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, for Mubarak Ali's detention in custody pending his return to India to answer the charges made against him. Mubarak Ali then filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus before the Queen's Bench of the High Court. It was held that the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, was in force between India and Great Britain on January 26, 1950, when India became a republic and it was continued to apply by virtue of Section 1 (1) of the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949, and, therefore, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order for the applicant's return. Pursuant to the requisition made by the Government of India, Mubarak Ali was surrendered by the British Government. Mubarak Ali was then brought to India and was tried and convicted. One of the offences for which he was tried resulted in his conviction and an appeal was brought to this Court in Mubarak Ali Ahmed v. State of Bombay, 1958 SCR 328=(AIR 1957 SC 857).

22. There are other cases as well, in which orders were made by the British Courts complying with the requisitions made by the Governments of Republics within the Commonwealth, for extradition of offenders under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. An offender from Ghana was ordered to be extradited pursuant to the Ghana (Consequential Provision) Act, 1960, even after Ghana became a republic: Re, Kwesi Armah, 1966-2 All ER 1006. On July 1, 1960, Ghana while remaining by virtue of the Ghana (Consequential Provision) Act, 1960, a member of the Commonwealth became a Republic. Kwesi Armah who was a Minister in Ghana fled the country in 1966 and took refuge in the United Kingdom. He was arrested under a provisional warrant issued under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. The Metropolitan Magistrate being satisfied that the Act of 1881 still applied to Ghana and that a prima facie case had been made out against the applicant in respect of two alleged contraventions of the Ghana Criminal Code, 1960, by corruption and extortion when he was a public officer, committed Kwesi Armah to prison pending his return to Ghana to undergo trial. A petition for a writ of habeas corpus before the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court was refused. Edmund Davies,

J., was of the view that the Act of 1881 applied to the Republic of Ghana, in its new form, just as it did before the coup d'état of February 1966. The case was then carried to the House of Lords: Armah v. Government of Ghana, 1966-3 All ER 177. The questions decided by the House of Lords have no relevance in this case. But it was not even argued that a fugitive offender from a republic which was a member of the Commonwealth could not be extradited under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881.

23. There is yet another recent judgment of the House of Lords dealing with repatriation of a citizen of the Republic of Cyprus: Zacharia v. Republic of Cyprus, 1962-2 All ER 438. Warrants were issued against Zacharia on charges before the Courts in Cyprus of offences of abduction demanding money with menaces and murder. Under the orders issued by a Bow Street Magistrate under Section 5 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, Zacharia was committed to prison pending his return to Cyprus. An application for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the offences alleged against him were political and that the application for the return of the fugitive was made out of motive for revenge was rejected by the Queen's Bench Division and it was ordered that Zacharia be repatriated. The order was confirmed in appeal to the House of Lords.

24. Merely because for the purpose of the extradition procedure, in a statute passed before the attainment of independence by the former Colonies and dependencies, certain territories continue to be referred to as "British Possessions," the statute does not become inapplicable to those territories. The expression "British Possession" in the old statutes merely survives as an artificial mode of reference, undoubtedly not consistent with political realities but does not imply for the purpose of the statute or otherwise political dependence of the Government of the territories referred to. It is not for the Courts of India to take umbrage at expressions used in statutes of other countries and to refuse to give effect to Indian laws which govern the problems arising before them. It is interesting to note that by express enactment the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, remains in force as a part of the law of the Republic of Ireland: see Ireland Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6 c. 41). In Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., Vol. 5 Article 987, p 433 — in dealing with the expression "Her Majesty's Dominions" in old statutes, it is observed

"The term 'Her Majesty's Dominions' means all the territories under the sovereignty of the Crown, and the territorial waters adjacent thereto. In special cases it may include territories under the protection of the Crown and mandated and trust territories. References to Her Majesty's dominions contained in statutes passed before India became a republic are still to be construed as including India, it is usual to name India separately from Her Majesty's dominions in statutes passed since India became a republic."

In foot-note (1) on p 433 it is stated, British India, which included the whole of India except the princely States, and the Government of India Act, 1935 as amended by Section 8 of the India and Burma (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act, 1940, formed part of Her Majesty's dominions and was a British possession, although it was not included within the definition of "colony". The territory comprised in British India was partitioned between the Dominions of India and Pakistan (Indian Independence Act, 1947), but the law relating to the definition of Her Majesty's dominions was not thereby changed, and it was continued in being by the India (Consequential Provision) Act, 1949 (12, 13 and 14 Geo 6 c 92), passed in contemplation of the adoption of a republican constitution by India. India is now a sovereign republic, but that by itself does not render the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, inapplicable to India.

25 If the question were a live question, we would have thought it necessary to refer the case to a larger Bench for considering the true effect of the judgment in C. C. Menon's case, 1955-1 SCR 280=(AIR 1954 SC 517). But by the Extradition Act 34 of 1962 the Extradition Act, 1870 and the latter Acts and also the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, have been repealed and the question about extradition by India of fugitive offenders under those Acts will not hereafter arise.

26 We are not called upon to consider whether in exercise of the power under the Fugitive Offenders Act a Magistrate in India may direct extradition of a fugitive offender from a "British Possession", who has taken refuge in India. It is sufficient to observe that the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong was according to the law applicable in Hong Kong competent to give effect to the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta and the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, had jurisdiction under the Fugitive Offenders Act, and, after holding inquiry, to direct that More be surrendered to India. The order of surrender was valid according to the law in force in Hong Kong, and we are unable to appreciate the grounds on which invalidity can be attributed to the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, for the arrest of More. That the Chief Presidency Magistrate was competent to issue a warrant for the arrest of More against whom there was prima facie evidence to show that he had committed an offence in India is not denied. If the Chief Presidency Magistrate had issued the warrant to the Commissioner of Police and the Commissioner of Police had approached the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, either through the local Government or directly with a view to secure the assistance of the Government of Hong Kong for facilitating extradition of More, no fault can be found. But Gupta, J., and Mukherji, J., thought that the notification issued by the Government of India setting out the procedure to be followed by a Magistrate, where the offender is not in Indian territory and his extradition is to be secured, amounted to an invasion on the authority of the Courts. We do not think that any such affront is intended by issuing the notification. The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, had not been expressly repealed even after January 26, 1950. It had a limited operation: the other countries of the Commonwealth were apparently willing to honour the international commitments which arose out of the provisions of that Act. But this Court on the view that since India had become a Republic, held that the Fugitive Offenders Act could not be enforced in this country, that decision presented to the Government of India a problem which had to be resolved by devising machinery for securing the presence of offenders who were fugitives from justice. The notification issued was only in the nature of advice about the procedure to be followed and did not in any manner seek to impose any executive will upon the Courts in matters judicial. Observations made by Mukherji, J., that the notification issued by the Central Government authorising the Chief Presidency Magistrate to issue the warrant in the manner he had done, came "nowhere near the law" and "to a Court of law it is waste paper beneath its notice" appear to proceed upon an incorrect view of the object of the notification.

27. The Chief Presidency Magistrate had the power to issue the warrant for the arrest of More, because there was prima facie evidence before him that More had committed certain offences which he was competent to try. The warrant was in Form II of Sch. V of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the warrant was to be successfully executed against More who was not in India, assistance of the executive Government had to be obtained. It is not an invasion upon the authority of the Courts when they are informed that certain procedure may be followed for obtaining the assistance of the executive Department of the State in securing through diplomatic channels extradition of fugitive offenders. In pursuance of that warrant, on the endorsement made by the Central Magistrate, Hong Kong, More was arrested. The warrant was issued with the knowledge that it could not be enforced within India and undoubtedly to secure the extradition of More. Pursuant to the warrant the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, moved through diplomatic channels, and persuaded the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong to arrest and deliver More. Issue of the warrant and the procedure followed in transmitting the warrant were not illegal, not even irregular.

28. One more argument remains to be noticed. It is true that under the Extradition Act 34 of 1962 no notification has been issued including Hong Kong in the list of the Commonwealth countries from which extradition of fugitives from justice may be secured. The provisions of the Extradition Act, 1962 cannot be availed of for securing the presence of More for trial in India. But that did not, in our judgment, operate as a bar to the requisition made by the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, if they were able to persuade the Colonial Secretary, Hong Kong, to deliver More for trial in this country. If the Colonial Secretary of Hong Kong was willing to hand over More for trial in this country, it cannot be said that the warrant issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate for the arrest of More with the aid of which requisition for securing his presence from Hong Kong was to be made, was illegal.

29. We are unable to agree with the High Court that because of the enactment of the Extradition Act 34 of 1962

the Government of India is prohibited from securing through diplomatic channels the extradition of an offender for trial of an offence committed within India. There was, in our judgment, no illegality committed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, in sending the warrant to the Secretary, Home (Political) Department, Government of West Bengal, for transmission to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, for taking further steps for securing the presence of More in India to undergo trial.

30. The appeal must therefore be allowed and the order passed by the High Court set aside. The writ petition filed by More must be dismissed.

Income-tax Act (1922), Section 10 — Business — Assessee dealer in shares — Issuance of bonus shares to assessee in respect of ordinary shares held by him — Bonus shares — Mode of valuation. I. T. Ref. No. 65 of 1954, D/- 27-4-1963 (Cal), Reversed.

Where bonus shares are issued in respect of ordinary shares held in a Company by an assessee, who is a dealer in shares, their real cost to the assessee cannot be taken to be nil or their face value. The proper method of valuation is to spread the cost of the old or the original shares over the old shares and the new issue viz., the bonus shares taken together where the bonus shares rank pari passu. The following Judgment of the Court

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J. These are two appeals by the Commissioner of Incometax, Central, Calcutta against Messrs Gold Mohore Investment Co Ltd and arise out of Income-tax Reference 63/54 decided by the Calcutta High Court on August 27, 1963. The point involved in the appeals is the valuation of bonus shares in the assessment years ending March 31, 1950 and 1951, respectively.

The previous years corresponding to the assessment years were the financial years ending 31st March, 1949 and 1950, respectively

2 The Assessee Company is a dealer in shares. Its method of valuation at the opening and closing of the stocks is to value shares at the cost in the Assessment Year 1949-50. The Company held 2,500 shares of the face value of Rs 10 each in the Howrah Mills Co Ltd. They had been purchased at Rs 85 per share and the total cost to the Assessee Company was Rs 2,12,500. In June 1948 bonus shares were issued by the Howrah Mills Co Ltd in proportion of three shares for every two original shares. The bonus shares were to rank pari passu with the old shares. As a result, the Assessee Company obtained 3750 shares of the face value of Rs 10 each. On August 2, 1948, the Assessee Company sold the original shares for Rs 72,087/8/-, i. e. at about Rs 29 per share. On March 18, 1949 the Assessee Company sold 3,750 shares for Rs 95,250, that is to say, at Rs 25 per share. The Assessee Company computed a loss of Rs 84,041/12/-. It calculated the loss in the following manner:

O S 2500	Shares (old)	2,12,500-0-0	2-3-48 (2500) (old)	Sh. 72,087-0-0
21-6-48	Cost of transfer of shares	1,379-4-0	18-3-49 (2750) (bonus) (1000) (bonus)	sh. 70,125-0-0 sh. 25,125-0-0
2-7-48	By crediting capital reserve a/c with the face value of bonus shares received free of cost		Loss to P & L a/c 6250 sh.	81,041-12-0
		2,51,379-4-0		2,51,379-4-0"

The bonus shares when they were issued were included in the trading account. According to the Assessee Company the bonus shares had fetched as profit Rs 95,250 less the face value of the shares, Rs. 37,500. This profit was set off against the loss on the original shares Rs. 2,12,500 less Rs. 72,087/8/-, giving the overall loss of Rs. 84,041/12/-, as stated above.

3. The Income-tax Officer did not accept this mode of calculation. According to him the loss was Rs. 46,541-12-0 as follows:

		Rs.	n.p.		Rs. n.p.
O. S. 2500	sh. (sold)	2,12,500.0-0		2-4-48 (2500) sh.	72,087-8-0
21-6-48	Cost of			old transfer	1,379-4-0		(2750)	70,125-0-0
2-7-48	of shares	Nil		bonus
	(3700) sh.			(1000)	25125-0-0
	bonus (sc)			bonus
		Loss to P & L a/c			46,541-12-0
		2,13,879-4-0			2,13,879-4-0.

On appeal to the Tribunal as to which method was correct, the Tribunal accepted the method of valuation of the Income-tax Officer.

4. In the Assessment year 1950-51, the account year being 1949-50, the Assessee Company held 122 first preference shares of Fort Gloster Jute Company Ltd. which had cost to the assessee Company Rs. 22,893/12/-. In the year of account there was an issue of bonus shares (second preference) and the Assessee Company received 137 shares of the face value of Rs. 100 each. The Assessee Company sold 125 shares (second preference) for Rs. 14,500. It was, therefore, left with 122 shares (first preference) and 12 shares (second preference). The Assessee Company returned a profit of Rs. 1,997 as follows:

O. S. (122) 1st Pref.		23,883-12-0		18-3-49	(125) 2nd Pref.		14,500-0-0
(137) 2nd Pref.		13,703-0-0			C. S. (122) 1st
Profit P & L a/c		1,997-0-0			1st Pref.
(259)					(12) 2nd		23,883-12-0
					Pref.		1,200-0-0
		39,583-12-0			(259)		39,583-12-0".

It will be seen that the cost of bonus shares was shown at the face value of the shares plus a minor charge of Rs. 3. Rupees 13,703 were credited to capital reserve. The Income-tax Officer spread out the cost of 122 1st preference shares

(Rs. 23,883/12/-) over the 122 shares (first preference) and 137 shares (second preference). He worked out the average cost at Rs. 92/3/6 per share and found the profit to be Rs. 2,973. His method of calculation was as follows:

O. S. 122 1st Pref.		23,883-12-0		125 Pref.	14503-0-0
137 2nd Pref.		Nil		G. S. 122 1st
free of				Pref. 12
cost				2nd Pref.
Profit to P & L		2973-9-0		-92/3/6	12357-5-0
a/c
(259)		26,857-5-0		(259)	26,857-5-0

5 The Tribunal confirmed the assessment as made by the Income-tax Officer. It may be pointed out that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner had in each case confirmed the order of the Income-tax Officer.

6 The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal then made a reference to the High Court and referred the following questions for the determination of the High Court—

"Whether in the facts and circumstances herein stated the assessee carrying on share dealing business, can add Rs 37,500 being the face value of bonus shares issued to it free of cost on the basis of its old share-holding, as cost of its share holding for the purpose of determining loss in dealing in Howrah Mills Co Ltd. shares"

"Whether in the facts and circumstances herein stated, the assessee carrying on share dealing business, can add Rs 13,700 being the face value of bonus shares issued to it free of cost on the basis of its old share holdings, as cost of its share holding for the purposes of determining profit in dealing in Fort Closter Jute Co shares?"

The High Court, by its judgment dated August 27, 1963, following its decision in Income-tax reference No 54/1960 (from which Civil Appeal 1239 of 1967 is also being decided today) held in favour of the Assessee Company. The High Court purported to follow a decision of the Patna High Court reported in Dalmia Investment Co Ltd v Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar, 1961-41 ITR 705 (Pat).

7. Mr Sen, in dealing with these appeals, points out that the decision of the Patna High Court in 1961-41 ITR 705 (Pat) was reversed by this Court in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar v. Dalmia Investment Co Ltd, 1964-52 ITR 567 = (AIR 1964 SC 1464) and the decision of this Court has further been followed in Commissioner of Income-tax, Central Calcutta v Cold Mohore Investment Co Ltd 1963-68 ITR 213 (SC). He contends that the method adopted by the Income-tax Officer in relation to the Fort Gloster Jute shares is the method approved of by this Court, namely, that where the shares are pari passu and the valuation is to be made at cost, the price of the original shares must be spread over the old and the new shares and they must be held to have been purchased at the average cost and that the profit or loss is to be calculated accordingly. In the decision of this Court in Dalmia Investment Co Ltd, 1964-52 ITR 567 = (AIR 1964 SC 1464) four methods of calculation were considered. The first method is to take the cost as equivalent to the face value of the bonus shares. This method was followed by the Assessee Company. The second method is to take the cost of the bonus shares at Nil, a method adopted by the Income-tax Officer in relation to the Howrah Mills Co Ltd. A third method is to take the cost of the original shares and to spread it over the original shares and the bonus shares taken collectively, and a fourth method is to find out the fall in the price of the original shares at the stock exchange and to attribute this to the bonus shares. After considering all the four methods, this Court held that the correct method to apply in cases where bonus shares rank pari passu is to follow the third method, namely, to take the cost of the original shares and to spread it over all the original as well as the bonus shares and to find out the average price of all the shares.

8 These cases would normally have been decided on the strength of the ruling of this Court but a doubt arose because in an earlier decision reported in Emerald and Co Ltd v Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1959-38 ITR 257 (SC) this Court seemed to have approved of another method. In that case the bonus shares were not sold. In applying different methods, the difference was only Rs 18 and the Court did not, therefore, express a final view on the matter and accepted the calculation of the Tribunal which was to ignore the bonus shares which were not sold and to calculate the profit and loss on the basis of the original shares, their cost and sale prices. The Court observed as follows:

"... The bonus shares are still there, and have not been sold. When they are sold, the question will arise as to what they cost. The books of the assessee company, as stated in the statement of the case, include the closing stock at cost price. In calculating profit and loss in the manner done by the Tribunal, there is no departure from this system. All the ordinary shares which were bought were sold. Their purchase price is known, as also their sale price. The first assessment is closed so far as the assessee company is concerned ...".

In other words, this Court did not go into the question of the valuation of the bonus shares at all but decided the case on the basis of the original holding, its cost price and its sale price. The matter was gone into more closely in the Dalmia's case, 1964-52 ITR 567 = (AIR 1964 SC 1464) and every method of calculation was considered there. We were invited to depart from the decision in the Dalmia's case, 1964-52 ITR 567 = (AIR 1964 SC 1464) and to take the view which appeared to have been taken in the Emerald's case, 1959-36 ITR 257 (SC). We have considered the matter once again and are of opinion that the method followed in the Dalmia's case, 1964-52 ITR 567 = (AIR 1964 SC 1464) is the correct method and there seems to be some error in stating that the method of the Tribunal in Emerald's case, 1959-36 ITR 257 (SC) was finally accepted. Perhaps the Court intended saying that the method of the Income-tax Officer was preferable but by error put down the name of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal. In any case that case did not decide the matter fully because as the Court itself observed the difference in the two methods only resulted in Rs. 18 being either added to or deducted from the ultimate result.

9. We accordingly accept the third method. The answers recorded by the High Court are discharged and we answer the question in the negative. The cases will be disposed of in the light of our observations by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal by calculating the profit and loss by spreading the cost over the original and the bonus shares and finding out the average cost per share. The appeals are allowed with costs.

(From Calcutta: 70 Cal WN 37)

M. HIDAYATULLAH, C. J., V. RAMA-SWAMI AND G. K. MITTER, JJ.

Ranjit Chandra Chowdhury, (dead) by his legal representatives, Appellants v. Mohitosh Mukherjee (dead) by his legal representative, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 299 of 1966, D/- 17-3-1969.

(A) Houses and Rents — West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (17 of 1950), Ss. 12 (1) (i) and 14 — Acceptance of rent after default by landlord and continuance of old tenancy — Default under old tenancy also continues — Landlord is entitled to use S. 12 (1) (i) and proviso to sub-sec. (3) of S. 14 — Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 113.

In respect of a tenancy of a premises the monthly rent for 8 months between September, 1954 and April, 1955 was admittedly paid by the tenant beyond the period limited by the agreement. On 11th August, 1955 the landlord served a notice determining the tenancy and asking the tenant to quit on the expiry of August, 1955. In October, 1955 the landlord accepted rent upto September, 1955 and thus waived the notice to quit and subsequently accepted rent from November, 1955 to February, 1956. On 9-2-1956 the landlord gave a second notice determining the tenancy and calling upon the tenant to deliver possession on the expiry of February, 1956.

Held that in the case the landlord by accepting rent did not assent to a new tenancy but continued the old tenancy. AIR 1961 SC 1067 & AIR 1965 SC 414 & AIR 1968 SC 471, Ref. to. (Para 8)

Under S. 113 of the Transfer of Property Act a notice is waived, by an act on the part of the person giving it showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting, provided there is the express or implied consent of the person to whom it is given. According to the tenant, in this case, the landlord acquiesced in having the old tenancy continued. If that were so, the old tenancy with the default continued and the landlord was thus able to use the provisions of S. 12 (1) (i) against the tenant as also the proviso to sub-s. (3) of Section 14 of the Act. There were two consecutive defaults and in the period of 18 months there were more than three defaults. The benefit of Section 14, sub-sec. (1) of the Act was not available to the tenant because of the operation of the proviso to sub-sec. (3). (Para 8)

(B) Houses and Rents — West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act (12 of 1956), S. 24 — Section is not retrospective but operates from the date when it came into force as it impinges on substantive rights of landlords and tenants and there is nothing in its language from which retrospectivity can be gathered. The suit was for ejectment of the tenant for default in payment of rent as agreed to between the parties.

2. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif, 1st Court, Alipur, but on appeal the judgment was reversed by the Subordinate Judge, 8th Court, Alipur whose decree was confirmed on appeal by the learned single Judge in the High Court at Calcutta. This appeal is against the judgment dated August 14, 1963 of the Calcutta High Court.

3. The premises were rented out to the original tenant as far back as May 1944 on monthly rent of Rs 130. The tenancy was from month to month. According to the landlord the rent of the premises had to be paid on or before the 7th day of each calendar month. According to the tenant the rent was to be paid as and when the 'sarkars' came to collect it on behalf of the landlord who employed such agents as he had many other houses rented out to other tenants. The High Court and the appellate Court below have accepted the case of the landlord and that is a finding with which we must start. The monthly rent for eight months between September 1954 to April 1955 was admittedly collected and paid beyond the period limited by the agreement. On August 11, 1955 a notice determining the tenancy was served on the original tenant and he was asked to quit on the expiry of the month of August, 1955 on pain of being held liable in damages at Rs. 5 per day for wrongful occupation from the 1st September, 1955. On October 2, 1955, the original landlord accepted rent upto September, 1955 and thus waived the notice which was given. It appears also that the landlord accepted rent from November 1, 1955 to February 1, 1956 and granted receipts for the rent. On February 9, 1956 a second notice determining the tenancy was served calling upon the original tenant to deliver possession of the premises on the expiry of February, 1956. The notice this time also added a condition that in case the original tenant overstayed in the premises beyond February, he would be liable to damages. The present suit was filed on March 1, 1956 with the result already stated.

4. In the written statement filed by the original tenant it was stated that the original landlord had waived the right of forfeiture for default upto August, 1955 when he accepted rent for September, 1955 and acquiesced in the continuance of the tenancy by receiving rent upto January, 1956. Thus, according to the original landlord resulted in 'the revival of the dead tenancy'. The High Court has held that the old tenancy continued between the parties with all its advantages and weaknesses and that the original landlord was, therefore, able to take advantage of the old defaults and base the notice on them.

5. In this appeal it is contended that after the landlord accepted the rent for September a new tenancy came into existence and the old defaults could not therefore be made the foundation of the second notice to quit. This is opposed by the answering respondent, the legal representative of the original landlord.

6. The matter is governed by the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1950. It came into force on March 30, 1950. This temporary Act remained in force till March 31, 1955 when it was repealed by the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 which came into force from March 31, 1956. However, as the suit had already been filed it continued to be governed by the repealed Act in view of Section 4 of the new Act which states

"that notwithstanding the repeal of the old Act any proceedings pending on the 31st day of March, 1956 would continue as if the said Act had been in force". Under the old Act there was a protection to tenants against eviction and that was enacted in Section 12 of the old Act. We are concerned with Section 12 (1) (i) and it reads as follows

"12 (1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any other Act or law, no order or decree for the recovery of possession of any premises shall be made by any Court in favour of the landlord against a tenant, including a tenant whose lease has expired:

Provided that nothing in the sub-section shall apply to any suit for decree for such recovery of possession:

* * * * *

(i) Subject to the provisions of Sec. 14, where the amount of two months' rent legally payable by the tenant and due from him is in arrears by not having been paid within the time fixed by contract, or in the absence of such contract by the fifteenth day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable or by not having been validly deposited in accordance with section 19."

Section 14 which is referred to here provided as follows:

"14 (i) If in a suit for recovery of possession of any premises from the tenant the landlord would not get a decree for possession but for clause (i) of the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 12, the Court shall determine the amount of rent legally payable by the tenant and which is in arrears taking into consideration any order made under sub-section (4) and effect thereof up to the date of the order mentioned hereafter as also the amount of interest on such arrears of rent calculated at the rate of nine and three-eighths per centum per annum from the day when the rents became arrears up to such date, together with the amount of such cost of the suit as is fairly allowable to the plaintiff-landlord and shall make an order on the tenant for paying the aggregate of the amounts (specifying in the order such aggregate sum) on or before a date fixed in the order.

(2) Such date fixed for payment shall be the fifteenth day from the date of the order excluding the day of the order.

(3) If within the time fixed in the order under sub-section (1), the tenant deposits in the court the sum specified in the said order, the suit, so far as it is a suit for recovery of possession of the premises, shall be dismissed by the court. In default of such payment the court shall proceed with the hearing of the suit:

Provided that the tenant shall not be entitled to the benefit of protection against eviction under this section if he makes default in payment of the rent referred to in clause (i) of the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 12 on three occasions within a period of eighteen months."

7. The tenant claims the benefit of Section 14 but the landlord relies upon the proviso to sub-section (3) quoted above. Further the tenant also relies upon Section 24 of the repealing Act which is to the following effect:

"24. When there is no proceeding pending in Court for the recovery of possession of the premises the acceptance of rent in respect of the period of default in payment of rent by the landlord from the tenant shall operate as a waiver of such default."

Therefore it is contended that the acceptance of rent in respect of the period of default in payment of rent under Section 12 (1) (i) in September operates as a waiver of the default under Section 24.

8. Mr. Bhattacharji on behalf of the tenant contends that the old tenancy was dead after the notice and on acceptance of rent a new tenancy came into existence. The other side contends that by the acceptance of rent, the old tenancy on the old terms continued. Each side has cited a number of rulings. We do not consider it necessary to refer to these rulings or to discuss the question. In Ganga Dutt Murarka v. Kartik Chandra Das, AIR 1961 SC 1067 and in Anand Nivas Private Ltd. v. Anandji Kalyanji's Pedhi, AIR 1965 SC 414 (particularly the first at page 1069) it was held in connection with a statutory tenancy that a landlord accepting rent does not assent to a new contractual tenancy but continues the old tenancy. In the Caleutta Credit Corporation Ltd. v. Happy Homes (P) Ltd., 1968-2 SCR 20 = (AIR 1968 SC 471) the subject has been discussed in detail. Under Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act a notice is waived, by an act on the part of the person giving it showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting, provided there is the express or implied consent of the person to whom it is given. Here the difficulty is solved by the attitude the tenant took in this case. His case was that the old tenancy revived and continued. According to him the landlord acquiesced in having the old tenancy continued. If we go by the tenant's own case it is obvious that the old tenancy with the default continued and the landlord was thus able to use the provisions of Section 12 (1) (i) against the tenant as also the proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 14 of the repealed Act. There were two consecutive defaults and in the period of 18 months there were more than three defaults. The benefit of Section 14 sub-section (1) of the repealed Act is not available to the tenant because of the operation of the proviso to sub-section (3). Further Section 24 of the new Act can hardly assist the tenant. That section is not retrospective and will operate from the date on which it came into force. Mr Bhattacharya claimed that it may be taken as a rule of decision or laying down a rule of evidence but we think it impinges upon the substantive rights of landlord and tenants which can only be claimed after the commencement of the Act and not before. The section puts an embargo on any claim based on default in payment of rent when the landlord accepts rent after default and therefore it affects the substantive right of the landlords. According to the accepted canons of interpretation of statutes, a substantive right cannot be taken away retrospectively unless the law expressly so states or there is a clear intent. There are no express words in the statute making S 24 retrospective and we fail to see any intent in it to apply to cases pending on March 31, 1958 when the new Act came into force, and thus suit was then pending. If it had been merely a matter of procedure or creating a rule of decision we might have held that the provisions applied to the suit, but that is not the case here. As we said the section creates a change in the substantive rights and therefore must be held to be prospective in operation and not retrospective unless we can gather retrospectivity from the language of the statute or by clear implication in it.

9. There is no question in this case that the tenant was in default according to Section 12 (1) (i) because he had been paying rents beyond the period limited by the agreement or by the section. These defaults were also more than three and therefore the proviso to Section 14 (3) deprived the tenant of the benefit of Section 14 (1). On the whole, therefore, the decision of the High Court was correct and we see no reason to differ from it.

10. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed but in view of the fact that the rent of the premises has been paid upto the date of hearing and the previous defaults were only so far that the rent was not paid before the date fixed for payment, we are of opinion that the parties in this case should be left to bear their own costs throughout. The tenant is further granted six months' time from the date of this judgment to vacate the pre-misses. The tenant further undertakes to deposit the rent as and when it falls due.

MKS/D V C. Appeal dismissed.

J. M. SHELAT, V. BHARGAVA AND C. A. VAIDIALINGAM, JJ.

Vallabhbhai Nathabhai, Appellant v. Bai Jivi and others, Respondents

Civil Appeal No. 104 of 1968, D/- 10-1-1969

Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (57 of 1948), Ss. 29, 84, 15 and 37 — Scope and object — Surrender invalid for want of writing and registration under S. 15 — Tenant is entitled to restoration of possession — His remedy is to apply under S. 29 and not under S. 84 — S. 29 (1) and S. 84 do not provide alternative remedies.

Under Sec. 15 (1) a tenant, as defined by Sec. 2 (18) of the Act, can terminate the tenancy in respect of the land held by him as a tenant by surrendering his interest in favour of his landlord and as provided by sub-sec. (2) on such surrender of the tenancy the landlord becomes entitled to retain the land so surrendered by the tenant in the same manner as when the tenancy is terminated under Secs 31 and 31A of the Act. The tenancy on such surrender comes to an end, and thereupon the relationship between them of a landlord and a tenant and the rights arising out of that relationship terminate. But a surrender by a tenant can only be valid and binding on him if it was in writing and was verified by the Mamlatdar, whose duty it is to ascertain whether the surrender was voluntary and was not under pressure or undue influence of the landlord. But once the surrender satisfies these two conditions it has the same effect as the termination of tenancy, and the landlord becomes entitled to retain the land of which possession is delivered to him by the tenant. In cases, however, where the surrender has not satisfied the two conditions, even if it is voluntary, it is no surrender and therefore there is no termination of relationship of a landlord and tenant, and the tenancy still continues and the tenant is entitled to retain possession and therefore to its restoration, though Sec. 15 does not in so many words provide it. (Para 3)

Whereas sub-sec. (2) of Sec. 29 is confined to an application by a landlord for possession from his tenant, sub-sec. (1) is not so confined and therefore a tenant can apply for possession against any one including the landlord. But for such an application the condition is that he must be one who is "entitled to possession" of the land in question "under any of the provisions of this Act." Thus, in all cases where a tenant is entitled to possession of land under any of the provisions of the Act, he has a right under Sec. 29 (1) to apply to the Mamlatdar for restoration of possession against any one including the landlord and it is the duty of the Mamlatdar, if satisfied that the tenant is entitled to such possession under any of the provisions of the Act, to restore possession to him. (Para 4)

In the case of a surrender which is not valid and binding the tenant may apply under S. 29 (1) and when an application under Sec. 29 (1) is made it becomes the duty of the Mamlatdar under Sec. 70, Cl. (n) read with Sec. 29 (1) to put the tenant in possession of the land in question "under this Act". In such a case the tenant is claiming possession under the provisions of the Act and not on the strength of his own title, as when he applies for possession against a trespasser. (Para 5)

The words "any person unauthorisedly occupying or wrongfully in possession of any land" in Sec. 84, no doubt, are words of wide import and would include a landlord who is in unauthorised occupation or is wrongfully in possession. A landlord who under an invalid surrender is in possession of the land is, no doubt, a person in unauthorised occupation or is wrongfully in possession. But then Sec. 84 in express terms limits its application to three types of cases only, namely, where (a) the transfer or acquisition of the land etc. is invalid under the Act, or (b) the management of which has been assumed under the Act, or (c) to the use and occupation of which he is not entitled under the provisions of the Act and the said provisions do not provide for the eviction of such person. The case where the surrender of lease is invalid for want of writing and verification under Sec. 15 would fall only under Cl. (c). This condition shows that while giving drastic powers of summary eviction to an administrative officer the legislature was careful to restrict his power firstly because the result otherwise would be to deprive the person evicted under Sec. 84 of his remedy of appeal before the Collector which he would have if the order were to be passed under Sec. 29 (1) and secondly, because it would enable a tenant to by-pass a judicial inquiry by the Mamlatdar under S. 29 (1) by directly applying to the Collector under S. 84. Such a result could not have been intended by the legislature. Therefore, the contention that Ss. 29 (1) and 84 provide alternative remedies and a choice to the tenant cannot possibly be correct. Case Law Ref. (Paras 6, 7)

Quaere: The question whether the condition of there being no other provision in the Act providing for eviction of a person in unauthorised occupation or wrongful possession (contained in Sec. 84) applies only to cases falling under clause (c) or to all cases under clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Sec. 84 left open. Mr. M. C. Bhandare and Mrs. Anjali K. Verma, Advocates and M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and O. C. Mathur, Advocates of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., for Appellant; Mr. S. T. Desai, Senior Advocate, (Mr. M. N. Shroff, Advocate for Mr. I. N. Shroff, Advocate, with him), for Respondent No. 1.

SHELAT, J.: The facts relevant to this appeal are short and no longer in dispute. Respondent 1 is the owner of Survey Nos. 974/2 and 975/4 situate in the village Delol in district Paunchmahals and the appellant at the material time was the tenant thereof. On May 15, 1956 the appellant voluntarily handed over possession of the said lands to respondent 1. It is, however, an admitted fact that the said surrender was not in writing and the procedure of inquiry and verification required by Section 15 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 57 of 1948 (hereinafter called the Act) was not gone through. The surrender though voluntary thus was not in accordance with Sec. 15 and therefore was not valid and binding on the appellant. It is not in dispute that respondent 1 thereafter personally cultivated the said lands. On January 16, 1961 the appellant applied to the Deputy Collector under Sec. 84 of the Act for summary eviction of respondent 1. The Deputy Collector dismissed the application holding that the tenant's remedy lay under Section 29 (1) of the Act. The Gujarat Revenue Tribunal, however, in a revision by the tenant set aside that order holding that Section 84 and not S. 29 (1) applied. Respondent 1 thereupon filed a writ petition under Article 227 in the High Court of Gujarat and the High Court held, on interpretation of Ss. 29 (1) and 84, that Section 84 did not apply in such cases and set aside the Tribunal's order. What is the scope of Section 84 of the Act is the question, therefore, arising in this appeal which is filed by the tenant after obtaining special leave from this Court.

2 On behalf of the appellant Mr. Bhaxdare raised the following contentions

1 that a surrender of tenancy contrary to Section 15 is an invalid surrender and does not terminate the tenancy,

2 that on such invalid surrender, if the landlord takes possession such possession is wrongful and unauthorised and therefore the land must be said to be in unauthorised occupation and wrongful possession of the landlord,

3 that when the tenant on such dis-possession files an application his right does not arise under any of the provisions of the Act as he has given up possession in breach of his right and title,

4 that in such a situation the tenant does not seek to enforce a right arising under the provisions of the Act but claims possession relying on his title as a tenant.

5 that such an application therefore falls under Section 84 and not under Section 29 (1), and

6 that Section 84 is directed against a person who is in unauthorised occupation and wrongful possession and therefore there is no warrant for any distinction between unauthorised occupation or wrongful possession arising under an invalid surrender and that arising under an invalid sale or transfer.

Mr. Desai for the respondents supported on the other hand, the High Court's judgment and relied on certain decisions of the High Courts of Bombay and Gujarat on the interpretation of Sections 29 (1) and 84 of the Act. Before we proceed to examine these contentions it is necessary first to read the relevant sections.

Section 15 reads as under:

"A tenant may terminate the tenancy in respect of any land at any time by surrendering his interest therein in favour of the landlord;

Provided that such surrender shall be in writing and verified before the Mamlatdar in the prescribed manner."

The relevant part of Section 29 (1) reads as under

"A tenant—entitled to possession of any land—under any of the provisions of this Act may apply in writing for such possession to the Mamlatdar."

Sub-section (2) of Section 29 provides that no landlord shall obtain possession of any land held by a tenant except under an order of the Mamlatdar. Section 84 reads as under:

"Any person unauthorisedly occupying or wrongfully in possession of any land—

(a) the transfer or acquisition of which either by the act of parties or by the operation of law is invalid under the provisions of this Act,

(b) the management of which has been assumed under the said provisions, or

(c) to the use and occupation of which he is not entitled under the said provisions and the said provisions do not provide for the eviction of such persons, may be summarily evicted by the Collector."

Section 15 (1) was inserted in the Act by Section 11 of Bombay Act 13 of 1956. Even before 1956 there was in the Act Section 5 (3) the proviso of which required a surrender of tenancy by a tenant to be in writing and verified by the Mamlatdar. There is, however, no dispute before us that the proviso to Section 15 (1) applies to the present case and that the surrender under which respondent 1 obtained possession of the land in question was neither in writing nor was verified in an inquiry before the Mamlatdar.

3 Under Section 15 (1) a tenant, as defined by Section 2 (18) of the Act, can terminate the tenancy in respect of the land held by him as a tenant by surrendering his interest in favour of his landlord and as provided by sub-section (2) on such surrender of the tenancy the landlord becomes entitled to retain the land so surrendered by the tenant in the same manner as when the tenancy is terminated under Sections 31 and 31A of the Act. The tenancy on such surrender comes to an end and thereupon the relationship between them of a landlord and a tenant and the rights arising out of that relationship terminate. The Legislature, however, was aware of the possibility of landlords taking advantage over the tenants and therefore to safeguard the tenants against such a possibility, it laid down through the proviso that a surrender by a tenant could only be valid and binding on him if it was in writing and was verified by the Mamlatdar. Before the Mamlatdar would verify such surrender it would be his duty to ascertain whether the surrender was voluntary and was not under pressure or undue influence of the landlord. But once the surrender satisfies these two conditions it has the same effect as the termination of tenancy: the tenancy comes to an end and the landlord becomes entitled to retain the land of which possession is delivered to him by the tenant surrendering his interest as a tenant therein. In cases, however, where the surrender has not satisfied the two conditions, even if it is voluntary, it is no surrender and therefore there is no termination of relationship of a landlord and tenant. Consequently even if the tenant has voluntarily surrendered possession and the landlord has taken it over, since the tenancy still continues the tenant obviously is entitled to retain possession and therefore to its restoration. Though, therefore, Section 15 does not in so many words provide that in such a case the tenant is entitled to restoration of possession, there being no valid surrender where the two conditions are not satisfied, the tenancy continues and the tenant can claim possession from the landlord as the tenant of the land in question such claim being based on his right as such tenant to be in possession of such land and the landlord's disability to terminate the tenancy under the provisions of the Act. It is true that Sec. 37 expressly provides for restoration of possession to the tenant in the eventuality provided therein while Section 15 does not so provide. But the right to restoration had to be provided for in Section 37 as there would be termination of tenancy which becomes revived and on revival thereof the tenant becomes entitled to restoration of possession. In a case under Section 15, however, if the surrender is not valid it is no surrender at all and there is no question of termination of tenancy. The tenant continues to be entitled to possession and therefore there is no question of the section having to provide for restoration of possession. There is, therefore, no force in the contention that in the case of an invalid surrender the tenant is not entitled to possession under the provisions of the Act. He is in fact entitled to claim back possession under Section 15 itself for under sub-section (2) the landlord becomes entitled to retain the land only if the surrender is in accordance with the provisions of Section 15.

4. Section 29 (1) confers a right on a tenant to apply to the Mamlatdar for possession and Section 29 (2) gives a right to a landlord to apply to the Mamlatdar to obtain possession of land held by a tenant. In both the cases it is the duty of the Mamlatdar to restore possession to the tenant or to the landlord, as the case may be. It will be noticed that whereas sub-section (2) is confined to an application by a landlord for possession from his tenant, sub-section (1) is not so confined and therefore a tenant can apply for possession against anyone including the landlord. But for such an application the condition is that he must be one who is "entitled to possession" of the land in question "under any of the provisions of this Act." Thus in all cases where a tenant is entitled to possession of land under any of the provisions of the Act, he has a right under Section 29 (1) to apply to the Mamlatdar for restoration of possession against anyone including the landlord and it is the duty of the Mamlatdar, if satisfied that the tenant is entitled to such possession under any of the provisions of the Act, to restore possession to him. Clauses (b) and (n) of Section 70 lay down the duties and functions of the Mamlatdar in the following words:

"(b) to decide whether a person is a tenant or a protected tenant or a permanent tenant."

"(n) to take measures for putting the tenant or landlord—into the possession of the land—under this Act."

Section 74 provides for an appeal to the Collector against the orders of the Mamlatdar in cases therein set out and Cl. (m) provides such an appeal against an order passed by the Mamlatdar under S. 29.

5. In the case of a surrender which is not valid and binding on the tenant there is, as aforesaid, no termination of tenancy, and therefore, the landlord is not entitled to retain the land even though possession thereof has been handed over to him or has been voluntarily taken by him. The position in such a case is that the tenant has a right to apply to the Mamlatdar for restoration of possession to him claiming that there has been no termination of tenancy, that his possession continues to be protected by the provisions of the Act and that, therefore, possession should be restored to him. Such an application lies under Sec 29 (1) and, when so made, it becomes the duty of the Mamlatdar under Sec 70, Cl (n) read with Sec 29 (1) to put the tenant in possession of the land in question "under this Act". In such a case the tenant is claiming possession under the provisions of the Act and not on the strength of his own title, as when he applies for possession against a trespasser. That clearly being the position, propositions 3, 4 and 5 of Mr Bhandare cannot be sustained.

6. The question then is whether a tenant who has a remedy under S 29 (1) can still apply to the Collector under Section 84. In other words, whether the Legislature has provided alternative remedies under both the sections to such a tenant? The words "any person unauthorisedly occupying or wrongfully in possession of any land" in Section 84, no doubt, are words of wide import and would include a landlord who is in unauthorised occupation or is wrongfully in possession. A landlord who under an invalid surrender is in possession of the land is, no doubt, a person in unauthorised occupation or is wrongfully in possession. But then Section 84 in express terms limits its application to three types of cases only, namely of a person unauthorisedly occupying or wrongfully in possession of the land (a) the transfer or acquisition of which etc is invalid under the Act, or (b) the management of which has been assumed under the Act, or (c) to the use and occupation of which he is not entitled under the provisions of the Act and the said provisions do not provide for the eviction of such person.

7. Mr Bhandare's argument, however, was that the present case falls under Clauses (a) and (c) of Section 84, that the condition of the other provisions of the Act providing for eviction of such a person applies only to cases falling under Clause (c) and not to those falling under Clause (a). We do not have to decide in the present case whether the said condition of there being no other provision in the Act providing for eviction of a person in unauthorised occupation or wrongful possession applies only to cases falling under Clause (c) or to all cases under Clauses (a), (b) or (c), as in our opinion the present case is clearly one falling under Clause (c) and not Cl (a) or (b) of Section 84. Clause (b) obviously cannot apply as the land in question was not one, the management of which was assumed under the provisions of the Act, namely, Sections 44, 45 and 61. So far as Clause (a) is concerned, it applies to cases in respect of the land, the transfer or acquisition of which either by the act of parties or by operation of law is invalid under the provisions of the Act. Clause (a) clearly refers to Ch V of the Act which lays down certain restrictions on transfers of agricultural lands and acquisition of estates and lands. Sections 63, 64 and 65 in that chapter prohibit transfers of agricultural land to non-agriculturists and recognize only sales to persons and at prices specified therein. Clause (a) therefore, applies to transfers or acquisitions which are in breach of the provisions of Ch V and possession or occupation whereof has been obtained under such invalid transfers or acquisitions. That being the position, the instant case would fall only under Clause (c) and not under Clause (a) as contended by Mr Bhandare, and therefore, the condition that S 84 would only apply to cases for which there is no other remedy under any of the provisions of the Act must apply to the present case. This condition shows that while giving drastic powers of summary eviction to an administrative officer the legislature was careful to restrict this power firstly because the result otherwise would be to deprive the person evicted under Section 84 of his remedy of appeal before the Collector which he would have if the order were to be passed under Section 29 (1) and secondly, because it would enable a tenant to by-pass a judicial inquiry by the Mamlatdar under Sec. 29 (1) by directly applying to the Collector under Section 84. Such a result could not have been intended by the legislature. Therefore, the contention that Ss 29 (1) and 84 provide alternative remedies and a choice to the tenant cannot possibly be correct.

8. We now turn to the decisions to which our attention was drawn by counsel. In Shankar Raoji v Mahadu Govind, (1955) 57 Bom LR 65 the High Court of Bombay observed that Section 29 (1) gave a right to the tenant to obtain possession through the Mamlatdar in every case where he was entitled to possession under any of the provisions of the Act and that the clear object of Section 29 (1) was that if the Mamlatdar was satisfied that the tenant was entitled to possession by reason of his tenancy it was his duty to protect that possession and order any one who had dispossessed him to restore possession to him. Section 29 (1) thus assumed that the tenant must claim possession as such under the provisions of the Act. In Durgaben v. Moria Bavia, 58 Bom LR 451 = (AIR 1956 Bom 706) the landlord obtained possession from the tenant under Section 29 (2) on the ground that the tenant had surrendered the lease. The tenant applied under Section 84 alleging that notwithstanding the order of the Mamlatdar under Section 29 (2), he had continued in possession and that the landlord had forcibly dispossessed him. It was held that the Collector had no jurisdiction under Section 84 and that the remedy if any, of the tenant was under Section 29 (1). In holding so, the High Court observed that it was only in the absence of a provision in the Act for eviction of an unauthorised person that the Collector had jurisdiction under S. 84 to order summary eviction. The High Court held that Sections 29 (1) and 84 did not provide for alternative remedies to the tenant, for, under Section 29 (1) he could claim possession on his title as a tenant under the provisions of the Act and not under Section 84. The High Court also further observed that if it were to construe the two sections as providing alternative remedies, such a construction would result in a curious consequence, viz., that in a case where a landlord has obtained possession after obtaining an order from the Mamlatdar such possession would obviously be under a title. If the tenant in such a case were to allege that the landlord's possession was unauthorised or wrongful and were to apply under Section 84, the Collector would have to decide the question whether the landlord's possession was wrongful or unauthorised or not. But in that case the Collector would decide it and set aside the Mamlatdar's order under his original jurisdiction under Section 84 and not under his appellate jurisdiction under Section 74 and Section 74 would thus be rendered superfluous. In Trambakal v. Shankerbhai, (1960) 62 Bom LR 261 the High Court of Bombay held that in order that there may be a valid transfer or acquisition through surrender, such surrender must be a lawful one and made in accordance with the provisions of the Act. If such a surrender was not verified and recognised under Section 15 there would be no cessation of tenancy rights and therefore if the landlord had obtained possession under such an invalid surrender the tenant retained the right to restoration of possession under the Act. It is clear that these decisions do not lay down anything contrary to what we have said above and therefore would not assist the appellant.

9. There are two unreported decisions, one by the High Court of Gujarat and the other by the High Court of Bombay to which also our attention was drawn. In Shankerlal v. Haria Vagha, Spl. Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1961, D/- 22-8-1961 (Guj) the facts were as follows: One Chandrasingh and his brothers owned Survey Nos. 23/2, 23/3 and 26/5. In 1956-57 opponent 2 surrendered these lands to Chandrasingh who personally cultivated them. Until 1955-56 opponent 1 cultivated Survey No. 26/5. He thereafter surrendered that Survey number to Chandrasingh and his brothers who personally cultivated it thereafter. The Mamlatdar admittedly had held no inquiry in respect of these surrenders under Section 15. On January 28, 1959 Chandrasingh and his brothers sold these lands to the petitioners and the petitioners thereafter cultivated them in 1959-60. In 1959 opponents 1 and 2 applied to the Collector under Section 84 and the Collector ordered restoration of possession to opponents 1 and 2. The Gujarat Revenue Tribunal rejected a revision application filed by the petitioners against the said order. In a writ petition under Art. 227 the petitioners raised two contentions before the High Court: (1) that they were not in unauthorised occupation or wrongfully in possession as they derived title from the owners, their vendors, and (2) that in any event the opponents had a remedy under Section 29 (1) and therefore could not have recourse to Sec. 84. As regards the first contention the High Court held that the surrenders by opponents 1 and 2, not being in writing and unverified, were not binding on them, the relationship of tenant and landlord had not, therefore, terminated and opponents 1 and 2 were entitled to possession of the lands. That was the position which obtained on January 28, 1959 when Chandrasingh and his brothers purported to sell the lands to the petitioners. The petitioners, therefore, were in unauthorised possession as Chandrasingh and his brothers were not entitled to possession and could not transfer possession to the petitioners. The High Court also held that the said sale was contrary to Section 64 and therefore invalid and did not create any rights as to ownership or possession in favour of the petitioners. The possession of the petitioners, therefore, was unauthorised and wrongful and Section 84 applied and the first contention failed. As to the second contention the High Court held that under Section 29 (1) a tenant could apply to the Mamlatdar for possession but that required that the right to possession must arise "under the provisions of the Act". If the tenant did not seek to enforce a right arising under any of the provisions of the Act but claimed possession on his own title as a tenant, Section 29 (1) would not apply and his remedy would be under Section 84 only. The High Court held that when a tenant claimed possession not relying upon any incident of his contract of tenancy nor on any provisions of the Act but on his own title to possession, that is, to protect his possession as a tenant against a trespasser Section 84 and not Section 29 (1) would apply even though the land the possession of which he claimed was the land of which he was a tenant and the trespasser was his landlord. What the tenant in such a case was seeking to do was not to enforce his right as a tenant under the provisions of the Act but he was enforcing his right against third parties, namely, the petitioners in that case who were in wrongful occupation. The tenant was claiming possession not under the provisions of the Act but on his own title, albeit as a tenant, against a person who had no title to ownership or possession in the land and therefore Section 29 (1) did not apply to such a case. Consequently, Section 29 (1) was not another provision providing for eviction which opponents 1 and 2 could avail of. In Krishna Mahar v Hussain Miya, Spl Civil Appeal No. 207 of 1956 decided by Shah, and Vyas, JJ on 19-6-1958 (Bom) the respondent was the owner of the land in question. He applied under Sec 29 (2) to the Mamlatdar. The Mamlatdar passed an order directing the petitioner, the tenant, to hand over possession. The petitioner appealed to the Collector under Section 74 of the Act who set aside the Mamlatdar's order. But before the Collector passed his said order the respondent executed the Mamlatdar's order and obtained possession. The petitioner then obtained possession in pursuance of the Collector's said order but the respondent forcibly dispossessed him and thereupon on January 10, 1952 the petitioner complained to the Mamlatdar. The Mamlatdar expressed his inability to assist him and thereupon the petitioner applied to the Collector under Section 84. The Collector held that the respondent was in wrongful possession and passed an order of eviction. The Revenue Tribunal however, set aside that order holding that the petitioner's application was barred by limitation. An application for condonation of delay was also rejected. The petitioner, thereupon filed a petition under Article 227. The High Court held that there was a clear distinction between an application under Section 29 (1) and one under Section 84, for, under Section 29 (1) whereas the tenant would be claiming the right to possession under the provisions of the Act, under Section 84 he would be claiming the right to possession not under any of the provisions of the Act but on his own title to possession as a tenant. Such an application could be even against a person who was his landlord qua the land in question if such landlord was in unauthorised occupation or wrongful possession. These two decisions again do not lay down anything inconsistent to what we have said above on the scope and interpretation of Sec. 29 (1) and Section 84. We do not therefore see how either of these two decisions can be availed of by Mr. Bhandare in support of his contentions.

10. In our view the High Court was correct in its interpretation of the two sections and the conclusion which it arrived at in holding on the facts of the present case that the Collector had no jurisdiction under Section 84 to entertain the tenant's application. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Debt Laws — Saurashtra Agricultural Debtors Relief Act (23 of 1954), S. 29 — Saurashtra Land Reforms Act (25 of 1951), Sections 6 and 20 — Mortgagee, not otherwise tenant under Section 6 of Land Reforms Act, in possession of land — Land, held by Mamlatdar to be Khalsa and full assessment ordered under Section 20 of Land Reforms Act — Occupancy rights not granted — Rights of mortgagor not extinguished under Land Reforms Act — Court can scale down debts under Debtors Relief Act.

Under the Land Reforms Act, the mortgagee in possession of land under mortgage, in order to get occupancy rights has to show that he has become tenant which obviously he cannot be under Section 6 of the Act. The fact that he had all along paid the revenue and other dues to the State, if any, would not clothe him with the right of the tenant. Even if he cannot meet the revenue and other State dues out of the income and pays the same out of his own pocket in order to save the security, the mortgagee is only entitled under Section 72(b) of the Transfer of Property Act to add the amount to the mortgage money. He cannot by paying such rent or revenue acquire a title in derogation of the rights of the mortgagor and the payments, if any, are to be taken into account when the mortgagor seeks to redeem the property. So where all that the Special Mamlatdar decided and had jurisdiction to decide under the Act was, whether the debtor could be given occupancy certificate or allotted any land Charkhed and the Special Mamlatdar merely ordered that the lands under mortgage being Khalsa full assessment had to be taken in respect of them and there was no need to grant occupancy rights, then, in absence of anything showing that the debtor was awarded any compensation in respect of the Khalsa lands given in mortgage to the creditor, the rights of the debtor are not extinguished under the Land Reforms Act. The occupancy certificate, if any, given by the Special Mamlatdar to the creditor cannot, under the provisions of the Land Reforms Act, extinguish the title of the mortgagor. The object of the Land Reforms Act and the Debtors Relief Act being different where the rights of the mortgagor are not extinguished under the Land Reforms Act, it is open to the court exercising jurisdiction under the Debtors Relief Act to scale down the debt and provide for restoration of the land in possession of mortgagee to the mortgagor on taking fresh accounts between the parties and directing payments by one party to the other.

MITTER, J.: These are two appeals by special leave from judgments of the Gujarat High Court dated April 28, 1965 in Civil Revision Applications Nos. 88 and 93 of 1961. As the questions involved in both the applications were the same, the High Court delivered the main judgment in Civil Revision Application No. 88/1961 and referred to the same in its judgment in Civil Revision Application No. 93 of 1961. The two applications in the High Court arose out of certain proceedings under the Saurashtra Agricultural Debtors Relief Act. The applicants before the High Court and the appellants before this Court were mortgagees in possession of certain lands belonging to the debtors who are now represented by the respondents. The main question before the High Court was and before us is, whether the debtors had lost all their interest in the lands mortgaged by reason of the operation of the Saurashtra Land Reforms Act, XXV of 1951 and as such were not competent to make an application under the Saurashtra Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, 1954. Hereinafter the two Acts will be referred to as the Land Reforms Act and the Debtors Relief Act.

2. It is not necessary to deal separately with the facts in the two appeals as the course of proceedings in both cases were similar giving rise to common questions of law. We therefore propose to take note of the facts in Civil Revision Application No. 88 of 1961. The creditors, appellants before us, were in possession of the properties—the subject matter of litigation, under two mortgage deeds of Samvat years 1997 and 1999. The first mortgage was for Rs. 991 and the second for Rs. 1,011. The mortgages were with possession and the mortgagees have been appropriating the income of the usufruct thereof for the last 50 years. There is nothing to show whether they were under a liability under the documents of mortgage to pay the revenue and other dues to the State but there is no dispute that they have been doing so for many years past. The lands were situate in Bajana State with its own peculiar land tenure system known as the Girasdari system.

3. The Land Reforms Act which came into force on July 23, 1951 purported to effect important and far-reaching changes in the said system. The preamble to the Act shows that its object was "the improvement of land revenue administration and for ultimately putting an end to the Girasdari system" and the regulation of the relationship between the Girasdari and their tenants, to enable the latter to become occupants of the land held by them and to provide for the payment of compensation to the Girasdars for the extinguishment of their rights. It will be noted at once that the Act aimed at regulating the relationship of persons in the position of landholders and their tenants and to enable the tenants to become the real owners of the soil under direct tenancy from the State. It was not meant to extinguish or affect the rights of the landholders as mortgagors unless the persons in occupation had become tenants either by contract or by operation of law.

4. The Act came into force in the whole of Saurashtra area of the State of Gujarat. Under Section 2 (15) 'Girasdar' meant any talukdar, bhagdar, bhavat, cadet or mal-girasia etc. Under S 2 (13) 'estate' meant all land of whatever description held by a Girasdar including uncultivable waste whether used for the purpose of agriculture or not and 'Charkhed' meant any land reserved by or allotted to a Girasdar before the 20th May, 1950 or for being cultivated personally and in his personal cultivation. A tenant under Section 2 (30) meant an agriculturist who held land on lease from a Girasdar or a person claiming through him and included a person who was deemed to be a tenant under the provisions of the Act. Under Section 3 the provisions of the Act were to have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law for the time being in force. Section 4 provided that "all land of whatever description held by a Girasdar is and shall continue to be liable to the payment of land revenue to the State of Gujarat". Section 5 classified Girasdars according to the measure of their holding and under Clause (c) thereof a Girasdar was to belong to Class C

if the total area of agricultural land comprised in his estate did not exceed Ac. 120—00. Section 6 (1) of the Act laid down that any person who was lawfully cultivating any land belonging to a Girasdar was to be deemed for the purposes of the Act to be the tenant if he was not a member of the Girasdar's family or a servant on wages payable in cash or in kind etc. or a mortgagee in possession. The Explanation to the sub-section however shows that a person who was otherwise deemed to be a tenant was not to cease to be such only on the ground that he was a mortgagee in possession. Under Section 19 it was open to any Girasdar to apply to the Mamlatdar for the allotment to him of land for personal cultivation within a certain fixed time. Such application had to be made in a specified form giving the prescribed particulars. The applicant had to show inter alia, the area and location of the land in respect of which the allotment was prayed for, the right under which he claimed the land and full particulars of his estate as also the area of khalsa land, if any, in his possession. Under Section 20 of the Act it was for the Mamlatdar to issue notice to the tenant or tenants concerned on receipt of an application under Section 19 and make an enquiry in the prescribed manner after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard. After such enquiry the Mamlatdar was required to pass an order making an allotment to the Girasdar of such land as may be specified in the order and this was to be followed by the issue of an occupancy certificate to a Girasdar in respect of his Charkhed and the land, if any, allotted to him under the section. Under sub-section (4) no Girasdar was to obtain possession of any land held by a tenant except in accordance with the order under the section. Section 24 laid down the total area of the holding which a C class Girasdar could be allotted for personal cultivation. Sub-section (2) of the section provided that a C class Girasdar could not be allotted any khalsa land if it was held by a tenant. Chapter V containing Sections 31 to 41 provided for acquisition of occupancy rights by tenants and Section 31 laid down the consequences which were to issue in the wake of grant of occupancy certificates. A tenant who was granted such a certificate was to be free of all relations and obligations as tenant to the Girasdar. The Girasdar in his turn was to be entitled to receive and be paid compensation as provided in the Act. Under Section 36 the right, title and interest of the Girasdar in respect of an occupancy holding were to be deemed to have been extinguished on the payment by the Government of the last instalment of compensation. The functions of a Mamlatdar are laid down in Sec. 46 of the Act. It was for him to decide inter alia what land should be allotted to a Girasdar for personal cultivation and to make such allotment, to decide whether a person was or was not a tenant, to determine whether a tenancy shall be terminated under Section 12 and many other matters. Under Section 51 an appeal lay to the Collector against any order of the Mamlatdar.

5. The above analysis of the relevant provisions of the Land Reforms Act amply demonstrates the manner in which a change was to be brought about in the relationship between the Girasdar and his tenants and the rights which they were respectively to acquire under the orders of the Special Mamlatdar. The said Officer had no jurisdiction to terminate any rights under mortgage.

6. The full text of the order of the Mamlatdar on the application of the Girasdar (the respondents to the appeal) is not before us. The copy of the order on the respondents' application marked Ex. 8/1 bearing date 16th January 1964 was handed over to us. It appears therefrom that the Girasdar was allowed to keep as Gharkhed certain lands by paying six times the assessment in the treasury but with regard to S. Nos. 684 and 685 (the lands given to the mortgagees) the same were held by the Mamlatdar to be Khalsa and full assessment thereof was ordered to be taken. The Mamlatdar further noted that there was no need to grant any occupancy rights.

7. On May 2, 1955 the respondents applied for adjustment of their debt to the Civil Judge exercising jurisdiction under the Debtors Relief Act. The creditors relied on the order of the Special Mamlatdar declaring the lands as Khalsa as fortified by the decision of the Bhayati Court of Bajana State. It was contended that the lands having been declared khalsa the debtors had lost their rights therein. Reliance was also placed on Forms 7 and 8 by counsel for the appellants to show that his clients had acquired proprietary rights in the said khalsa lands. According to the Civil Judge the judgment of the Bhayati Court had merely decided that the Bajana State had no title or interest in the land in question and that the Jats Mul-Girasdars were independent proprietors thereof. The Judge however remarked that it was not for the Special Mamlatdar to decide any question as to title and he had merely ordered recovery of full assessment from the persons in actual possession and this in no way vested any title in the creditors. In the result the Civil Judge directed the restoration of the lands to the debtors subject to certain limitations and conditions.

8. The creditors went up in appeal to the Assistant Judge, Surendranagar. There it was contended on their behalf that the mortgages had been extinguished by the title of the paramount power and on the date of the application under the Debtors Relief Act there was no subsisting mortgage between them and the respondents. Reliance was placed on the decision of the Special Mamlatdar declaring the land to be khalsa land as extinguishing the mortgages by forfeiture of the land to the State. The Assistant Judge dealt with the question at some length and came to the conclusion that the mortgages had not been extinguished and not being tenants within the meaning of Section 6 the creditors could not have got an occupancy certificate in respect of the lands in their possession. He further stressed on the decision of the Special Mamlatdar to show that only the liability for the full assessment of the lands was indicated without any disturbance to the rights inter se between the mortgagors and the mortgagees. Dealing with the question of the advances made and the amounts still due to the creditors, it was ordered that the debtors should pay Rs. 1,698/- in twelve yearly instalments and the award was directed to be modified accordingly.

9. The matter was then taken up by way of Civil Revision to the High Court of Gujarat. The High Court arrived at the following conclusions:—

(a) The decision of the Bhayati Court merely declared that the State was entitled to recover taxes of various kinds from the lands in possession of tenants or mortgagees. There was no decision that the lands in possession of the mortgagees were confiscated to the State.

(b) The Special Mamlatdar rejected the application of the debtor and directed the lands in possession of the different creditors to be treated as Government lands as according to him the decision of the Bhayati Court amounted to a forfeiture of the lands by the Bajana State.

(c) It was not necessary to test the correctness of the decision of the Special Mamlatdar as in view of the provisions in the Debtors Relief Act which was an Act subsequent to the Land Reforms Act the provisions of the latter Act were to prevail.

10 In the result the High Court affirmed the order of the Assistant Judge in appeal directing possession to be handed over to the debtors.

11. Before us great stress was laid on the decision of the Special Mamlatdar and it was argued that subject to any appeal from his order his decision was binding on the parties and not having gone up in appeal from the order of the Special Mamlatdar the debtors could not be allowed to agitate their rights to the land ignoring the said order. We have not before us the full text of the order of the Special Mamlatdar relied on by the appellants nor are we satisfied from copies of form 7 prescribed under Rule 81 of the Rules promulgated under the Land Reforms Act that there was any adjudication of the rights of the debtors and the creditors inter se. In our view all that the Special Mamlatdar decided and had jurisdiction to decide under the Act was, whether the debtors could be given occupancy certificates or allotted any land Gharhkhed and the Special Mamlatdar merely ordered that the lands being khalsa full assessment had to be taken in respect of them and there was no need to grant occupancy rights. In order to get such occupancy rights the creditors had to show that they had become tenants which obviously they could not be under the provisions of Section 6 of the Land Reforms Act. The fact that they had all along paid the revenue and other dues to the State, if any, would not clothe them with the right of the tenants. Under Sec 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgagee in possession must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Government revenue, all other charges of a public nature and all rent accruing due in respect thereof during such possession. We do not know whether there was a contract in the contrary and whether the mortgagors had covenanted to pay the rent and the revenue. But even if they could not meet the revenue and other State dues out of the income and paid the same out of their own pockets in order to save the security, the mortgagees were only entitled under Section 72 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act to add the amount to the mortgage money. They could not by paying such rent or revenue acquire a title in derogation of the rights of the mortgagors and the payments, if any, are to be taken into account when the mortgagors seek to redeem the property.

12. That apart, it has not been shown to us that the debtors were awarded any compensation in respect of the khalsa lands given in mortgage to the appellants. The occupancy certificates, if any, given by the Special Mamlatdar to the appellants cannot under the provisions of the Land Reforms Act extinguish the title of the mortgagors. Whether the mortgagors as C class Girasdars can be allowed to retain land in excess of the limits specified in the Act and whether as a result of the restoration of the lands to them by the award such limit will be exceeded in this case, are not questions for us to consider. The right of the mortgagors not being extinguished under any provision of law to which our attention was drawn, no fault can be found with the award as finally modified by the judgment of the Assistant Judge and effect must be given thereto. In our view, it is not necessary to consider the point canvassed at length before the High Court and dealt with in the judgment of the said Court as to whether the provisions of the Debtors Relief Act override those in the Land Reforms Act. The objects of the two Acts are different. The object of the Land Reforms Act, as already noted is the improvement of the land revenue administration and putting an end to the Girasdari system and granting of occupancy rights to the Girasdars and/or their tenants, whereas the Debtors Relief Act governs the rights of the debtors and creditors inter se inter alia by scaling down the debts and providing for restoration of their property to debtors. In our view, the rights of the debtors in this case were not extinguished under the Land Reforms Act and it was open to the Court exercising jurisdiction under the Debtors Relief Act to scale down the debt and provide for restoration of the land in possession of the mortgagees to the mortgagors on taking fresh accounts between the parties and directing payments by one party to the other as has been done in this case.

13. The appeals therefore fail, and are dismissed with costs.

Civil Appeals Nos. 895 and 896 of 1968,
D/- 12-2-1969.

(A) Representation of the People Act (1951), Secs. 100 (1) (b), 100 (1) (d), 123 (4) — Corrupt practice charged against an agent other than election agent — Petitioner must prove consent on the part of returned candidate to the commission of corrupt practice — Consent on the part of returned candidate if not proved, case will fall under Sec. 100 (1) (d) and not under Sec. 100 (1) (b) — Proof that the corrupt practice materially affected the poll must be adduced.

The petitioner may prove a corrupt practice by the candidate himself or his election agent or someone with the consent of the candidate or his election agent, in which case he need not establish what the result of the election would have been without the corrupt practice. If the petitioner does not prove a corrupt practice by the candidate or his election agent or another person with the consent of the returned candidate or his election agent but relies on a corrupt practice committed by an agent other than an election agent he must additionally prove how the corrupt practice affected the result of the poll. Unless he proves the consent to the commission of the corrupt practice on the part of the candidate or his election agent he must face this additional burden. (Para 25)

Thus, where a corrupt practice is charged under Sec. 123 (4), against an agent who is also an editor of a newspaper, the petitioner, to get the benefit of not having to prove the effect of the corrupt practice upon the election and to establish that the case falls under Sec. 100 (1) (b) and not under Sec. 100 (1) (d), must prove consent on the part of the returned candidate to the commission of the corrupt practice. There must be some reasonable evidence from which an inference can be made of the meeting of the minds as to the publications or at least a tacit approval of the general conduct of the agent. Section 100 (1) (b) makes no mention of an agent while Sec. 100 (1) (d) specifically does. The reason is this that an agent cannot make the candidate responsible unless the candidate has consented or the act of the agent has materially affected the election of the returned candidate. In the case of any person (and he may be an agent) if he does the act with the consent of the returned candidate there is no need to prove the effect on the election. If every act of an agent must be presumed to be with the consent of the candidate there would be no room for application of the extra condition laid down by Sec. 100 (1) (d), because whenever agency is proved either directly or circumstantially, the finding about consent under Section 100 (1) (b) will have to follow. (Para 45)

If the petitioner fails to prove consent on the part of the returned candidate then to establish corrupt practice avoiding the election, conditions required by Sec. 100 (1) (d) read with Sec. 123 (4) will have to be satisfied. Therefore it will have to be established not only (a) that the statement was made by an agent (b) that it was false etc. (c) that it related to the personal character and conduct of defeated candidate (d) that it was reasonably calculated to harm his chances but also (e) that it in fact materially affected the result of the election in so far as the returned candidate is concerned. AIR 1967 SC 808, Relied on. (Para 54)

(B) Representation of the People Act (1951), Sec. 83 — Section is mandatory — Distinction between material facts and particulars — The entire and complete cause of action must be stated in the petition in the shape of material facts — Function of particulars is to give necessary information to present full picture of the cause of action.

Section 83 is mandatory and requires the election petition to contain first a concise statement of material facts and then requires the fullest possible particulars. The word 'material' shows that the facts necessary to formulate a complete cause of action must be stated. Omission of a single material fact leads to an incomplete cause of action and the statement of claim becomes bad. The function of particulars is to present as full a picture of the cause of action with such further information in detail as to make the opposite party understand the case he will have to meet. There may be some overlapping between material facts and particulars but the two are quite distinct. The material facts will show the ground of corrupt practice and the complete cause of action and the particulars will give the necessary information to present a full picture of the cause of action. In stating the material facts it will not do merely to quote the words of the section because then the efficacy of the words 'material facts' will be lost. The fact which constitutes the corrupt practice must be stated and the fact must be correlated to one of the heads of corrupt practice. An election petition without the material facts relating to a corrupt practice is no election petition at all. A petition which merely cites the sections cannot be said to disclose a cause of action where the allegation is the making of a false statement. That statement must appear and the particulars must be full as to the person making the statement and the necessary information. (Para 29)

(C) Representation of the People Act (1951), Sec. 86 (5) — Power of amendment — Corrupt practice by an agent other than election agent alleged in the petition — Particulars alleging corrupt practice by returned candidate, cannot be supplied by way of amendment.

In a petition the kind of corrupt practice which was perpetrated together with material facts on which a charge can be made out must be stated. If the material facts of the corrupt practice are stated, more or better particulars of the charge may be given later, but where the material facts themselves are missing it is impossible to think that the charge has been made or can be later amplified. The power of amendment is given in respect of particulars but there is a prohibition against an amendment "which will have the effect of introducing particulars of a corrupt practice not previously alleged in the petition." (Paras 29 and 37)

There is, however, a difference of approach between the several corrupt practices. If for example the charge is bribery of voters and the particulars give a few instances, other instances can be added; if the charge is use of vehicles for free carriage of voters, the particulars of the cars employed may be amplified. But if the charge is that an agent did something, it cannot be amplified by giving particulars of acts on the part of the candidate or vice versa. In the scheme of election law they are separate corrupt practices which cannot be said to grow out of the material facts related to another person.

Publication of false statements by an agent is one cause of action, publication of false statements by the candidate is quite a different cause of action. Such a cause of action must be alleged in the material facts before particulars may be given. One cannot under the cover of particulars of one corrupt practice give particulars of a new corrupt practice. They constitute different causes of action. Since a single corrupt practice committed by the candidate, by his election agent or by another person with the consent of the candidate or his election agent is fatal to the election, the case must be specifically pleaded and strictly proved. If it has not been pleaded as part of the material facts, particulars of such corrupt practice cannot be supplied later on. The bar of the latter part of the fifth sub-section to Section 86 then operates. AIR 1937 SC 444, Explained, AIR 1954 SC 210, Relied on, Case law discussed. (Paras 29, 30, 37)

(D) Evidence Act (1872), Ss 60, 63 — News items published by newspapers — Evidentiary value.

A news item without any further proof of what had actually happened through witnesses is of no value. It is at best a second-hand secondary evidence. It is well known that reporters collect information and pass it on to the editor who edits the news item and then publishes it. In this process the truth might get perverted or garbled. Such news items cannot be said to prove themselves although they may be taken into account with other evidence if the other evidence is forcible. A fact has first to be alleged and proved and then newspaper reports can be taken in support of it but not independently. (Para 47)

(E) Representation of the People Act (1951), Sec 123 (4) — Corrupt practice by an agent other than election agent — Consent of returned candidate to the commission of — Direct or circumstantial evidence necessary to prove consent — Mere knowledge or connivance or similarities of ideas not enough to infer consent.

To establish corrupt practice, by an agent other than election agent, avoiding the election, the consent on the part of returned candidate to the commission of corrupt practice must be proved. There is no doubt that the consent need not be directly proved. The principle of law is settled that consent may be inferred from circumstantial evidence but the circumstances must point unerringly to the conclusion and must not admit of any other explanation. Although the trial of an election petition is made in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure, it has been laid down that a corrupt practice must be proved in the same way as a criminal charge is proved. In other words, the election petitioner must exclude every hypothesis except that of guilt on the part of the returned candidate or his election agent. A consistent course of conduct in the canvass of the candidate may raise a presumption of consent. But mere knowledge of or connivance at the corrupt practice is not enough to infer corrupt practice. Similarly the similarities of ideas or even of words cannot be pressed into service to show consent. (Paras 45, 47, 50)

(F) Representation of the People Act (1951), Sec. 100 (1) (d) (ii) — Election to be void under — That the election was materially affected, in so far as the returned candidate was concerned, requires proof, and cannot be considered on possibility. AIR 1954 SC 513 & AIR 1957 SC 242 & (1958) 15 Ele LR 219 (MP), Relied on. (Para 58)

(G) Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Precedents — Supreme Court cannot overlook the rulings of Supreme Court and follow the English rulings. (Para 58)

In C A. No 895 of 1963

M/s R Jethamalani, N H Hingorani and Mrs K. Hingorani, Advocates, for Appellant.

In C A. No 896 of 1963

M/s C K. Daphtary and A K. Sen, Senior Advocates (Mr K. S Cooper and Mrs. K. Hingorani Advocates, with them), for Appellant, Mr A S R. Chari, Senior Advocate (M/s Porus A. Mehta, S B Naik, Kumar Mehta, R Nagaratnam and K. Rajendra Chaudhuri, Advocates, with him), for Respondent No. 1 (In both the appeals).

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.: In the last General Election to Parliament from the Bombay South Parliamentary Constituency eight candidates had offered themselves. The answering respondent Mr George Fernandez secured 1,47,841 votes as against his nearest rival Mr S K. Patil who secured 1,18,407 votes. The remaining candidates secured a few thousand votes between them. The result of the poll was declared on February 24, 1967 and Mr George Fernandez was returned. An election petition was filed by Mr. Samant N. Balakrishna, an elector in the constituency. It challenged the election of Mr Fernandez and was ostensibly in the interest of Mr. S K Patil. The election petition was keenly contested and Mr. S K. Patil gave his full support to the petition. The election petition failed and it was dismissed with an order for costs against the election petitioner and Mr. S K. Patil. Two appeals have now been filed against the judgment of the Bombay High Court, one by the election petitioner and the other by Mr. S K. Patil. They have been heard together and this judgment will dispose of both of them.

2. The petition was based on numerous grounds which were set out in paragraph 2 of the petition. These grounds were shown separately in sub-paragraph A to J. Sub-paragraph A to D dealt with the invalidity of the election for non-compliance with Section 62 of the Representation of the People Act and Articles 326 and 327 of the Constitution. These concerned the secrecy of ballot (A), registering of some voters in two constituencies (B), omission of qualified voters from electoral rolls (C) and impersonation by persons for dead or absent voters (D). These four grounds were given up in the High Court itself and we need not say anything about them. Sub-paragraphs E to J contained allegations of corrupt practices. The petition was accompanied by four annexures Nos A to D which were extracts from newspapers on which the charge of corrupt practices was based. The grounds may now be noticed in detail.

3. Sub-paragraph E dealt with statements made at a meeting dated February 16, 1967 at Shivaji Park by Jagadguru Shankaracharya charging Mr. S K. Patil with complicity in arson of November 7, 1966, at New Delhi and attack on the residence of the Congress President with injuries caused to people. In these articles from the 'Maratha' and the 'Blitz' extracts of which were quoted and annexed as Annexure A, Mr. Patil was described as hypocrite, insincere and dishonest. Similar speeches by Mr. Madhu Limaye (another candidate of the S. S. P. by which party Mr Fernandez was sponsored), were relied upon. The statements of Jagadguru Shankaracharya and Mr Madhu Limaye were said to be "inspired by Mr. Fernandez" and "with his consent and for his benefit". It was said that they amounted to a corrupt practice under Sec. 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act.

4. In Sub-paragraph F, a statement of Jagadguru Shankaracharya on cow slaughter was made the ground of attack. It was to the effect that Mr S K. Patil only pretended to support the anti-cow-slaughter movement but had done nothing in furtherance of it. It was contended that the cow was used as a religious symbol and the speeches offended against the Election Law as stated in Section 123 (3). These statements were also said to be inspired by Mr. Fernandez and were made with his consent and for his benefit.

5. Sub-paragraph G referred to speeches of Mr Fernandez and his workers with his knowledge and consent. In those speeches Mr. Fernandez is said to have described Mr. S. K. Patil as the enemy of Muslims and Christians who only professed to discourage slaughter of cows and he was charged with interfering with the articles of faith of the Muslims and Christians and seeking expulsion of Muslims to Pakistan. This was said to offend against Section 123 (3A) of the Representation of the People Act.

6. In sub-paragraph H it was alleged that the 'Maratha' published a false statement to the effect that Mr. S K. Patil had paid rupees 15 lacs to Mr. Jack Sequeira to undo the efforts of Maharashtrians for incorporation of Goa in Maharashtra. The extract from the 'Maratha' of January 25, 1967, was annexed as Ex. B. The speech of Mr. H. R. Gokhale who published a similar statement, was also referred to. These were made the grounds of complaint under Section 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act.

7. In Sub-paragraph I four issues of the 'Maratha' of the 5th and 31st January, 1967 and 5th and 8th of February, 1967 were exhibited as Ex. C. It was stated in the first two that the Shiv Sena supported the Maharashtra traitor Sadoba Patil and that the Shiv Sena was really Sadoba Sena. A cartoon showing Mr. S. K. Patil as Vishwamitra and the leader of Shiv Sena as Menka with the caption "Sadoba denies that he has no connection with Shiv Sena like Vishwamitra Menka episode", was the third. The last of these articles was headed "harassment from Gondas of Sadoba Patil Shiv Sena in the service of Sadhshiv (S. K. Patil)". These statements were said to be false and made by the 'Maratha' in favour of respondents other than respondent No. 2 (Mr. S. K. Patil) or at any rate on behalf of Mr. Fernandez. These were said to prejudice the minority communities and thus to offend Section 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act. The statements were said to be made with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Fernandez and for his benefit.

8. In Sub-paragraph J three issues of 'Maratha' of the 24th, 28th and 31st December, 1966 were referred to. In the first it was stated that "Shri S. K. Patil will go to Sonapur in the ensuing election." Fernandez says in his Articles "Patil mortgaged India's Freedom with America by entering into P. L. 480 agreement and Mr. Patil had no devotion, love, respect for this country at all". In the second Mr. Patil was described as Nagibkhan of Maharashtra. The third was a cartoon in which Shankaracharya was depicted as saying "Cow is my mother. Do not kill her" and Patil S. K. as saying "Pig is my father". These extracts were annexed as Ex. D. Then followed a paragraph in which was said: "Similar false statements in relation to Respondent No. 2's character and conduct were published in several issues of Maratha Daily" from December 12, 1966 to February 21, 1967 and 33 issues were mentioned by date. These were also said to be Ex. D.

9. This was the original material on which the petition filed on April 7, 1967 was based. Mr. Fernandez filed his written statement on June 14, 1967 and Mr. S. K. Patil on 4-7-1967. Later five amendments were asked for. By the first amendment, which was orally asked and allowed, reference to the 33 articles was altered and they were said to be contained in Ex. E instead of Ex. D. Ex. E was then introduced and gave the list of 33 articles in the 'Maratha' and one article in the Blitz, and the extracts on which reliance was placed. On July 4, 1967 an application for amendment was made seeking to add two sub-paragraphs 2-K and 2-L. 2-K is not pressed now and need not be mentioned. By 2-L the petitioner asked for addition to the list of corrupt practices of a reference to an article dated November 5, 1966 in the Blitz. This article was written by Mr. Fernandez. On September 12, 1967, an application was made for seven additions to paragraph 2-J. Seven incidents were sought to be included. Of these four were ordered by the Court to be included in 2-J on September 15, 1967 as Sub-sub-paragraphs (i) to (iv) and three were rejected. In the first of the Sub-sub-paragraphs so included, a speech at a public meeting at Shivaji Park by Mr. Fernandez on January 31, 1967 was pleaded in which Mr. Fernandez is said to have made a statement that even God could not defeat the second respondent (Mr. S. K. Patil) because unlike the second respondent God was not dishonest. It was also alleged that Mr. S. K. Patil won elections by "tampering with the ballot boxes or substituting the same". These statements were said to be made by Mr. Fernandez deliberately and maliciously and that he believed them to be false or did not believe them to be true. The report of the speech was quoted from the 'Maratha' of February 1, 1967 and was included as part of Ex. E. In the second Sub-sub-paragraph a Press Conference at Bristol Grill Restaurant on February 9, 1967 addressed by Mr. Fernandez was referred to. At that Conference Mr. Fernandez charged Mr. S. K. Patil with "unfair and unethical electioneering practices" and as illustrations of his methods mentioned the release of 70 dangerous characters from jail on parole and the suspension of externment orders against some and the allowing of some other externed persons to return, were alleged. It was also said that these persons were being used by Mr. Patil in his campaign. Extracts from the issues of the 'Maratha' of the 10th and 11th February, 1967 were made part of Annexure E. In the third Sub-sub-paragraph a public meeting at Sahu Siddik Chawl, of February 10, 1967 was referred to. At that meeting, it was alleged, Mr Fernandez described Mr Patil as an "American Agent, Dada of Capitalists and Creator of Shiv Sena". All these statements were said to be false and to reflect upon personal character and conduct of Mr Patil and thus to be corrupt practices under Sec. 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act. In the fourth paragraph a meeting of January 8, 1967 at Chowpati, presided over by Mr Fernandez was referred to. Mr Madhu Limaye was said to have addressed that meeting and referred to the incident of November 7, 1966. These statements were also said to be false and to materially affect the prospects of Mr Patil. In this Sub-sub-paragraph it was also alleged that Mr P K Atre, Editor and Proprietor of the 'Maratha', Jagadguru Shankaracharya and Mr Madhu Limaye were agents of Mr Fernandez and had made these statements in his interest and with his consent.

10. The petitioner also asked for addition of three other grounds of corrupt practices, which the Court did not allow to be included. Paragraph 2-L to which we have referred was an article by Mr Fernandez. It was captioned as a fight against "political thuggery" and included the following passage which was made the basis of the following charge:

"These men (including the 2nd Respondent) from the hard core of the coterie which control the destinies of the nation, even decide who should be the Prime Minister and who should not be, bounds out the few honest Congressmen from Public life, props up the Ammchand Pyarelal and Chamanlal and supports them in all their misdeeds and puts a premium on dishonest businessmen and industrialists."

This allegation was said to suggest dishonesty in Mr Patil. The other amendments which were disallowed referred to a speech at Dr. Vigas Street on February 27, 1967, a speech by Dr. Lohia at Chowpati on January 1, 1967 published in 'Andolan' of January 9, 1967 and a Press Conference by Mr. Madhu Limaye at Bristol Grill Restaurant on December 10, 1966.

11. Prior to the application for amendment certain events had happened to which it is necessary to refer. On April 7, 1967 the office objected that the originals of Exs A, B, C and D had not been filed. The remark of the office is as follows—

"Exhibits A, B, C, D are mere repetitions of what is mentioned in the body of the petition. Is it not necessary to annex the original copies of the said newspaper?"

12. Mr Kanuga, one of the Advocates for the petitioner replied to the objection as follows—

"We undertake to file the original issues and official translations later as the same is (sic) with the Chief Translator, High Court, Bombay before the service of Writ of Summons."

13. Till July 3, 1967 no effort seems to have been made to file the originals. On that the 'Rozanama' read as follows—

"Mr Jethmalani applies for leave to amend the petition by pointing out that 'D' in last sentence of paragraph 2 on page 12 of the petition he corrected and read as 'E' and to annex reports in original P C Leave to amend granted."

14. The issues were settled on the same day and particulars were asked for. On July 7, 1967 the 'Rozanama' read as follows—

"Mr Gurushani tenders the original of the Exhibits A (Coll) to Exhibit E (Coll) mentioned in para 2-J of page 11 of the petition."

A chamber summons was taken out because the particulars were not supplied and on August 4, 1967 the particulars were furnished. It was then on September 12, 1967 that the application for seven amendments was made, four of which were allowed and three were rejected. This was by an order dated September 15, 1967.

15. Before dealing with this appeal it is necessary to clear the question of the amendments and whether they were properly allowed. This question consists of two parts, the first is one of fact as to what was exhibited with the petition as materials on which the petition was based. The case of the petitioner before us is that in support of 2-J, copies of relevant newspapers were filed with the petition. This is denied on behalf of the answering respondent.

16. Mr. Daphtary's contention is that if the originals of the 'Maratha' had not been filed an objection would have been taken in the Court and none was taken. Even witnesses were examined and cross-examined with reference to the statements and the originals must have been in Court. Thus, in our opinion, is not decisive. The first witness to be examined was the petitioner himself. Evidence commenced on August 25, 1967. The petitioner proved the copies of the newspapers and they were marked as exhibits. By that date the copies of the 'Maratha' had already been filed and the petitioner in his evidence referred to all of them. The cross-examination, therefore, also referred to these documents. Nothing much turns upon the want of objection because (as is well known) objection is not taken to some fatal defect in the case of the other side since the party, which can take the objection, wants to keep it in reserve. It is true that if the objection had been taken earlier and had been decided the petitioner would have had no case to prove on the new allegations and might not have led some evidence. But we cannot hold from this that any prejudice was caused to him. After all it was his responsibility to complete his allegations in the petition by inclusion of the copies of the 'Maratha' and the other side cannot be held to have waived its objection since that objection was in fact raised and has been answered in the High Court. The Roznamas clearly show that the copies of the 'Maratha' were not filed with the election petition but much later and in fact beyond the period of limitation. Mr. Daphthary characterises the Roznamas as inaccurate but the internal evidence in the case shows that the Roznamas were correctly recorded.

17. The petition quoted some of the offending statements in the newspapers and exhibited them as Exs. A to D. In the petition these 10 extracts are to be found in Sub-paragraphs 2-E, H, I and J. The change of Exs. D to E and the filing of E show that the extracts which were with the translator were referable to those extracts already mentioned in the petition and not those mentioned in the last paragraph of 2-J. It will be noticed that that paragraph refers to 33 numbers of the 'Maratha'. Extracts from those were furnished only on July 3, 1967 when Ex. E was separately filed and according to the Rozinama, the originals were filed on July 7, 1967. Mr. Kanuga could not have referred to all the 33 issues of the 'Maratha'. Only 10 extracts from the 'Maratha' were in Exs. A to D and of these eight are included in the list of 33 numbers of the 'Maratha' in the last paragraph of 2-J. If they were already filed, Mr. Kanuga would have said so and not promised to file them later. He mentions in his note that they were with the translation department and would be filed later. If all the 33 issues of the 'Maratha' were already filed there would be no occasion for the office objection and the reply of Mr. Kanuga could apply to two numbers only. They were the issues of 25th January and 5th February, 1967. The office noting shows that not a single original was filed with the petition. This appears to us to be correct. We are satisfied that 10 issues of the 'Maratha' from which extracts were included in the petition in Exs. A to D were the only numbers which were before the translator. Mr. Kanuga's remark applies to these 10 issues. The other issues which were mentioned in the last paragraph of 2-J numbering 33 less 8 were neither in the translator's office nor exhibited in the case. Hence the amendment of the second reference from D to E and the request to file original issues.

18. It seems that when the petition was filed a list was hurriedly made of all the issues of the 'Maratha' to which reference was likely and that list was included in the last portion of 2-J. But no attempt was made either to specify the offending portions of the newspapers or to file the extracts or the original issues. All this was done after the period of limitation. No incorporation of the contents of the articles by reference can be allowed because if a newspaper is not exhibited and only the date is mentioned, it is necessary to point out the exact portion of the offending newspaper to which the petition refers. This was not done. We have to reach this conclusion first because once we hold that the issues of the 'Maratha' or the extracts referred to in the petition were not filed, the plea as to what was the corrupt practice is limited to what was said in the body of the petition in paragraph 2-J and whether it could be amended after the period of limitation was over. The attempt today is to tag on the new pleas to the old pleas and in a sense to make them grow out of the old pleas. Whether such an amendment is allowable under the Election Law is therefore necessary to decide.

19. Mr. Daphthary arguing for the appellant contends that he was entitled to the amendment since this was no more than an amplification of the ground of corrupt practice as defined in S. 123 (4) and that the citation of instances or giving of additional particulars of which sufficient notice already existed in 2-J as it originally stood, is permissible. According to him, under Section 100 the petition has to show grounds and under Sec. 83

there should be a concise statement of material facts in support of the ground and full particulars of any corrupt practice alleged. He submits that under Section 83 (5) particulars can be amended and amplified, new instances can be cited and it is an essence of the trial of an election petition that corrupt practices should be thoroughly investigated. He refers us to a large body of case law in support of his contention.

20 On the other hand, Mr Chan for Mr Fernandez contends that there was no reference to the speeches by Mr. Fernandez in the petition. The cause of action was in relation to the publication in the 'Maratha' and not in relation to any statement of Mr Fernandez himself and that the amendment amounts to making out a new petition after the period of limitation.

21. To decide between these rival contentions it is necessary to analyse the petition first. Paragraph 2-J as it originally stood read as follows—

"The Petitioner says that false statements in relation to character and conduct of the Respondent No. 2 were made by the 1st Respondent and at the instance and connivance of the 1st Respondent, 'Maratha' published the following articles, 'as set out hereinafter'. The Petitioner says that the said allegations are false and have been made with a view to impair and affect the prospects of Respondent No 2's election to Lok Sabha. Some of the extracts are etc."

(Emphasis (here into ' ') added).

Here three issues of the 'Maratha' of 24th, 28th and 31st December, 1966 were referred to. Of the extracts, the last two make no reference to Mr. Fernandez. The first spoke thus

"Maratha dated 24th December, 1966 Pages 1 and 4 "Shri S. K. Patil will go to Sonapur in the ensuing election. Fernandez says in his Articles Patil mortgaged India's Freedom with America by entering into P.L. 480 agreement and Mr Patil had no devotion, love, respect for this country at all". Then followed this paragraph—

"Similar false statements in relation to Respondent No 2's character and conduct were published in 'Maratha Daily', dated 12th December, 1966, 17th December, 23rd December, 24th December, 28th, 29th and 31st December issues, January Issues dated 4th, 5th, 7th, 10th, 18th, 20th, 21st, 28th, 30th and 31st, February issues, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 11th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st . . . These reports in original are filed and true translations are marked Ex D to the petition."

We have already held that the newspapers mentioned in the last paragraph were not filed with the petition but on April 7, 1967 after the period of limitation was over. The allegations thus were that Mr. Fernandez made the false statements and they were published in the 'Maratha' at his instance and with his connivance. There is no mention of any speech at Shivaji Park, or at Sabu Siddik Chowk or at Dr Vidas Street or the press interview at Bristol Grill Restaurant. All these statements which are now referred to were said to be made by Mr Fernandez himself. By the amendment a charge of corrupt practice was sought to be made for the first time in this form. In the original petition (Sub-paragraph 2-J) there was no averment that Mr. Fernandez believed these statements to be false or that he did not believe them to be true and this was also sought to be introduced by an amendment. It may, however, be mentioned that in an affidavit which accompanied the election petition this averment was expressly made and the appellants desire us to read the affidavit as supplementing the petition. By another application for amendment the petitioner sought to add a paragraph that the 'Maratha', Jagadguru Shankaracharya and Mr. Madhu Limaye were agents of Mr. Fernandez within the Election Law. By yet another application reference to an article in the 'Blitz' was sought to be included as Sub-paragraph 2-L.

22 At the conclusion of the arguments on this part of the case we announced our decision that the amendment relating to the speeches of Mr. Fernandez at Shivaji Park, Sabu Siddik Chowk and Dr. Vidas Street and his Press Conferences at Bristol Grill Restaurant and the article in the 'Blitz' ought not to have been allowed but that the amendment relating to the agency of the 'Maratha', etc. and that seeking to incorporate the averment about the lack of belief of Mr. Fernandez were proper. We reserved our reasons which we now proceed to give.

23 The subject of the amendment of an election petition has been discussed from different angles in several cases of the High Courts and this Court. Each case, however, was decided on its own facts, that is to say, the kind of election petition that was filed, the kind of amendment that was sought, the stage at which the application for amendment was made and the state of the law at the time and so on. These cases do furnish some guidance but it is not to be thought that a particular case is intended to cover all situations. It is always advisable to look at the statute first to see alike what it authorises and what it prohibits.

24. Section 81* of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 enables a petitioner to call in question any election on one or more of the grounds specified in Section 100 (1) and Section 101 of the Act. The petition must be made within 45 days from the date of election. Sections 100 and 101 enumerate the kind of charges which, if established, lead to the avoidance of the election of a returned candidate and the return of some other candidate. The first sub-section of Section 100 lays down the grounds for

(1) An election petition calling in question any election may be presented on one or more of the grounds specified in sub-section (1) of Section 100 and Section 101 to the High Court by any candidate at such election or any elector within forty-five days from, but not earlier than, the date of election of the returned candidate, or if there are more than one returned candidates at the election and the dates of their election are different, the later of those two dates.

Explanation. — In this Sub-section, "elector" means a person who was entitled to vote at the election to which the election petition relates, whether he has voted at such election or not.

(2) * * * * *

(3) Every election petition shall be accompanied by as many copies thereof as there are respondents mentioned in the petition and every such copy shall be attested by the petitioner under his own signature to be a true copy of the petition."

 "100. Grounds for declaring election to be void.

(1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) if the High Court is of opinion—

(a) that on the date of his election a returned candidate was not qualified, or was disqualified, to be chosen to fill the seat under the Constitution or this Act or the Government of Union Territories Act, 1963; or

(b) that any corrupt practice has been committed by a returned candidate or his election agent or by any other person with the consent of a returned candidate or his election agent; or

(c) that any nomination has been improperly rejected; or

(d) that the result of the election, in so far as it concerns a returned candidate, has been materially affected—

(i) by the improper acceptance of any nomination, or

(ii) by any corrupt practice committed in the interests of the returned candidate by an agent other than his election agent, or

(iii) by the improper reception, refusal or rejection of any vote or the reception of any vote which is void, or

(iv) by any non-compliance with the provisions of the Constitution or of this Act or of any rules or orders made under this Act, the High Court shall declare the election of the returned candidate to be void.

(2) If in the opinion of the High Court, a returned candidate has been guilty by an agent, other than his election agent, of any corrupt practice but the High Court is satisfied—

(a) that no such corrupt practice was committed at the election by the candidate or his election agent, and every such corrupt practice was committed contrary to the orders, and without consent, of the candidate or his election agent;

(c) that the candidate and his election agent took all reasonable means for preventing the commission of corrupt practices at the election; and then the High Court may decide that the election of the returned candidate is not void."

(d) that in all other respects the election was free from any corrupt practice on the part of the candidate or any of his agents.

 "101. Grounds for which a candidate other than the returned candidate may be declared to have been elected.

(1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) if the High Court is of opinion—

(a) that on the date of his election a returned candidate was not qualified, or was disqualified, to be chosen to fill the seat under the Constitution or this Act or the Government of Union Territories Act, 1963; or

(b) that any corrupt practice has been committed by a returned candidate or his election agent or by any other person with the consent of a returned candidate or his election agent; or

(c) that any nomination has been improperly rejected; or

(d) that the result of the election, in so far as it concerns a returned candidate, has been materially affected—

(i) by the improper acceptance of any nomination, or

(ii) by any corrupt practice committed in the interests of the returned candidate by an agent other than his election agent, or

(iii) by the improper reception, refusal or rejection of any vote or the reception of any vote which is void, or

(iv) by any non-compliance with the provisions of the Constitution or of this Act or of any rules or orders made under this Act,

grounds on which a candidate other than the returned candidate may be declared to have been elected. Section 101 actually does not add to the grounds in Section 100 and its mention in Section 81 seems somewhat inappropriate. Sections 100 and 101 deal with the substantive law on the subject of elections. These two sections circumscribe the conditions which must be established before an election can be declared void or another candidate declared elected. The heads of substantive rights in Section 100(1) are laid down in two separate parts: the first dealing with situations in which the election must be declared void on proof of certain facts, and the second in which the election can only be declared void if the result of the election in so far as it concerns the returned candidate, can be held to be materially affected on proof of some other facts. Without attempting critically to sort out the two classes we may now see what the conditions are. In the first part they are that the candidate lacked the necessary qualification or had incurred disqualification, that a corrupt practice was committed by the returned candidate, his election agent or any other person with the consent of a returned candidate or his election agent or that any nomination paper was improperly rejected. These are grounds on proof of which by evidence, the election can be set aside without any further evidence. The second part is conditioned that the result of the election, in so far as it concerns a returned candidate, was materially affected by the improper acceptance of a nomination or by a corrupt practice committed in his interest by an agent other

If any person who has lodged a petition has, in addition to calling in question the election of the returned candidate, claimed a declaration that he himself or any other candidate has been duly elected and the High Court is of opinion—

- (a) that in fact the petitioner or such other candidate received a majority of the valid votes, or
- (b) that but for the votes obtained by the returned candidate by corrupt practices the petitioner or such other candidate would have obtained a majority of the valid votes, the High Court shall after declaring the election of the returned candidate to be void declare the petitioner or such other candidate, as the case may be, to have been duly elected."

than an election agent or by the improper reception, refusal or rejection of votes or by any non-compliance with the provisions of the Constitution or of the Representation of the People Act or rules or orders made under it. This condition has to be established by some evidence direct or circumstantial. It is, therefore, clear that the substantive rights to make an election petition are defined in these sections and the exercise of the right to petition is limited to the grounds specifically mentioned.

25. Pausing here, we may view a little more closely the provisions bearing upon corrupt practices in Sec 100. There are many kinds of corrupt practices. They are defined later in Section 123 of the Act and we shall come to them later. But the corrupt practices are viewed separately according as to who commits them. The first class consists of corrupt practices committed by the candidate or his election agent or any other person with the consent of the candidate or his election agent. These, if established, avoid the election without any further condition being fulfilled. Then there is the corrupt practice committed by an agent other than an election agent. Here an additional fact has to be proved that the result of the election was materially affected. We may attempt to put the same matter in easily understandable language. The petitioner may prove a corrupt practice by the candidate himself or his election agent or someone with the consent of the candidate or his election agent, in which case he need not establish what the result of the election would have been without the corrupt practice. The expression "any other person" in this part will include an agent other than an election agent. This is clear from a special provision later in the section about an agent other than an election agent. The law then is this: If the petitioner does not prove a corrupt practice by the candidate or his election agent or another person with the consent of the returned candidate or his election agent but relies on a corrupt practice committed by an agent other than an election agent, he must additionally prove how the corrupt practice affected the result of the poll. Unless he proves the consent to the commission of the corrupt practice on the part of the candidate or his election agent he must face this additional burden. The definition of agent in this context is to be taken from Section 123 (Explanation).

where it is provided that an agent "includes an election agent, a polling agent and any person who is held to have acted as an agent in connection with the election with the consent of the candidate". In this explanation the mention of "an election agent" would appear to be unnecessary because an election agent is the alter ego of the candidate in the scheme of the Act and his acts are the acts of the candidate, consent or no consent on the part of the candidate.

26. Having now worked out the substantive rights to the making of the petition, we may now proceed to see what the corrupt practices are. Since we are concerned only with one such corrupt practice, we need not refer to all of them. For the purpose of these appeals it is sufficient if we refer to the fourth sub-section of Section 123. It reads:

"123. The following shall be deemed to be corrupt practice for the purposes of the Act:—

(4) The publication by a candidate or his agent or by any other person, with the consent of a candidate or his election agent, of any statement of fact which is false, and which he either believes to be false or does not believe to be true, in relation to the personal character or conduct of any candidate, or in relation to the candidature, or withdrawal, of any candidate, being a statement reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of that candidate's election.

This corrupt practice may be committed by:

- (a) the candidate
- (b) his agent, that is to say—
 - (i) an election agent
 - (ii) a polling agent
 - (iii) any person who is held to have acted as an agent in connection with the election with the consent of the candidate.

(c) by any other person with the consent of the candidate or his election agent.

We are concerned in this appeal with (a) and (b) (iii) mentioned in our analysis. In the original petition the allegations were made on the basis of corrupt practices committed by a person alleged to have acted as an agent with Mr. Fernandez's consent. In the amendment application the allegation is that the candidate himself committed the corrupt practice under this sub-section.

27. As we pointed out earlier the difference between the original petition and the amendments will lie in the degree of proof necessary to avoid the election. If the corrupt practice is charged against an agent other than the election agent, a further burden must be discharged, namely, that the result of the election was materially affected. If, however, the corrupt practice is charged against the candidate personally (there is no election agent involved here), this further proof is not required. Another difference arises in this way. In Section 100 (1) (b) the word 'agent' is not to be found. Therefore an agent other than an election agent will fall to be governed by the expression 'any other person'. To get the benefit of not having to prove the effect of the corrupt practice upon the election the consent of the candidate or his election agent to the alleged practice will have to be established.

28. Again for the establishment of the corrupt practice under Section 123 (4), from whatever quarter it may proceed, the election petitioner must establish —

(a) publication of a statement of fact, and

(b) the statement is false or the person making it believes it to be false or does not believe it to be true, and

(c) that the statement refers to the personal character and conduct of the candidate, and

(d) is reasonably calculated to prejudice the candidate's prospects.

It appears, therefore, that it is a question of different burdens of proof as to whether the offending statement was made by the candidate himself or by an agent other than an election agent.

29. Having dealt with the substantive law on the subject of election petitions we may now turn to the procedural provisions in the Representation of the People Act. Here we have to consider Ss. 81, 83 and 86 of the Act. The first provides the procedure for the presentation of election petitions. The proviso to sub-section alone is material here. It provides that an election petition may be presented on one or more of the grounds specified in sub-sec. (1) of S. 100 and S. 101. That as we have shown above creates the substantive right. Section 83^a then provides that the election petition must contain a concise statement of the material facts on which the petitioner relies and further that he must also set forth full particulars of any corrupt practice that the petitioner alleges including as full a statement as possible of the names of the parties alleged to have committed such corrupt practice and the date and place of the commission of each such practice. The section is mandatory and requires first a concise statement of material facts and then requires the fullest possible particulars. What is the difference between material facts and particulars? The word 'material' shows that the facts necessary to formulate a complete cause of action must be stated. Omission of a single material fact leads to an incomplete cause of action and the statement of claim becomes bad. The function of particulars is to present as full a picture of the cause of action with such further information in detail as to make the opposite party understand the case he will have to meet. There may be some overlapping between material facts and particulars but the two are quite distinct. Thus the material facts will mention that a statement of fact (which must be set out) was made and it must be alleged that it refers to the character and conduct of the candidate that it is false or which the returned candidate believes to be false or does not believe to

*Section 83 (1) An election petition—

- (a) shall contain a concise statement of the material facts on which the petitioner relies,
- (b) shall set forth full particulars of any corrupt practice that the petitioner alleges, including as full a statement as possible of the names of the parties alleged to have committed such corrupt practice and the date and place of the commission of each such practice, and
- (c) shall be signed by the petitioner and verified in the manner laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 for the verification of pleadings.

[Provided that where the petitioner alleges any corrupt practice, the petition shall also be accompanied by an affidavit in the prescribed form in support of the allegation of such corrupt practice and the particulars thereof.]

- (2) Any schedule or annexure to the petition shall also be signed by the petitioner and verified in the same manner as the petition.]

be true and that it is calculated to prejudice the chances of the petitioner. In the particulars the name of the person making the statement, with the date, time and place will be mentioned. The material facts thus will show the ground of corrupt practice and the complete cause of action and the particulars will give the necessary information to present a full picture of the cause of action. In stating the material facts it will not do merely to quote the words of the section because then the efficacy of the words 'material facts' will be lost. The fact which constitutes the corrupt practice must be stated and the fact must be correlated to one of the heads of corrupt practice. Just as a plaint without disclosing a proper cause of action cannot be said to be a good plaint, so also an election petition without the material facts relating to a corrupt practice is no election petition at all. A petition which merely cites the sections cannot be said to disclose a cause of action where the allegation is the making of a false statement. That statement must appear and the particulars must be full as to the person making the statement and the necessary information. Formerly the petition used to be in two parts. The material facts had to be included in the petition and the particulars in a schedule. It is inconceivable that a petition could be filed without the material facts and the schedule by merely citing the corrupt practice from the statute. Indeed the penalty of dismissal summarily was enjoined for petitions which did not comply with the requirement. Today the particulars need not be separately included in a schedule but the distinction remains. The entire and complete cause of action must be in the petition in the shape of material facts, the particulars being the further information to complete the picture. This distinction is brought out by the provisions of Section 86 although the penalty of dismissal is taken away. Sub-section (5) of that section provides:

- (5) "The High Court may, upon such terms as to costs and otherwise as it may deem fit, allow the particulars of any corrupt practice alleged in the petition to be amended or amplified in such manner as may in its opinion be necessary for ensuring a fair and effective trial of the petition, but shall not allow any amendment of the petition which will have the effect of introducing particulars of a corrupt practice not previously alleged in the petition."

The power of amendment is given in respect of particulars but there is a prohibition against an amendment "which will have the effect of introducing particulars of a corrupt practice not previously alleged in the petition". One alleges the corrupt practice in the material facts and they must show a complete cause of action. If a petitioner has omitted to allege a corrupt practice, he cannot be permitted to give particulars of the corrupt practice. The argument that the latter part of the fifth sub-section is directory only cannot stand in view of the contrast in the language of the two parts. The first part is enabling and the second part creates a positive bar. Therefore, if a corrupt practice is not alleged, the particulars cannot be supplied. There is however a difference of approach between the several corrupt practices. If for example the charge is bribery of voters and the particulars give a few instances, other instances can be added; if the charge is use of vehicles for free carriage of voters, the particulars of the cars employed may be amplified. But if the charge is that an agent did something, it cannot be amplified by giving particulars of acts on the part of the candidate or vice versa. In the scheme of election law they are separate corrupt practices which cannot be said to grow out of the material facts related to another person. Publication of false statements by an agent is one cause of action, publication of false statements by the candidate is quite a different cause of action. Such a cause of action must be alleged in the material facts before particulars may be given. One cannot under the cover of particulars of one corrupt practice give particulars of a new corrupt practice. They constitute different causes of action.

30. Since a single corrupt practice committed by the candidate, by his election agent or by another person with the consent of the candidate or his election agent is fatal to the election, the case must be specifically pleaded and strictly proved. If it has not been pleaded as part of the material facts, particulars of such corrupt practice cannot be supplied later on. The bar of the latter part of the fifth sub-section to Section 86 then operates. In the petition as originally filed the agency of Jagadguru Shankaracharya, Mr. Madhu Limaye and the Maratha (or Mr. Atrey) was the basis of the charge and the candidate Mr. Fernandez was left out. No allegation was personally made against him. The only allegations against him personally were contained in paragraph 2-G. There it was said that Mr. Fernandez had made certain speeches to the effect that Mr. Patil was against the Muslims and Christians. No evidence was led and they were not even referred to at the hearing before us. The next reference in 2-J is to statements of Mr. Fernandez and published by the Maratha. These were specified and only three such statements were included. Since the gist of the election offence is the publication of false statements, the charge is brought home to the candidate through the publication by the Maratha. It is to be remembered that even the allegation that in doing so the Maratha acted as the agent of Mr. Fernandez, itself came by way of an amendment which we allowed as it completed the cause of action and is permissible. The bar of Section 86 (5) (latter part) does not apply to it and under Order VI, Rule 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure which is applicable as far as may be, such an amendment can be made. Similarly the allegations that such statements were false or were believed to be false or were not believed to be true by the Maratha (i.e., Mr. Atrey) and that they were calculated to prejudice Mr. Patil's chances and did so, were allowed by us to be added as completing the cause of action relating to a corrupt practice already alleged. But we declined to allow to stand the amendments which had the effect of introducing new corrupt practices relating to the candidate himself which had not been earlier pleaded. This kind of amendment is prohibited under the law when the amendment is sought after the period of limitation.

31. The learned Judge in the High Court did not keep the distinction between material facts and particulars in mind although the language of the statute is quite clear and makes a clear-cut division between the two. He seems to have been persuaded to such a course by a reading of the rulings of this Court and the High Courts. These same rulings were presented before us and we may now say a few words about them.

32. The learned Judge in the High Court has relied upon Harish Chandra Bajpai v. Triloki Singh, 1957 SCR 370 = (AIR 1957 SC 444) and deduced the proposition that where the petition sets out the corrupt practice as a ground, instances of the corrupt practices may be added subsequently and even after the period of limitation of filing the petition is over. Following that case the learned Judge has allowed the amendments as corrupt practice under Section 123 (4) was alleged in the original petition. We shall come to that case last of all. It seems to have played a great part in moulding opinion in India on the subject of amendment of pleadings in the Election Law.

33. To begin with it must be realised that as is stated in Jagan Nath v Jaswant Singh, 1954 SCR 892 (895)=(AIR 1954 SC 210 at p 212) the statutory requirements of the law of Election in India must be strictly observed. It is pointed out in that case that an election contest is not an action at law or a suit in equity but a purely statutory proceeding unknown to common law and that the Court possesses no common law power. Although the power of amendment given in the Code of Civil Procedure can be invoked because Section 87 makes the procedure applicable, as nearly as may be to the trial of election petitions, the Representation of the People Act itself enacts some rules which override the Civil Procedure Code. General power of amendment or the power derived from the Code of Civil Procedure must be taken to be overborne in so far as the election law provides. In a large number of cases it has been laid down by the High Courts in India that the material facts, must make out a charge and it is only then that an amendment to amplify the charge can be allowed or new instances of commission of corrupt practice charged can be given. If no charge is made out in the petition at all the addition of particulars cannot be allowed to include indirectly a new charge. This was laid down in Din Dayal v. Beni Prasad, (1955) 15 Ele LR 131 (All). Balwan Singh v. Election Tribunal, Kanpur, (1955) 15 Ele LR 199 (All) by the Allahabad High Court, in T. I. Sasivarna Thevar v V Arunagiri, (1955) 17 Ele LR 313 (Mad) by the Madras High Court and in Hari Vishnu Kamath v. Election Tribunal, Jaipur, (1958) 14 Ele LR 147 (MP) by the Madhya Pradesh High Court. All these cases rely upon Harish Chandra Bappa's case, 1957 SCR 370=(AIR 1957 SC 444) to which we have referred. Harish Chandra Bappa's case, 1957 SCR 370=(AIR 1957 SC 444) was based on an English case Beal v Smith, (1869) LR 4 CP 115. In that case it was held that under the Parliamentary Election Act of 1868 it was enough to allege generally in the petition that "the respondent by himself and other persons on his behalf was guilty of bribery, treating and undue influence before, during and after the election". A summons was taken out calling upon the petitioner to deliver better particulars of "other persons". Willes, J., after consulting Martin, B and Blackburn, J., ordered better particulars. It was contended that the petition should be taken of the files since the particulars were lacking. Section 20 of that Act only provided that an election petition should be in such form and should state such matters as may be prescribed. Rule 2 prescribed that the petition should state (i) the right of the petitioner to petition, and (ii) should state the holding and result of the election and then should briefly state such facts and grounds relied on to sustain the prayer. Rule 5 prescribed the form which required facts to be stated. Bovill, C J., said that the form of the petition was proper and it was quite useless to state anything further. But in Bruce v. Odhams Press Ltd., 1938-1 KB 697 the Court of Appeal distinguished 'material facts' from 'particulars' as they occurred in Order XIX of the Rules of the Supreme Court of England. The words there were material facts and particulars and the distinction made by Scott, L J., bears out the distinction we have made between 'material facts' and 'particulars' as used in Sec 83 of our statute. The same view was also expressed in Phillips v. Phillips, (1878) 4 QB 127. The observations of Brett, L J., in that case also bear out the distinction which we have made.

34. It appears that this distinction was not brought to the notice of this Court in Harish Chandra Bappa's case. The rules on the subject of pleadings in the English statute considered in Beal's case were different. We have in our statute an insistence on a concise statement of material facts and the particulars of corrupt practice alleged. These expressions we have explained. However, it is not necessary to go into this question because even on the law as stated in Harish Chandra Bappa's case, 1957 SCR 370=(AIR 1957 SC 444) the amendment allowed in this case cannot be upheld. We shall now notice Harish Chandra Bappa's case, 1957 SCR 370=(AIR 1957 SC 444) a little more fully.

35. In that case the material allegation was that the appellants "could in the furtherance of their election enlist the support of certain government servants" and that the appellant No. 1 had employed two persons in excess of the prescribed number for his election purposes. No list of corrupt practices was attached. Thereafter names were sought to be added. The amendment was allowed by the Tribunal after the period of limitation and the addition was treated as mere particulars. It was held by this Court that an election petition must specify "grounds or charges" and if that was done then the particulars of the grounds or charges could be amended and new instances given but no new ground or charge could be added after the period of limitation. The reason given was that the amendment "introducing a new charge" altered the character of the petition. Venkataraman Iyyar, J., emphasised over and over again that new instances could be given provided they related to a 'charge' contained in the petition. The result of the discussion in the case was summarised by the learned Judge at page 392 (of SCR)=(at p. 455 of AIR) as follows:—

"(1) Under Section 83 (3) the Tribunal has power to allow particulars in respect of illegal or corrupt practices to be amended, provided the petition itself specifies the grounds or charges, and this power extends to permitting new instances to be given.

(2) The Tribunal has power under Order VI, Rule 17 to order amendment of a petition, but that power cannot be exercised so as to permit new grounds or charges to be raised or to so alter its character as to make it in substance a new petition, if a fresh petition on those allegations will then be barred."

What is meant by 'ground or charge' was not stated. By "ground" may be meant the kind of corrupt practice which the petitioner alleges but the word "charge" means inclusion of some material facts to make out the ground. Applying the same test (although without stating it) the learned Judge pointed out that the charge made in the petition was that the appellants 'could' in furtherance of their election enlist the support of certain government servants and it meant only an ability to enlist support but the 'charge' which was sought to be levelled against the candidate later was that he had in fact enlisted the said support. The learned Judge observed at page 393 (of SCR)=(at p. 456 of AIR) as follows:—

that they moved in public so closely with high dignitaries as to create in the minds of the voters the impression that they were favoured by them. We are unable to read into the allegations in para 7 (c) as originally framed any clear and categorical statement of a charge under Sec. 123 (8), or indeed under any of the provisions of the Election law."

The allegation in the statement was described as worthless and further it was observed at page 395 (of SCR)=(at p. 456 of AIR) as follows:—

"But even if we are to read "could" in para 7 (c) as meaning "did", it is difficult to extract out of it a charge under Section 123 (8). The allegation is not clear whether the Government servants were asked by the appellants to support their candidature, or whether they were asked to assist them in furtherance of their election prospects, and there is no allegation at all that the Government servants did, in fact, assist the appellants in the election. On these allegations, it is difficult to hold that the petition in fact raised a charge under Section 123 (8). It is a long jump from the petition as originally laid to the present amendment, wherein for the first time it is asserted that certain Mukhias — no Mukhias are mentioned in the petition — assisted the appellants in furtherance of their election prospects, and that thereby the corrupt practice mentioned in Section 123 (8) had been committed. The new matters introduced by the amendment so radically alter the character of the petition as originally framed as to make it practically a new petition, and it was not within the power of the Tribunal to allow an amendment of that kind."

It would appear from this that to make out a complete charge the facts necessary must be included in relation to a 'ground' as stated in the Act. Merely repeating the words of the statute is not sufficient. The petitioner must specify the ground i.e., to say the nature of the corrupt practice and the facts necessary to make out a charge. Although it has been said that the charge of corrupt practice is in the nature of quasi criminal charge, the trial of an election petition follows the procedure for the trial of a civil suit. The charge which is included in the petition must, therefore, specify the material facts of which the truth must be established. This is how the case was understood in numerous other cases, some of which we have already referred. In particular see J Devaiah v Nagappa, AIR 1965 Mys 102 and Babulal Sharma v Brijnaram Brayesb, AIR 1958 Madh Pra 175 (FB).

36. Three other cases of this Court were also cited. In Chandi Prasad Chokhani v. State of Bihar, 1962-2 SCR 276 (289)=(AIR 1961 SC 1708) it was held that the powers of amendment were extensive but they were controlled by the law laid down in the Representation of the People Act. It was again emphasised that a new ground or charge could not be made the ground of attack as that made a new petition. In Bhum Sen v. Gopal, (1961) 22 Ele LR 288 (Mad) the scope of Harish Chandra Bajpai's case, 1957 SCR 370=(AIR 1957 SC 444) was considered and its narrow application was pointed out. Indeed in that case the observations in Harish Chandra Bajpai's case, 1957 SCR 370=(AIR 1957 SC 444) were not followed to the uttermost limit. In Sheopat Singh v. Ram Pratap, 1965-1 SCR 175=(AIR 1965 SC 677) the only allegation was that the appellant (Hanram) got published through him and others a statement but there was no allegation that Hanram believed the statement to be false or did not believe it to be true. It was held that in the absence of such averment it could not be held that there was an allegation of corrupt practice against Hanram. The publication with guilty knowledge was equated to a kind of mens rea and this was considered a necessary ingredient to be alleged in the petition.

37. From our examination of all the cases that were cited before us we are satisfied that an election petition must set out a ground or charge. In other words, the kind of corrupt practice which was perpetrated together with material facts on which a charge can be made out must be stated. It is obvious that merely repeating the words of the statute does not amount to a proper statement of facts and the section requires that material facts of corrupt practices must be stated. If the material facts of the corrupt practice are stated more or better particulars of the charge may be given later, but where the material facts themselves are missing it is impossible to think that the charge has been made or can be later amplified. This is tantamount to the making of a fresh petition.

38. Reverting therefore to our own case we find that the allegation in paragraph 2-J was that Mr. Fernandez made some statements and the 'Maratha' published them. Extracts from the 'Maratha' were filed as Exhibits. Since publication of a false statement is the gist of an election offence the charge was against the 'Maratha'. If it was intended that Mr. Fernandez should be held responsible for what he said then the allegation should have been what statement Mr. Fernandez made and how it offended the election law. In 2-J itself only three statements were specified and two of them had nothing to do with Mr. Fernandez and the third was merely a news item which the 'Maratha' had published. There was no reference to any statement by Mr. Fernandez himself throughout the petition as it was originally filed. In fact there was no charge against Mr. Fernandez which could have brought the case within Section 101 (b) (Section 100 (1) (b)?) of the Act. The attempt was only to make out the case under Section 101 (d) (Section 100 (1) (d)?) against the 'Maratha' (or Mr. Atrey) pleading Mr. Atrey as agent of Mr. Fernandez. That too was pleaded in the amendments.

39. The result is that the case gets confined to that of a candidate responsible for the acts of his agent. In the argument before us Mr. Chari for Mr. Fernandez conceded the position that Mr. Atrey could be treated as the agent of Mr. Fernandez. We are therefore relieved of the trouble of determining whether Mr. Atrey could be held to be an agent or not. The Trial Judge was also satisfied that Mr. Atrey could be held to have acted as the agent of Mr. Fernandez. The case as originally pleaded fell within Section 101 (d) (Section 100 (1) (d)?) with the additional burden. Although Mr. Daph-tary was content to prove that the consent of Mr. Fernandez was immaterial as the corrupt practice of his agent was equally fatal to the election and attempted to prove his case under Section 100 (1) (d) of the Act. Mr. Jethamalani who took over the argument from him contended that the case fell to be governed by Section 101 (b) (Section 100 (1) (b)?) i.e., to say of any person who did the act with the consent of Mr. Fernandez. It is therefore necessary to pause here to decide whether Mr. Atrey had the consent of Mr. Fernandez to the publications in his newspaper.

40. The difference between Mr. Daph-tary's argument and that of Mr. Jethamalani lies in this. In the latter the consent of the candidate must be proved to each corrupt practice alleged, in the former

there is only need to prove that a person can be held to have acted as an agent with the consent of the candidate. An agent in this connection is not one who is an intermeddler but one acting with the consent, express or implied, of the candidate. According to Mr. Jethamalani when an agent works regularly for a candidate the consent to all his acts must be presumed and he contends that the Court was wrong in requiring proof of prior consent to each publication. On the other hand, Mr. Chari's case is that when Mr. Atrey acted as an agent and when he did not act as an agent, is a question to be considered in respect of each publication in the 'Maratha'. According to him it is not sufficient merely to say that Mr. Atrey was an agent because Mr. Atrey was also editor of the newspaper and in running his newspaper his activities were his own and not on behalf of Mr. Fernandez. Mr. Jethamalani relies strongly upon the case of Rama Krishna, (C. A. No. 1949 of 1967 decided on April 23, 1968 (SC) and Inder Lal Yugal Kishore v. Lal Singh, AIR 1961 Raj 122). Rama Krishna's case, C. A. No. 1949 of 1967, D/- 23-4-1968 (SC) was decided on its special facts. There the agent was one who had been employed regularly by Rama Krishna not only in the last election but also in two previous elections. Rama Krishna stated that the arrangements for his election were completely left in that agent's hands. The agent had got printed some posters which had defamed the candidate and these posters were exposed on the walls. Rama Krishna admitted that he had seen these posters and also that he had paid for the posters when the bill was presented to him. In fact he included the amount in his return of election expenses. It was from these combined facts that the consent of Rama Krishna to the corrupt practice of making false and defamatory statements was held proved. The case therefore is not one in which the person while acting in a different capacity makes a defamatory statement.

41. In the case from Rajasthan the rule laid down was that the association of persons or a society or a political party or its permanent members, who set up a candidate, sponsor his cause, and work to promote his election, may be aptly called the agent for election purposes. In such cases where these persons commit corrupt practice unless the exception in S. 100 (2) apply, the returned candidate should be held guilty. We shall consider this question later.

42. Before we deal with the matter further we wish to draw attention to yet another case of this Court reported in Kumara Nand v. Brijmohan Lal Sharma, 1967-2 SCR 127=(AIR 1967 SC 808). In that case Section 123 (4) was analysed. It was held that the belief must be that of the candidate himself. The word "he" in the sub-section where it occurs for the first time was held to mean the candidate. This Court observed as follows:—

"The sub-section requires: (i) publication of any statement of fact by a candidate, (ii) that fact is false, (iii) the candidate believes it to be false or does not believe it to be true, (iv) the statement is in relation to the personal character or conduct of another candidate, and (v) the said statement is one being reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of the other candidate's election: (See 1965-1 SCR 175=(AIR 1965 SC 677). This case thus lays down that the person with whose belief the provision is concerned is ordinarily the candidate who, if we may say so, is responsible for the publication. The responsibility of the candidate for the publication arises if he publishes the thing himself. He is equally responsible for the publication if it is published by his agent. Thirdly he is also responsible where the thing is published by any other person but with the consent of the candidate or his election agent. In all three cases the responsibility is of the candidate and it is ordinarily the candidate's belief that matters for this purpose. If the candidate either believes the statement to be false or does not believe it to be true he would be responsible under Section 123 (4). In the present case the poem was not actually read by the appellant, but it was read in his presence at a meeting at which he was presiding by Avinash Chander. In these circumstances the High Court was right in coming to the conclusion that the recitation of the poem by Avinash Chander at the meeting amounted to the publication of the false statement of fact contained in it by another person with the consent of the candidate, and in this case, even of his election agent who was also present at the meeting. But the responsibility for such publication in the circumstance of this case is of the candidate and it is the candidate's belief that matters and not the belief of the person who actually read it with the consent of the candidate. What would be the position in a case where the candidate had no knowledge at all of the publication before it was made need not be considered for that is not so here. It is not disputed in this case that the statement that the respondent was the greatest of all thieves, was false. It is also not seriously challenged that the appellant did not believe it to be true. The contention that Avinash Chander's belief should have been proved must therefore fail."

43 From this case it follows that to prove a corrupt practice in an agent is not enough, the belief of the candidate himself must be investigated with a view to finding out whether he made a statement which he knew to be false or did not believe it to be true. When we come to the facts of the case in hand we shall find that most of the statements were made by a newspaper editor in the normal course of running a newspaper. Some of the passages which are criticised before us were made as news items and some others were put in the editorial. It is to be remembered that the newspaper ran a special column called "George Fernandez's Election Front". No article or comment in that column has been brought before us as an illustration of the corrupt practice. A newspaper publishes news and expresses views and these are functions normal to a newspaper. If the same news appeared in more than one paper, it cannot be said that each editor acted as agent for Mr. Fernandez and by parity of reasoning a line must be drawn to separate the acts of Mr. Atrey in running his newspaper and in acting as an agent. Mr. Atrey was not a wholetime agent of Mr. Fernandez so that anything that he said or did would be treated as bearing upon the belief of Mr. Fernandez as to the truth of the statements made by Mr. Atrey. Therefore, every act of Mr. Atrey could not be attributed to Mr. Fernandez so as to make the latter liable. We have therefore to analyse these articles to find out which of them answers the test which we have propounded here. But the fact remains that the case was pleaded on the basis of corrupt practices on the part of an agent but by the amendment the candidate was sought to be charged with the corrupt practices personally. As there was no such charge or ground in the original petition and as the application for amendment was made long after the period of limitation was over the amendment could not be allowed. Accordingly the learned Judge ruled out the amendments concerning the personal speeches of Mr. Fernandez and the article in the 'Blitz.'

44 After we announced our conclusion about the amendments Mr. Daphtry with the permission of the Court left the case in the hands of Mr. Jethmalani and the argument to which we have already referred in brief was advanced by him. As pointed out already Mr. Jethmalani attempted to prove that the case would be governed by S. 100 (1) (b) i.e., to say that the statements in the 'Maratha' were published with the consent of Mr. Fernandez. Mr. Jethmalani deduced this from the course of events and argued that on proof of the corrupt practices committed by the 'Maratha', Mr. Fernandez would be personally liable. He based himself on the following facts. He pointed out that Mr. Fernandez had admitted that he desired that the newspapers should support his candidature and therefore must have been glad that the 'Maratha' was supporting him, and the articles in the 'Maratha' were uniformly for the benefit of Mr. Fernandez. Sampurna Maharashtra Samiti was also supporting the candidature of Mr. Fernandez and the 'Maratha' had made common cause with the Sampurna Maharashtra Samiti, the offices of both being situated in the same building which was also Mr. Atrey's residence. Mr. Atrey was the editor of the 'Maratha' and Chairman of the Sampurna Maharashtra Samiti. Mr. Atrey was also a candidate supported by the Sampurna Maharashtra Samiti. Mr. Fernandez and Mr. Atrey had a common platform and they supported each other in their respective constituencies. The 'Maratha' carried a column "George Fernandez's Election Front" which was intended to be a propaganda column in favour of Mr. Fernandez. He contended that Mr. Fernandez could not be unaware of what Mr. Atrey was doing. He pointed out several statements of Mr. Fernandez in which he sometimes unsuccessfully denied the knowledge of various facts. He contended lastly that Mr. Fernandez had social contacts with Mr. Atrey and could not possibly be unaware that Mr. Atrey was vociferously attacking Mr. Patil's character and conduct. Mr. Jethmalani therefore argued that there was knowledge and acquiescence on the part of Mr. Fernandez and as there was no repudiation of what the 'Maratha' published against Mr. Patil, Mr. Fernandez must be held responsible. The learned trial Judge in his judgment has given a summary of all these things at page 695 and it reads:

"To sum up, it is clear from the above discussion that respondent No. 1 is a prominent member of the SSP, that the SSP is a constituent unit of the SMS, that both Acharya Atrey and respondent No. 1 participated in the formation of the SMS campaign by the SMS, that the SMS, carried on election that they both participated in the inauguration of the election propaganda for candidates supported by it including respondent No. 1, that Acharya Atrey was the President of the Bombay Unit of the SMS and was a prominent and a leading member thereof, that each of them addressed a meeting of the constituency of the other to carry on election propaganda for the other, that Acharya Atrey through the columns of his newspaper Maratha carried on intensive and vigorous campaign for success of candidates supported by the SMS including respondent No. 1, that Acharya Atrey started a special feature in Maratha under the heading "George Fernandez Election Front". These factors amongst others show that Acharya Atrey had authority to canvass for respondent No. 1, that he made a common cause with respondent No. 1 for promoting his election, that to the knowledge of respondent No. 1 and for the purpose of promoting his election, he (Atrey) canvassed and did various things as tended to promote his election. This in law is sufficient to make Acharya Atrey an agent of respondent No. 1 as that term is understood under the election law."

45. Mr. Jethamalani contended in further support that there was a clear similarity in the statements and utterances of Mr. Fernandez and Mr. Atrey. He inferred a high probability of concert between them. In this connection he referred in particular to the speech of Mr. Fernandez at Shivaji Park and the conduct of Shanbhag, one of his workers, in following up what Mr. Fernandez had said. We shall refer to this last part later on which a considerable part of the time of the Court was spent, although we had ruled out the amendment with regard to the speech at Shivaji Park. Mr. Jethamalani referred to the following cases among others in support of his contention that consent in such circumstances may be assumed: Nani Gopal Swami v. Abdul Hamid, AIR 1959 Assam 200, Adams v. Hon. E. F. Leveson Gower, (1869) 1 O' M & H 218, Christie v. Grieve, (1869) 1 O' M & H 251 and W. F. Spencer, John Blundell v. Charles Harrison, (1871) 3 O' M & H 148. There is no doubt that consent need not be directly proved and a consistent course of conduct in the canvass of the candidate may raise a presumption of consent. But there are cases and cases. Even if all this is accepted we are of opinion that consent cannot be inferred. The evidence proves only that Mr. Atrey was a supporter and that perhaps established agency of Mr. Atrey. It may be that evidence is to be found supporting the fact, that Mr. Atrey acted as agent of Mr. Fernandez with his consent. That however does not trouble us because Mr. Chari admitted that Mr. Atrey can be treated as an agent of Mr. Fernandez. It is however a very wide jump from this to say that Mr. Fernandez had consented to each publication as it came or even generally consented to the publication of items defaming the character and conduct of Mr. Patil. That consent must be specific. If the matter was left entirely in the hands of Mr. Atrey who acted solely as agent of Mr. Fernandez, something might be said as was done in Rama Krishna's case, C. A. No. 1949 of 1967, D/- 23-4-1968 (SC) (supra) by this Court. Otherwise there must be some reasonable evidence from which an inference can be made of the meeting of the minds as to these publications or at least a tacit approval of the general conduct of the agent. If we were not to keep this distinction in mind there would be no difference between Sections 100 (1) (b) and 100 (1) (d) in so far as an agent is concerned. We have shown above that a corrupt act per se is enough under Section 100 (1) (b) while under Section 100 (1) (d) the act must directly affect the result of the election in so far as the returned candidate is concerned. Section 100 (1) (b) makes no mention of an agent while Section 100 (1) (d) specifically does. There must be some reason why this is so. The reason is this that an agent cannot make the candidate responsible unless the candidate has consented or the act of the agent has materially affected the election of the returned candidate. In the case of any person (and he may be an agent) if he does the act with the consent of the returned candidate there is no need to prove the effect on the election. Therefore, either Mr. Jethamalani must prove that there was consent and that would mean a reasonable inference from facts that Mr. Fernandez consented to the acts of Mr. Atrey or he must prove that the result of the election was seriously affected. If every act of an agent must be presumed to be with the consent of the candidate, there would be no room for application of the extra condition laid down by Section 100 (1) (d), because whenever agency is proved either directly or circumstantially, the finding about consent under Section 100 (1) (b) will have to follow. We are clearly of opinion that Mr. Jethamalani's argument that Section 100 (1) (b) applies can only succeed if he establishes consent on the part of Mr. Fernandez.

46. We have already pointed out that Mr. Atrey was also the editor of a newspaper which, as Mr. Patil has himself admitted, was always attacking him. Mr. Atrey had opened a column in his newspaper to support Mr. Fernandez's candidature. Although nine articles appeared in the column between December 3, 1966 to February 2, 1967, not a single false statement from this column has been brought to our notice. There was not even a suggestion that Mr. Fernandez wrote any article for the 'Maratha' or communicated any fact. It is also significant that although Mr. Atrey addressed meetings in the constituency of Mr. Fernandez, not a single false statement of Mr. Atrey was proved from his speeches on those occasions. The petitioner himself attended one such meeting on February 4, 1967, but he does not allege that there was any attack on his personal character or conduct. The learned trial Judge has also commented on this fact. We think that regard being had to the activities of Mr. Atrey as editor and his own personal hostility to Mr. Patil on the issue of Sampurna Maharashtra Samiti, we cannot attribute every act of Mr. Atrey to Mr. Fernandez. Mr. Chari is right in his contention that Mr. Atrey's field of agency was limited to what he said as the agent of Mr. Fernandez and did not embrace the field in which he was acting as editor of his newspaper. It is also to be noticed that Mr. Atrey did not publish any article of Mr. Fernandez, nor did he publish any propaganda material.

47. The meeting at Shivaji Park about which we shall say something presently, was not held in Mr. Fernandez's constituency. The similarity of ideas or even of words cannot be pressed into service to show consent. There was a stated policy of Sampurna Maharashtra Samiti which wanted to join in Maharashtra all the areas which had not so far been joined and statements in that behalf must have been made not only by Mr. Atrey but by several other persons. Since Mr. Atrey was not appointed as agent we cannot go by the similarity of language alone. It is also very significant that not a single speech of Mr. Fernandez was relied upon and only one speech of Mr. Fernandez, namely, that at Shivaji Park was brought into arguments before us came by an amendment which we disallowed. The best proof would have been his own speech or some propaganda material such as leaflets or pamphlets, etc., but none was produced. The 'Maratha' was an independent newspaper not under the control of the Sampurna Maharashtra Samiti or the S. S. P., which was sponsoring Mr. Fernandez or Mr. Fernandez himself. Further we have ruled out news items which it is the function of the newspaper to publish. A news item without any further proof of what had actually happened through witnesses is of no value. It is at best a second-hand secondary evidence. It is well known that reporters collect information and pass it on to the editor who edits the news item and then publishes it. In this process the truth might get perverted or garbled. Such news items cannot be said to prove themselves although they may be taken into account with other evidence if the other evidence is forcible. In the present case the only attempt to prove a speech of Mr. Fernandez was made in connection with the Shivaji Park meeting. Similarly the editorials state the policy of the newspaper and its comment upon the events. Many of the news items were published in other papers also. For example Free Press Journal, the Blitz and writers like Welles Hengens had also published similar statements. If they could not be regarded as agents of Mr. Fernandez we do not see any reason to hold that the 'Maratha' or Mr. Atrey can safely be regarded as agent of Mr. Fernandez when acting for the newspaper so as to prove his consent to the publication of the defamatory matter. We are therefore of opinion that consent cannot reasonably be inferred to the publications in the 'Maratha'. We are supported in our approach to the problem by a large body of case law to which our attention was drawn by Mr. Chari. We may refer to a few cases here. Biswanath Upadhyaya v. Haralal Das, AIR 1958 Assam 97, Abdul Majeed v. Bhargavan, AIR 1963 Ker 18, Rustom Satin v. Dr. Sampurnanand, (1959) 20 Ele LR 221 (All), Sarla Devi v. Birendra Singh, 20 Ele LR 275 = (AIR 1961 Madh Pra 127), Krishna Kumar v. Krishna Gopal, AIR 1964 Raj 21, Lalsingh Keshriving v. Valabhdas Shankerlal, AIR 1967 Guj 62, Badri Narain Singh v. Kamdeo Prasad Singh, AIR 1961 Pat 41 and Sarat Chandra v. Khagendranath Nath, AIR 1961 SC 834. It is not necessary to refer to these cases in detail except to point out that the Rajasthan case dissents from the case from Assam on which Mr. Jethamalani relied. The principle of law is settled that consent may be inferred from circumstantial evidence but the circumstances must point unerringly to the conclusion and must not admit of any other explanation. Although the trial of an election petition is made in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure, it has been laid down that a corrupt practice must be proved in the same way as a criminal charge is proved. In other words, the election petitioner must exclude every hypothesis except that of guilt on the part of the returned candidate or his election agent. Since we have held that Mr. Atrey's activities must be viewed in two compartments, one connected with Mr. Fernandez and the other connected with the newspaper we have to find out whether there is an irresistible inference of guilt on the part of Mr. Fernandez. Some of the English cases cited by Mr. Jethamalani are not a safe guide because in England a distinction is made between "illegal practices" and "corrupt practices". Cases dealing with "illegal practices" in which the candidate is held responsible for the acts of his agent are not a proper guide. It is to be noticed that making of a false statement is regarded as "illegal practice" and not a "corrupt practice" and the tests are different for a corrupt practice. In India all corrupt practices stand on the same footing. The only difference made is that when consent is proved on the part of the candidate or his election agent to the commission of corrupt practice, that itself is sufficient. When a corrupt practice is committed by an agent and there is no such consent then the petitioner must go further and prove that the result of the election in so far as the returned candidate is concerned was materially affected. In Bayley v. Edmunds Byron, (1895) 11 TLR 537 strongly relied upon by Mr. Daphtary the publication in the newspaper was not held to be a corrupt practice but the paragraph taken from a newspaper and printed as a leaflet was held to be a corrupt practice. That is not the case here. Mr. Patil's own attitude during the election and after is significant.

During the election he did not once protest that Mr. Fernandez was spreading false propaganda, not even when Mr. Fernandez charged his workers with hooliganism. Even after the election Mr. Patil did not attribute anything to Mr. Fernandez. He even said that the Bombay election was conducted with propriety. Even at the filing of the election petition he did not think of Mr. Fernandez but concentrated on the 'Maratha'.

48. Mr. Daphtary sought to strengthen the inference about consent from the inter-connection of events with the comments in the 'Maratha'. He refers to the news item appearing in the 'Times of India' of February 10, 1967 in which the letting loose of bad characters was alleged to be commented upon by Mr. Fernandez. He connected this with the activities of Shanbhag who wrote to the Election Commission and then pointed out that the 'Maratha' came out with it. But if the 'Times of India' cannot be regarded as the agent no more can the 'Maratha'. A newspaper reporting a meeting does so as part of its own activity and there cannot be inference of consent. What was necessary was to plead and prove that Mr. Fernandez said this and this. Then the newspaper reports could be taken in support but not independently. Here the plea was not taken at all and the evidence was not direct but indirect.

49. Mr. Jethamalani referred to some similarity in the reaction of the 'Maratha' and Mr. Fernandez to the events. The Babubhai Chinai incident was said to be a fake by both the 'Maratha' and Mr. Fernandez, the Gayawadi meeting (not pleaded) was said to be followed by similar statements in the 'Maratha', the Bristol Grill Conference was reported in the 'Maratha'. All this shows that the rival party believed in certain facts but it does not show that the 'Maratha' was publishing these articles with Mr. Fernandez's consent. In fact this argument has been designed to get over our finding that the Amendments were wrongly allowed. Before this there was not so much insistence upon consent as thereafter.

50. Now it may be stated that mere knowledge is not enough. Consent cannot be inferred from knowledge alone. Mr. Jethamalani relied upon the Taunton case, (1869) 1 O' M & H 181 at p. 185 where Blackburn, J., said that that one must see how much was being done for the candidate and the candidate then must take the good with the bad. There is difficulty in accepting this contention. Formerly the Indian Election Law mentioned 'knowledge and connivance' but now it insists on consent. Since reference to the earlier phrase has been dropped it is reasonable to think that the law requires some concrete proof, direct or circumstantial of consent, and not merely of knowledge and connivance. It is significant that the drafters of the election petition use the phrase 'knowledge and connivance' and it is reasonable to think that they consulted the old Act and moulded the case round 'knowledge and connivance' and thought that was sufficient.

51. We cannot infer from an appraisal of the evidence of Mr Fernandez that he had consented. His denial is there and may be not accurate but the burden was to be discharged by the election petitioner to establish consent. If Mr. Fernandez suppressed some other facts or denied them, there can be no inference that his denial about knowledge of the articles in the 'Maratha' was also false. Mr Fernandez denied flatly that he saw the articles explaining that there was no time to read newspapers, a fact which has the support of Mr Patil who also said that he had no time to read even cuttings placed by his secretary for his perusal. We may say here that we are not impressed by the testimony of Mr Fernandez and we are constrained to say the same about Mr. Patil. We cannot on an appraisal of all the materials and the arguments of Mr. Daphary reach the conclusion that Mr. Fernandez was responsible for all that Mr. Atrey did in his newspaper or that his consent can be inferred in each case.

52. The most important argument was based on the meeting at Shivaji Park on January 31, 1967 where Mr Fernandez spoke. As the subject of the charge in the original petition did not refer to this speech and we disallowed the amendment, Mr Jethamalani attempted to reach the same result by using the speech as evidence of consent to the publication of the report in the 'Maratha'. Here we may say at once that the speech could not be proved because it was not pleaded. Much time was consumed to take us through the evidence of witnesses who gave the exact words of Mr. Fernandez. Mr. Fernandez was alleged to have said that Mr. Patil was not honest and won elections by changing ballot boxes. Mr Fernandez did not admit having made the speech. Four witnesses Tanksale, Bhide, Khambata and Bendre who alleged that they were present at the meeting deposed to this fact. We have looked into their evidence and are thoroughly dissatisfied with it. Ramkumar, a reporter was also cited. He covered the meeting for the 'Indian Express' but his newspaper had not published this part and Ramkumar was examined to prove that it was deleted by Rao, the Chief Reporter. The evidence of Ramkumar was so discrepant with that of Rao that the trial Judge could not rely on it and we are of the same opinion. The fact that in Ex. 56 Mr. Fernandez had spoken of the 'ways and means' of winning elections of Mr. Patil cannot be held to be proof nor the activities of Shanbagh in arranging for a watch of the ballot boxes. Every candidate is afraid that the ballot boxes may be tampered with and there is no inference possible that because Mr Fernandez or Shanbagh his worker took precautions, Mr. Fernandez must have made a particular speech. It was said that Randive in his evidence admitted that Mr. Fernandez made such comments. We do not agree. His version was different. There is reason to think that there was an attempt to suborn witnesses and make them support this part of the case or to keep away from the witness box. One such attempt was made on Randive. We are not impressed by the witnesses who came to disprove the petitioner's case but that does not improve it either. It seems that attempts were being made to enlist support for such a contention and the evidence shows that the witnesses were not free from influence. It is not necessary to go into the evidence on the other side such as that of Dattu Pradhan and Prafull Baxi. They do not impress us either. We are accordingly not satisfied that Mr Fernandez made any such comment. If he did that would be a ground of the very first importance to an election petition. It is a little surprising that it was alleged so late and appears to be an afterthought and intended to put into the mouth of Mr. Fernandez one of the statements of the 'Maratha'. Consent to the making of the statement in the 'Maratha' had, therefore, to be proved and there is no such proof.

53. For the same reasons we cannot regard Jagadguru Shankaracharya or Mr Madhu Limaye as the agents of Mr Fernandez. The evidence regarding their agency itself is non-existent and there is no material on which consent can be presumed or inferred.

54. The result of the foregoing discussion is that this case will have to be judged of under Section 100 (1) (d) and not under Section 100 (1) (b). In the arguments before us Mr. Chari conceded that some of the articles contain false statements regarding the character and conduct of Mr. Patil. He mentioned in this connection five articles. It is, not, therefore, necessary to examine each of the 16 articles separately. If the conditions required by Section 100 (1) (d) read with Section 123 (4) are satisfied, a corrupt practice avoiding the election will be established. The first condition is that the candidate's belief in the falsity of the statements must be established. That was laid down by this Court in 1967-2 SCR 127 = (AIR 1967 SC 808) (supra). The second condition is that the result of the election in so far as Mr. Fernandez is concerned must be shown to be materially affected. Thus we have not only to see (a) that the statement was made by an agent (b) that it was false, etc., (c) that it related to the personal character and conduct of Mr. Patil, (d) that it was reasonably calculated to harm his chances but also (e) that it in fact materially affected the result of the election in so far as Mr. Fernandez was concerned. Of these (a) and (c) are admitted and (d) ((b)?) is admitted by Mr. Fernandez because he said that he did not believe that there was any truth in these statements. The question next is whether they were calculated to affect the prospects of Mr. Patil. Here there can be no two opinions. These articles cast violent aspersions and were false as admitted by Mr. Fernandez himself. The course of conduct shows a deliberate attempt to lower his character and so they must be held to be calculated to harm him in his election. So far the appellants are on firm ground. Even if all these findings are in favour of the appellants we cannot declare the election to be void under Section 100 (1) (d) (iii) unless we reach the further conclusion that the result of the election in so far as Mr. Fernandez was concerned had been materially affected. The section speaks of the returned candidate when it should have really spoken of the candidate who was defamed or generally about the result. However it be worded, the intention is clear. The condition is a pre-requisite.

55. Mr. Jethamalani argued that the words "materially affected" refer to the general result and not how the voting would have gone in the absence of the corrupt practice. According to him Section 94 of the Act bars disclosure of votes and to attempt to prove how the voting pattern would have changed, would involve a violation of Section 94. According to him the Court can give a finding by looking to the nature of the attacks made, the frequency and extent of publicity, the medium of circulation and the kind of issue that was raised before the voters. He contends that to tell the Maharashtrians that Mr. Patil paid a bribe to the voters of Goa to keep it centrally administered, to call Mr. Patil a Najibkhan of Maharashtra i. e. a traitor, to dub him as the creator of Shiv Sena which terrorised the minorities, to describe him as a goonda and leader of goondas who organised attacks on voters, to charge him with the responsibility of attack on Parliament and the Congress President's residence and to describe him as dishonest to the extent of switching ballot boxes is to materially affect the result of the voting. According to him these circumstances furnish a good basis for the finding that the result of the election was positively affected and nothing more is needed. According to Mr. Jethamalani the capacity of Mr. Atrey when making these violent attacks was irrelevant as he was acting in support of the canvass of Mr. Fernandez.

56. Mr. Jethamalani further submits that different false statements were intended to reach different kind of voters. The Maharashtrians were affected by the Goa and border issues, the minorities by the Shiv Sena allegations, the law-abiding citizens by the allegations about goondism. Thus there must have been a landslide in so far as Mr. Patil was concerned and there must have been corresponding gain to Mr. Fernandez. He relies upon Hackney Case, (1870) 2 Q' M and H Election Rep. 77 where Grove, J. made the following observations at pages 81 and 82:—

"I have turned the matter over in my mind, and I cannot see, assuming that argument to express the meaning of that section, how the tribunal can by possibility say what would or might have taken place under different circumstances. It seems to me to be a problem which the human mind has not yet been able to solve, namely, if things had been different at a certain period, what would have been the result of the concatenation of events upon that supposed change of circumstances. I am unable at all events to express an opinion upon what would have been the result, that is to say, who would have been elected provided certain matters had been complied with here which were not complied with. It was contended that I might bear evidence on both sides as to how an elector thought he would have voted at such election. That might possibly induce a person not sitting judicially to form some sort of vague guess, but that would be far short of evidence which ought to satisfy the mind of a Judge of what any individual who might express that opinion would really do under what might have been entirely changed circumstances. But, besides that, one of the principles of the Ballot Act is that voting should be secret, and voters are not to be compelled to disclose how they voted except upon a scrutiny after a vote has been declared invalid. Notwithstanding that, I am asked here, assuming the construction for which Mr. Bowen contends to be correct, to ascertain how either the 41,000 electors of this Borough, or any number of them, might have wished to vote had they had the opportunity of doing so, and what in that event would have been the result of the election. It seems to me that such an inquiry would not only have been entirely contrary to the spirit of the Act, but also that it would be a simple impossibility. I should therefore, say that even if the wording of the Act, taking it literally and grammatically, required me to put such a construction upon it, it would lead to such a manifest absurdity (using now the judicial term which has generally been used with reference to the construction of statutes) that unless I were in some way imperatively obliged, and unless the Act could by no possibility admit of any other construction, I should not put a construction upon it which really reduced the matter to a practical impossibility. Such a construction would practically render it necessary, in the case of any miscarriage at an election, however great the miscarriage might be (if, that is to say, only a very small number of persons had voted, and all the rest of the Borough had been entirely unable to vote) that the judge should then enquire as to how the election would have gone. As I ventured to remark in the course of the argument, where a miscarriage of this sort took place it would be virtually placing the election not in the hands of the constituency, but in the hands of the election judge, who is not to exercise a judgment as to who is to be the member, but who is only to see whether the election has been properly conducted according to law." Justice Grove then gave the meaning of the provision at page 85 as follows—

"If I look to the whole, and to the sense of it as a whole, it seems to me that the object of the Legislature in this provision is to say this—an election is not to be upset for an informality or for a triviality, it is not to be upset because the clerk of one of the polling stations was five minutes too late, or because some of the polling papers were not delivered in a proper manner, or were not marked in a proper way. The objection must be something substantial, something calculated really to affect the result of the election. I think that that is a way of viewing it which is consistent with the terms of the section. So far as it seems to me, the reasonable and fair meaning of the section is to prevent an election from becoming void by trifling objections on the ground of an informality, because the judge has to look to the substance of the case to see whether the informality is of such a nature as to be fairly calculated in a reasonable mind to produce a substantial effect upon the election." Mr. Jethamalani invites us to apply the same test and in the light of his facts to say that the result of the election in so far as Mr. Fernandez is concerned was materially affected.

57. On the other hand, Mr. Chari relies upon the facts that there was a difference of 30,000 votes between the two rivals and as many as 38,565 votes were cast in favour of the remaining candidates. He says that Mr. Patil had contested the earlier elections from the same constituency and the votes then obtained by him were not more in fact less. He says it is impossible to say how much Mr. Patil lost or Mr. Fernandez gained by reason of the false statements and whether the affected voters did not give their votes to the other candidates. He argues that the best test would be to see what Mr. Patil's reactions were on hearing of his defeat. In this connection he referred to Ex. 120 in which Mr. Patil commented on the elections in Bombay being orderly. In Ex. 123 he said that the voters of Bombay had rejected him and that he has disappointed his supporters and they must pardon him, and that he must have been punished for some sin committed by him. Mr. Chari says that never for a moment did Mr. Patil attribute his defeat to false propaganda by Mr. Fernandez or his supporters, which if it had been a fact Mr. Patil would have lost no time in mentioning. All this shows that Mr. Patil maintained his position in this constituency. Mr. Fernandez had earlier announced that he would organise support for himself from those who had voted in the past for his rivals or had refrained from voting and this Mr. Fernandez was successful in achieving. Mr. Chari relies upon the rulings of this Court where it has been laid down how the burden of proving the effect on the election must be discharged. He referred to the case reported in Vashist Narain Sharma v. Dev Chandra, 1955-1 SCR 509 = (AIR 1954 SC 513) and Surendra Nath v. Dalip Singh, 1957 SCR 179 = (AIR 1957 SC 242) and the later rulings of this Court in which Vashist Narain's case has been followed and applied.

58. In our opinion the matter cannot be considered on possibility. Vashist Narain's case insists on proof. If the margin of votes were small something might be made of the points mentioned by Mr. Jethamalani. But the margin is large and the number of votes earned by the remaining candidates also sufficiently huge. There is no room, therefore, for a reasonable judicial guess. The law requires proof. How far that proof should go or what it should contain is not provided by the legislature. In Vashist's case; 1955-1 SCR 509 = (AIR 1954 SC 513) and in Inayatullah v. Diwanchand Mahajan, (1958) 15 Ele LR 219 at pp. 235-236 (MP) the provision was held to prescribe an impossible burden. The law has however remained as before. We are bound by the rulings of this Court and must say that the burden has not been successfully discharged. We cannot overlook the rulings of this Court and follow the English rulings cited to us.

59. To conclude and summarise our findings: We are satisfied that Mr. Atrey as the Editor of the 'Maratha' published false statements relating to the character and conduct of Mr. Patil, calculated to harm the prospects of Mr. Patil's election that Mr. Atrey was the agent of Mr. Fernandez under the election law, but there is nothing to prove that he did so with the consent of Mr. Fernandez, nor can such consent be implied because in making the statements Mr. Atrey was acting as the editor of his own newspaper the 'Maratha' and not acting for Mr. Fernandez. We are further satisfied that the petitioner has failed to establish in the manner laid down in this Court, that the result of the election was materially affected in so far as Mr. Fernandez was concerned. We are also satisfied that if the petitioner had pleaded corrupt practices against Mr. Fernandez personally (which he did not) the result might have been different. The election petition was ill-considered and left out the most vital charges but for that the petitioner must thank himself.

60. In the result the appeals fail and as already announced earlier they are dismissed with costs.

Civil Appeals Nos. 15 and 16 of 1969, D/- 26-2-1969.

Electricity (Supply) Act (1948), Sec. 57 (as amended in 1956) and Schedule VI — License granted prior to amendment — Charges fixed by Government can be enhanced unilaterally by licensee by virtue of amendment of Section 57 — Right to pay charges fixed previously is not vested right — (Civil P. The charges fixed by the Government for supply of power to consumers under Section 57 of the Act before its amendment in 1956 can be enhanced unilaterally by the Licensee by virtue of the amendment in accordance with the provisions contained in Schedule VI of the Act. AIR 1964 SC 1598, Rel. on; AIR 1955 SC 84 and AIR 1959 SC 648, Dist. (Para 10)

Under the Electricity (Supply) Act prior to its amendment in 1956, the charges fixed by the Government under Section 57 (2) (c) remained in force unless reduced by the licensee in the meantime till the same were altered by a subsequent order made by the Government after getting a fresh recommendation from the rating committee but under the law as it now stands the rate fixed by the Government under Section 57 (A) (1) (d) would be in operation only for such period not exceeding three years as the State Government may specify in the order. Thereafter it can be enhanced by the licensee in accordance with the provisions contained in Schedule VI. There is inconsistency between the present scheme relating to the enhancement of charges vis-a-vis the scheme provided under the Electricity (Supply) Act prior to its amendment in 1956. The two schemes are substantially different. Under the former scheme once the Government fixed the charges the licensee could not alter them but at present at the end of the period fixed in the Government order the licensee has a unilateral right to enhance the charges in accordance with the conditions prescribed in the VIth Schedule. Therefore in view of Section 57 the provisions contained in that schemes have an overriding effect. (Paras 7, 10)

Section 57 of the Electricity (Supply) Act as it stands now lays down that the provisions of Schedule VI shall be deemed to be incorporated in the licence of every licensee not being a local authority, in the case of a licence granted before the commencement of the Act from the date of the commencement of the licensee's next succeeding year of account. Where the license is governed by Sec. 57 the provisions of Sch. VI have to be read into that license. If any of the earlier provisions in the licence either as they stood when the licence was originally granted or as they stood modified as per the provisions of the Electricity (Supply) Act prior to its amendment in 1956 are inconsistent with the provisions of Schedule VI or Sec. 57 (A) as they are now, they must be held to be void and of no effect. (Para 9)

It is true that when an existing Statute or Regulation is repealed and the same is replaced by fresh Statute or Regulation unless the new Statute or Regulation specifically or by necessary implication affects rights created under the old law those rights must be held to continue in force even after the new Statute or Regulation comes into force. But when it is held that the charges fixed can be altered and the controversy relates to the procedure to be adopted in altering them the controversy does not touch any vested right. The procedure in question must necessarily be regulated by the law in force at the time of the alteration of the charges. (Para 8)

Mr M C Chagla, Senior Advocate,

Advocates, and Mr J B Dadachanji, Advocate of M/s J B Dadachanji and Co with him, for Appellants

Mr I N Shrivastava, Advocate, for Respondent (In both the appeals)

HEGDE, J: Common questions of law arise for decision in these appeals, by certificate. The suits from which these appeals arise have been considered together and decided by common judgments both in the High Court as well as in the courts below. It is convenient to do so in this court as well.

2 The suits in questions are representative suits. The plaintiffs-appellants who are consumers of electricity in the Godhra area sued the respondent-company on behalf of all the consumers in that area seeking to restrain the respondent from enforcing the enhanced charges sought to be collected from the consumers of powers used for lights and fans as well as of motive power.

3. The facts leading to these appeals may now be stated. On November 19, 1922, the then Government of Bombay granted a licence under the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 to a concern called Lady Sulochana Chubhai and Co authorising it to generate and supply electricity to the consumers in Godhra area. Clause 10 of the licence prescribed the maximum charges that the licensee could levy for the power supplied. The respondent is the successor of the said licensee. After the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1948 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Supply Act) came into force, a rating committee was constituted under Section 57 (2) of the Supply Act at the request of the respondent on January 19, 1950. On the recommendation of that committee, the Government fixed with effect from February 1, 1952, the following charges for the power supplied:

(i) O-7-9 pies per unit for the electricity supplied for lights and fans with a minimum of Rs. 3 per month per installation and

(ii) for motive power at 4 annas per unit with a minimum of Rs. 4-8-0 per month per installation.

The Supply Act was amended in 1956. The respondent increased the charges for motive power from January 1, 1963 to 35 nP. per unit with a minimum of Rs. 7 per month for every installation. On June 22, 1963, the rates for lights and fans were increased with effect from July 1, 1963 to 70 nP. per unit with a minimum of Rs. 5 per month for every installation. The contention of the appellants is that the respondent was not competent to enhance the charges in question without the matter having been considered by a rating committee. Their suits to restrain the respondent from levying the proposed increased charges were decreed by the trial court. Those decrees were affirmed by the first appellate court as well as by a single judge of the Gujarat High Court in second appeals but the appellate bench of the Gujarat High Court reversed those decrees and dismissed the suits holding that under the Supply Act as amended in 1956 the respondent has a unilateral right to enhance the charges subject to the conditions prescribed in the VIth Schedule to that Act. It is as against those decisions these appeals have been brought. Civil Appeal No. 15 of 1969 relates to the enhancement of charges for electricity power for lights and fans and Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1969 relates to the enhancement of charges for the motive power.

4. The only question that arises for decision in these appeals is whether under the provisions of the Supply Act as amended in 1956, the respondent was competent to unilaterally enhance the charges.

The Supply Act as it stood 'before' 1956.

5. In these appeals we are not concerned with the provisions of the Electricity Act, 1910. There is no dispute as regards the charges fixed by the Government with effect from February 1, 1952, under Section 57 (2) (c) of the Supply Act on the basis of the recommendation made by the rating committee. The appellants admit their liability to pay enhanced charges that may be fixed by the Government on the basis of any recommendation by a freshly appointed rating committee. They merely challenge the respondent's right to unilaterally enhance the charges. According to the appellants they have a vested right to be governed by the charges fixed in 1952 until the same is revised by the Government on the basis of the recommendation of a rating committee. It was urged on their behalf that the amendments made in 1956 do not affect the charges fixed in 1952 and they continue to rule till altered by the Government in accordance with law. The respondent repudiates those contentions. It denies that the appellants have any vested right in the charges fixed. It was urged on its behalf that the amendments made to the Supply Act in 1956 have substantially altered the scheme as regards levying charges; it is now open to a licensee to alter the charges fixed by the Government unilaterally subject to the conditions prescribed in Sec. 57 (A) and in Schedule VI of the Supply Act. We may mention at this stage that even according to the appellants the charges that may be fixed by the Government now on the basis of the recommendation of a rating committee can be unilaterally altered by the licensee after the period fixed in the Government order in accordance with Clause (e) of Section 57 (A) (1) expires.

6. In order to decide the point in controversy, we have to take into consideration the relevant provisions of the Supply Act as it stands now and as it stood prior to its amendment in 1956. For the sake of convenience we shall set out side by side the relevant provisions.

The Supply Act as amended in 1956.

S. 57. The provisions of the Sixth Schedule and the Seventh Schedule shall be deemed to be incorporated in the licence of every licensee not being a local authority—

(a) in the case of a licence granted before the commencement of this Act, from the date of the commence-commencement of the licensee's next succeeding year of account, and from such date the licensee shall comply therewith accordingly and any provisions of such licence or of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), or any other law, agreement or instrument applicable to the licensee shall, in relation to the licensee, be void and of no effect in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this section and the said Schedule and Table.

(2) Where the provisions of the Sixth Schedule and the Table appended to the Seventh Schedule are under sub-section (1) deemed to be incorporated in the licence of any licensee, the following provisions shall have effect in relation to the said licensee, namely—

(a) the Board, or where no Board is constituted under this Act, the Provincial Government, may, if it is satisfied that the licensee has failed to comply with any provisions of the Sixth Schedule and shall when requested so to do by the licensee, constitute a rating committee to examine the licensee's charges for the supply of electricity and to recommend thereon to the Provincial Government.

Provided that no rating committee shall be constituted in respect of a licensee within three years from the date on which such a committee has reported in respect of that licensee, unless the Provincial Government declares that in its opinion circumstances have arisen rendering the orders passed on the recommendations of the previous rating committee unfair to the licensee or any of his consumers.

(b) The rating committee shall, after giving the licensee a reasonable opportunity of being heard and after taking into consideration the efficiency of operation and management and the potentialities of his undertaking, report to the Provincial Government making recommendations (and giving reasons therefor) regarding the charges for electricity which the licensee may make to any class or classes of consumers so however that the recommendations are not likely to prevent the licensee from earning clear profits sufficient when taken with the sums available in the Tariffs and Dividends Control

ment of the licensee's next succeeding year of account; and

(b) in the case of a licence granted after the commencement of this Act from the date of the commencement of supply.

and as from the said date, the licensee shall comply with the provisions of the said Schedules accordingly, and any provisions of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910, and the licence granted to him thereunder and of any other law, agreement or instrument applicable to the licensee shall, in relation to the licensee, be void and of no effect in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of section 57A and the said Schedules.

S 57 (A) (1) Where the provisions of the Sixth Schedule and the Seventh Schedule are under Section 57 deemed to be incorporated in the licence of any licensee, the following provisions shall have effect in relation to the said licensee namely.—

(a) the Board or where no Board is constituted under this Act, the State Government—

(i) may, if satisfied that the licensee has failed to comply with any of the provisions of the Sixth Schedule; and

(ii) shall, when so requested by the licensee in writing constitute a rating committee to examine the licensee's charges for the supply of electricity and to make recommendations in that behalf to the State Government.

Provided that where it is proposed to constitute a rating committee under this section on account of the failure of the licensee to comply with any provisions of the Sixth Schedule, such committee shall not be constituted unless the licensee has been given a notice in writing of thirty clear days (which period if the circumstances so warrant may be extended from time to time) to show cause against the action proposed to be taken.

Provided further that no such rating committee shall be constituted if the alleged failure of the licensee to comply with any provisions of the Sixth Schedule raises any dispute or difference as to the interpretation of the said provisions or any matter arising therefrom and such difference or dispute has been referred by the Reserve to afford him a reasonable return during next succeeding three years of account if the potentialities of the undertaking of the licensee, with efficient operation and management, so permit.

(c) Within one month after the receipt of the report under clause (b) the Provincial Government shall cause the report to be published in the Official Gazette, and may at the same time make an order in accordance therewith fixing the licensee's charges for the supply of electricity with effect from such date, not earlier than two months after the date of publication of the report, as may be specified in the order; and the licensee shall forthwith give effect to such order:

Provided that nothing in this clause shall be deemed to prevent a licensee from reducing at any time any charges, so fixed.

THE SIXTH SCHEDULE.

I. The Licensee shall so adjust his rates for the sale of electricity by periodical revision that his clear profit in any year shall not as far as possible exceed the amount of reasonable return:

Provided that the licensee shall not be considered to have failed so to adjust his rates if the clear profit in any year of account has not exceeded the amount of the reasonable return by more than thirty per centum of the amount of the reasonable return.

II. (1) If the clear profit of a licensee in any year of account is in excess of the amount of reasonable return, one-third of such excess, not exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent of the amount of reasonable return shall be at the disposal of the undertaking. Of the balance of the excess, one half shall be appropriated to a reserve which shall be called the Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve and the remaining half shall either be distributed in the form of a proportionable rebate on the amounts collected from the sale of electricity and meter rentals or carried forward in the accounts of the licensee for distribution to the consumers in future, in such manner as the Provincial Government may direct.

(2) The Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve shall be available for disposal by the licensee only to the extent by which the clear profit is licensee to the arbitration of the Authority under paragraph XVI of that Schedule before the notice referred to in the preceding proviso was given or is so referred within the period of the said notice:

Provided further that no rating committee shall be constituted in respect of a licensee within three years from the date on which such a committee has reported in respect of that licensee, unless the State Government declares that in its opinion circumstances have arisen rendering the orders passed on the recommendations of the previous rating committee unfair to the licensee or any of his consumers;

(b) a rating Committee under Clause (a) shall,—

(i) where such committee is to be constituted under sub-clause (i) of that clause, be constituted not later than three months after the expiry of the notice referred to in the first proviso to that clause;

(ii) where such committee is to be constituted at the request of the licensee, be constituted within three months of the date of such request;

(c) a rating committee shall, after giving the licensee a reasonable opportunity of being heard and after taking into consideration the efficiency of operation and management and the potentialities of his undertaking, report to the State Government within three months from the date of its constitution, making recommendations with reasons therefor, regarding the charges for electricity which the licensee may make to any class or classes of consumers so, however, that the recommendations are not likely to prevent the licensee from earning clear profit, sufficient when taken with the sums available in the Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve to afford him a reasonable return as defined in the Sixth Schedule during his next succeeding three years of account;

Provided that the State Government may, if it so deems necessary extend the said period of three months by a further period not exceeding three months within which the report of the rating committee may be submitted to it;

(d) within one month after the receipt of the report under clause (c), the State Government shall cause less than the reasonable return in any year of account

(3) On the purchase of the undertaking under the terms of its licence any balance remaining in the Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve shall be banded over to the purchaser and maintained as such Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve.

the report to be published in the Official Gazette, and may at the same time make an order in accordance therewith fixing the licensee's charges for the supply of electricity with effect from such date, not earlier than two months or later than three months after the date of publication of the report as may be specified in the order and the licensee shall forthwith give effect to such order,

(e) the charges for the supply of electricity fixed under clause (d) shall be in operation for such period not exceeding three years as the State Government may specify in the order

Provided that nothing in this clause shall be deemed to prevent a licensee from reducing at any time any charges so fixed

THE SIXTH SCHEDULE.

1 Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (except sub-section (2) of Section 22A) and the provisions in the licence of a licensee, the licensee shall so adjust his (charges) for the sale of electricity whether by enhancing or reducing them that his clear profit in any year of account shall not, as far as possible, exceed the amount of reasonable return:

Provided that such (charges) shall not be enhanced more than once in any year of account

Provided further that the licensee shall not be deemed to have failed so to adjust his (charges) if the clear profit in any year of account has not exceeded the amount of reasonable return by (twenty) per centum of the amount of reasonable return

Provided further that the licensee shall not enhance the (charges) for the supply of electricity until after the expiry of a notice in writing of not less than sixty clear days of his intention to so enhance the (charges) given by him to the State Government and to the Board.

Provided further that if the (charges) of supply fixed in pursuance of the recommendations of a rating committee constituted under Sec 57A are lower than those notified by the licensee under and in accordance with the preceding proviso, the licensee shall refund to the consumers the excess amount recovered by him from them:

Provided also that nothing in this Schedule shall be deemed to prevent a licensee from levying, with the previous approval of the State Government minimum charges for supply of electricity for any purpose.

IA. The notice referred to in the third proviso to paragraph I shall be accompanied by such financial and technical data in support of the proposed enhancement of charges as the State Government may, by general or special order, specify.

II. (1) If the clear profit of a licensee in any year of account is in excess of the amount of reasonable return, one-third of such excess, not exceeding (five per cent) of the amount of reasonable return shall be at the disposal of the undertaking. Of the balance of the excess, one-half shall be appropriated to a reserve which shall be called the Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve and the remaining half shall either be distributed in the form of a proportional rebate on the amounts collected from the sale of electricity and meter rentals or carried forward in the accounts of the licensee for distribution to the consumers in future, in such manner as the State Government may direct.

(2) The Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve shall be available for disposal by the licensee only to the extent by which the clear profit is less than the reasonable return in any year of account.

(3) On the purchase of the undertaking under the terms of its licence any balance remaining in the Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve shall be handed over to the purchaser and maintained as such Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve:

Provided that where the undertaking is purchased by the Board or the State Government the amount of the Reserve may be deducted from the price payable to the licensee.

7. From an examination of these provisions it would be seen that under the Supply Act prior to its amendment in 1956, the charges fixed by the Government under Section 57 (2) (c) remained in force unless reduced by the licensee in the meantime till the same were altered by a subsequent order made by the Government after getting a fresh recommendation from the rating committee but under the law as it now stands the rate fixed by the Government under Sec. 57 (A) (1) (d) would be in operation only for such period not exceeding three years as the State Government may specify in the order. Thereafter it can be enhanced by the licensee in accordance with the provisions contained in Schedule VI. It was urged on behalf of the appellants that the present Section 57 (A) (1) (e) can only govern the charges fixed under Section 57 (A) (1) (d) and it has no impact on an order made under the old Section 57 (2) (c). According to the appellants the charges so fixed can only be modified by the Government after getting a report from the rating committee. Mr. Chagla, learned Counsel for the appellants contended that the consumers who get power from the respondent have a vested right in the charges fixed in 1952 and that vested right cannot be considered to have taken away by the provisions of the Amending Act. He argued that the provisions of the Amending Act are not retrospective in character nor is there any inconsistency between those provisions and the present provisions as the two operate on different fields, hence in view of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, we must hold that the charges fixed by the Government in 1952 continue to be in operation. In this connection be relied on certain observations made by this Court in State of Punjab v. Mohar Singh, 1953-1 SCR 893=(AIR 1953 SC 84) and Deep Chand v. State of U P, (1959) Supp (2) SCR 8=(AIR 1959 SC 648). On the other hand it was contended by the learned Counsel for the respondent that the rights and liabilities of the respondents at present are exclusively regulated by the provisions of the Supply Act as it stands now, the terms of licence as they originally stood or as they stood on the coming into force of the Supply Act in 1948 are of no consequence now; they cannot be looked into for finding out the rights or duties of the licensee as at present, for that purpose we must look into these terms as modified by the provisions of the Supply Act as it is now. It was also urged on its behalf that there is no question of vested rights in these cases; herein we are only concerned with the procedure to be adopted in modifying the charges fixed in 1952.

8 In Mohar Singh's case, 1953-1 SCR 893=(AIR 1953 SC 84) this Court laid down that the provisions of Section 6 (c), (d) and (e) of the General Clauses Act, 1897 relating to the consequences of the repeal of a law are applicable not only when an Act or Regulation is repealed simpliciter but also to a case of repeal and simultaneous enactment re-enacting all the provisions of the repealed law. In the course of its judgment this Court observed that when the repeal is followed by a fresh legislation on the same subject, the Court has undoubtedly to look into the provisions of the new Act but that only for the purpose of determining whether they indicate a different intention. The line of inquiry would be, not whether the new Act keeps alive the old rights and liabilities but whether it manifests any intention to destroy them. In Deep Chand's case, (1959) Supp (2) SCR 8 = (AIR 1959 SC 648) this Court was considering the effect of repugnancy between a State Act and a Central Act. The observations made in that context we think, have no bearing on the point in issue in this case. It is true that when an existing Statute or Regulation is repealed and the same is replaced by fresh Statute or Regulation unless the new Statute or Regulation specifically or by necessary implication affects rights created under the old law those rights must be held to continue in force even after the new Statute or Regulation comes into force. But in the cases before us there is no question of affecting any vested right. There is no dispute that the charges fixed can be altered. The controversy relates to the procedure to be adopted in altering them. That controversy does not touch any vested right. The procedure in question must necessarily be regulated by the law in force at the time of the alteration of the charges.

9. Section 57 of the Supply Act as it stands now lays down that the provisions of Schedule VI shall be deemed to be incorporated in the licence of every licensee not being a local authority, in the case of a licence granted before the commencement of the Act from the date of the commencement of the licensee's next succeeding year of account. Admittedly the licence with which we are concerned in these cases was granted even before the Supply Act was enacted. Therefore quite clearly the licence in question is governed by the present Section 57. Hence we have to read into that licence the provisions contained in Schedule VI. If any of the earlier provisions in the licence either as they stood when the licence was originally granted or as they stood modified as per the provisions of the Supply Act prior to its amendment in 1956 are inconsistent with the provisions of Schedule VI or Section 57 (A) as they are now they must be held to be void and of no effect. In other words we must read into the licence the provisions of Schedule VI and strike out therefrom such terms as are inconsistent with those provisions and thereafter give effect to the same. For determining the rights and duties of the licensee as at present we have only to look into the terms of the licence as modified by Schedule VI. We cannot go behind them. That much is clear from the language of the Supply Act. The intention of the legislature is clear and unambiguous. Therefore there is no need to call into aid any rule of statutory construction or any legal presumption. Further no reason was advanced before us, nor can we conceive of any why those who obtained licences prior to the amendment of Supply Act in 1956 should be in a more disadvantageous position than those who got their licenses thereafter. Correspondingly we fail to see why those who are served by licensees who obtained their licences prior to the amendment of the Supply Act in 1956 should be placed in a better position than those served by licensees who obtained their licenses thereafter. After all, every law has some reason behind it. Section 57 (A) (2) (c) was intended to meet the changing economic circumstances. The purpose behind the new provisions appears to be to permit the licensees to so adjust their charges as to get reasonable profits. But at the same time a machinery has been provided to see whether any excess charges have been levied and if levied, get the same refunded to the consumers.

10. The law declared by the Amending Act does not affect any right or privilege, accrued under the repealed provision. It merely prescribes as to what could or should be done in future. Therefore there is no basis for saying that it affects vested rights. For finding out the power of the licensee to alter the charges one has to look to the terms of the licence in the light of the law as it stands, the past history of that law being wholly irrelevant. If the terms of the licence, including the deemed terms permit him to unilaterally alter the charges then he has that right. If we merely look at those terms, as we think we ought to, then there is no dispute that the respondent was within its rights in enhancing the charges as admittedly it had followed the procedure prescribed by law. We also do not agree with Mr. Chagla in his contention that there is no inconsistency between the present scheme relating to the enhancement of charges vis-a-vis the scheme provided under the Supply Act prior to its amendment in 1956. The two schemes are substantially different. Under the former scheme once the Government fixes the charges the licensee cannot alter it but at present at the end of the period fixed in the Government order the licensee has a unilateral right to enhance the charges in accordance with the conditions prescribed in VIth Schedule. Therefore in view of Section 57 the provisions contained in that schedule have an overriding effect.

11. In Amalgamated Electricity Co. Ltd. v. N. S. Bhathena, 1964-7 SCR 503= (AIR 1964 SC 1598) this Court was called upon to consider the scope of Section 57 (A) and the Schedule VI as it stands now. Therein the controversy was whether the appellant therein was entitled to levy charges more than the maximum charges prescribed in its licence issued in 1932. It may be noted that in that case the notice of enhancement of the charges was given on September 25, 1958. This Court held that the maximum stipulated in the licence no longer governed the right of the licensee to enhance the charges; his rights were exclusively governed by the provisions contained in paragraph I of Schedule VI of the Supply Act. It is true that in that case this Court was considering the right of the licensee under the Supply Act vis-a-vis his right under the licence granted under the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 but that difference is not material. What this Court in fact considered was the right of the licensee under the existing law to enhance the charges. Dealing with the scope of paragraph I of Schedule VI, Ayyangar, J., who spoke for the majority observed thus:

"Para I of Schedule VI both as it originally stood and as amended, as seen already, empowered the licensee "to adjust his rates, so that his clear profit in any year shall not, as far as possible, exceed the amount of reasonable return". We shall reserve for later consideration the meaning of the expression "so adjust his rates". But one thing is clear and that is that the adjustment is unilateral and that the licensee has a statutory right to adjust his rates provided he conforms to the requirements of that paragraph viz., the rate charged does not yield a profit exceeding the amount of reasonable return. The conclusion is therefore irresistible that the maxima prescribed by the State Government which bound the licensee under the Electricity Act of 1910 no longer limited the amount which a licensee could charge after the Supply Act, 1948 came into force since the "clear profit" and "reasonable return" which determined the rate to be charged was to be computed on the basis of very different criteria and factors than what obtained under the Electricity Act."

J C SHAH AND A N GROVER, JJ.

State of U P and others, Appellants v. Shah Mohammad and another, Respondents

Civil Appeal No 347 of 1966, D/- 13-3-1969

(A) Citizenship Act (1955), Section 9 — Retrospective operation — Pending suit involving questions falling within Sub-section (2) — Civil Court's jurisdiction is ousted by section read with Rule 30, Citizenship Rules, 1956 — AIR 1963 All 260, Overruled, S A No. 3809 of 1958, D/- 11-12-1963 (All), Reversed — (Citizenship Rules (1956), Rule 30) — (Constitution of India, Articles 11, 21 and Sch. 7, List 1, Entry 17).

The plaintiff who had gone to Pakistan after 26-1-1950 and before the commencement of the Act returned to India on a visa issued by the Indian High Commission in Pakistan. He instituted a suit before the commencement of the Act for a declaration that in the circumstances of the case his nationality never changed even though he had gone to Pakistan and that he continued to remain a citizen of India and for a permanent injunction restraining the authorities from deporting him. In the High Court in appeal against the decision of the lower appellate Court in favour of the plaintiff the Government contended that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to decide the question arising in the suit in view of Section 9 of the Citizenship Act, which had been passed during the pendency of the proceedings, read with Rule 30 of the Citizenship Rules, 1956. The High Court rejecting the objection framed an issue on the question whether the plaintiff had or not acquired the citizenship of Pakistan during his stay there and remitted the case to the Lower Appellate Court for a finding on that issue.

Held that the High Court should not have called for a decision on that issue

by the lower appellate court but should have ordered the determination of the question by the Central Government. S. A No 3809 of 1958, D/- 11-12-1963 (All), Reversed. (Para 9)

Questions falling within Section 9 (2) have to be determined to the extent indicated therein by the Central Government and not by the Courts. AIR 1962 SC 70 and AIR 1962 SC 1778 and AIR 1962 SC 1052, Rel on (Para 8)

It is clear from the language of Section 9 (1) that it cannot be given a prospective operation only and that it would cover all cases where an Indian citizen has acquired foreign nationality between January 26, 1950 and its commencement or where he acquires such nationality after its commencement. AIR 1963 All 260, Overruled (Para 4)

The Act has been enacted under the powers of the Parliament preserved by Article 11, Constitution of India in express terms. The Parliament had also legislative competence under Entry 17, List 1 of Seventh Schedule. It could thus make a provision about the forum where the question as to whether a person had acquired citizenship of another country could be determined and that is what has been done by Rule 30. Cases that would ordinarily arise about loss of Indian citizenship by acquisition of foreign citizenship would be of three kinds: (1) Indian citizens who voluntarily acquired citizenship of a foreign State prior to the commencement of the Constitution, (2) Indian citizen who voluntarily acquired the citizenship of another State or country between January 26, 1950 and December 30, 1955 i. e. the date of commencement of the Act, and (3) Indian citizens who voluntarily acquired foreign citizenship after the date of commencement of the Act i. e. December 30, 1955. As regards the first category they were dealt with by Article 9 of the Constitution. The second and the third categories would be covered by the provisions of Section 9 of the Act. If a question arises as to whether, when or how an Indian citizen has acquired the citizenship of another country that has to be determined by the Central Government by virtue of the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 9 read with Rule 30 of the Citizenship Rules (Para 5)

Even on the assumption that loss of Indian citizenship with consequent deportation may involve loss of personal liberty within the meaning of Article 21, it is not possible to hold that by applying Section 9 of the Act and Rule 30 of the Rules to a case in which a suit had been instituted prior to the commencement of the Act there would be any contravention or violation of that Article. The Parliament was competent under Article 11, which is a constitutional provision read with the relevant Entry in List I, to legislate about cases of persons belonging to categories 2 and 3 referred to and it could certainly enact a legislation in exercise of its sovereign power which laid down procedure different from the one which obtained before. The new procedure would itself become the "procedure established by law" within the meaning of Article 21. (Para 7)

(B) Constitution of India, Arts. 9, 5, 6 and 8 — Article 9 deals with cases where citizenship of foreign State had been acquired by Indian citizen prior to Constitution and means that he cannot claim citizenship of India by virtue of Articles 5 and 6 or 8. AIR 1962 SC 1052, Rel. on. (Para 5)

Mr. C. B. Agarwala, Senior Advocate (M/s. O. P. Rana and Ravindra Bana, Advocates with him), for Appellants; Mr. Danial Latifi, Senior Advocate (Mr. M. I. Khowaja, Advocate with him), for Respondent No. 1.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Allahabad High Court in which the principal question for determination is whether Section 9 of the Indian Citizenship Act, 1955, hereinafter called the "Act", which came into force on December 30, 1955, would be applicable to a suit which was pending on that date.

2. Respondent No. 1 was born on July 8, 1934. He went to Pakistan in October 1950. In March 1953 he obtained a visa from the Indian High Commission in Pakistan for coming to India. He came to India on July 22, 1953. On July 20, 1954 the period of authorised stay expired and respondent No. 1 applied for permanent settlement in India. He, however, filed a writ petition in the High Court on July 15, 1954 but the same was dismissed on February 10, 1955 and respondent No. 1 was directed to file a suit. He instituted a suit on May 6, 1955. He claimed that he was born in India of parents who were residing here and that he was a minor when he was persuaded by two Muslim youths to accompany them on a trip to Pakistan. He went there without any intention to settle there permanently. Later on he made efforts to return but due to certain restrictions he was unsuccessful. He had no alternative but to obtain a passport from the Pakistan authorities in order to come to India. He had thus never changed his nationality and continued to remain a citizen of India. He sought a permanent injunction restraining the Union of India, the State of U. P., District Magistrate, Kanpur and the Superintendent of Police, Kanpur, who were impleaded as defendants from deporting him.

3. The suit was contested and on the pleadings of the parties the appropriate issues were framed. The learned Munsif held that respondent No. 1 had gone to Pakistan for settling there permanently and had ceased to be an Indian citizen. The suit was dismissed. Respondent No. 1 appealed to the First Additional Civil Judge, Kanpur. The learned Judge was of the view that respondent No. 1 had gone to Pakistan when he was a minor and when his father, who was his guardian, was in India. By his departure to Pakistan, respondent No. 1 could not change his nationality. Even on a consideration of the evidence it could not be held that he had shifted to Pakistan with the intention of settling there permanently. His appeal was allowed and a permanent injunction as prayed was issued. The Union of India and other appellants preferred an appeal to the High Court. Before the High Court a preliminary objection was taken that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the question whether respondent No. 1 had acquired the citizenship of Pakistan which matter had to be referred to the Central Government under Rule 30 of the Citizenship Rules framed under the Act. This objection was repelled in view of another decision of the High Court according to which Section 9 of the Act and Rule 30 could not operate retrospectively and affect pending litigation Before the High Court the finding that respondent No 1 did not go to Pakistan with the intention of settling there permanently was not challenged by the appellants. The High Court was inclined to agree with the lower appellate Court that so long as respondent No. 1 was a minor he could not change his Indian domicile because his parents were domiciled in this country. The High Court proceeded to say that since respondent No. 1 had spent one year in Pakistan after he had obtained majority it was necessary to investigate whether he had acquired, during that period, the citizenship of Pakistan. An appropriate issue was framed and remitted to the lower Appellate Court for its determination. The appellate court held that respondent No. 1 had not acquired the citizenship of Pakistan since it was not legally possible for him to do so for the reason that according to laws of Pakistan he could become a major only on attaining the age of twenty-one. On December 11, 1963, the High Court disposed of the appeal of the present appellants by dismissing it in view of the findings which were in favour of respondent No. 1.

4. Learned Counsel for the appellants has contended before us that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to decide the question of citizenship after the enforcement of the Act towards the end of the year 1953 in view of the provisions of Rule 30 of the Citizenship Rules, 1956 promulgated in exercise of the power conferred by Section 18 (2) (h) of the Act. Section 9 is in the following terms.

"Section 9 (1). Any citizen of India who by naturalisation, registration or otherwise voluntarily acquires, or has at any time between the 26th January, 1950 and the commencement of this Act, voluntarily acquired the citizenship of another country, shall upon such acquisition or, as the case may be, such commencement, cease to be a citizen of India.

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply to a citizen of India who during any war in which India may be engaged, voluntarily acquires the citizenship of another country, until the Central Government otherwise directs.

(2) If any question arises as to whether, when or how any person has acquired the citizenship of another country, it shall be determined by such authority in such manner and having regard to such rules of evidence, as may be prescribed in this behalf."

Rule 30 provides—

"Authority to determine acquisition of citizenship of another country.—(1) If any question arises as to whether, when or how any person has acquired the citizenship of another country, the authority to determine such question shall, for the purpose of Section 9 (2), be the Central Government.

(2) The Central Government shall in determining any such question have due regard to the rules of evidence specified in Schedule III."

The validity of the provisions of the Act and the Rules is no longer open to challenge. It has not been disputed by learned counsel for respondent No 1 that after the enforcement of the Act and promulgation of Rule 30 the only authority which is competent to determine whether citizenship of Pakistan has been acquired by him is the Central Government. But it has been strenuously urged that the suit in the present case had been instituted prior to the date of enforcement of the Act and therefore respondent No 1 was entitled to get this question determined by the Courts and not by the Central Government. In other words Section 9 of the Act cannot be given retrospective operation so as to be made applicable to pending proceedings. Thus the first point which has to be decided is whether Section 9 either expressly or by necessary implication has been made applicable to or would govern pending proceedings. The language of sub-s (1) is clear and unequivocal and leaves no room for doubt that it would cover all cases where an Indian citizen has acquired foreign nationality between January 26, 1950 and its commencement or where he acquires such nationality after its commencement. The words "or has at any time between the 26th January, 1950 and the commencement of this Act, voluntarily acquired the citizenship of another country" would become almost redundant if only prospective operation is given to S 9 (1) of the Act. This according to the settled rules of interpretation cannot be done.

5 It must be remembered that Art. 9 of the Constitution provides that no person shall be a citizen of India by virtue of Article 5 or be deemed to be a citizen of India by virtue of Article 6 or Article 8 if he has voluntarily acquired the citizenship of any foreign State. This means that if prior to the commencement of the Constitution a person had voluntarily acquired the citizenship of any foreign State he was not entitled to claim the citizenship of India by virtue of Articles 5 and 6 or 8. This article thus deals with cases where the citizenship of a foreign State had been acquired by an Indian citizen prior to the commencement of the Constitution (vide Izhar Ahmad Khan v. Union of India, (1962) Supp (3) SCR 235 at pp. 244, 245 = (AIR 1962 SC 1052 at p. 1057)). Article 11, however, makes it clear that Parliament has the power to make any provision with respect to the acquisition and termination of citizenship and all other matters relating to citizenship. The Parliament could thus regulate the right of citizenship by law. As pointed out in the above decision of this Court it would be open to the Parliament to affect the rights of citizens and the provisions made by the Parliamentary statute cannot be impeached on the ground that they are inconsistent with the provisions contained in other Articles in Part II of the Constitution. The Act has been enacted under the powers of the Parliament preserved by Article 11 in express terms. The Parliament had also legislative competence under Entry 17, List I of Seventh Schedule. It could thus make a provision about the forum where the question as to whether a person had acquired citizenship of another country could be determined and this is what has been done by Rule 30. The cases that would ordinarily arise about loss of Indian citizenship by acquisition of foreign citizenship would be of three kinds: (1) Indian citizens who voluntarily acquired citizenship of a foreign State prior to the commencement of the Constitution; (2) Indian citizens who voluntarily acquired the citizenship of another State or country between January 26, 1950 and December 30, 1955 i.e., the date of commencement of the Act; and (3) Indian citizens who voluntarily acquired foreign citizenship after the date of commencement of the Act i.e., December 30, 1955. As regards the first category they were dealt with by Article 9 of the Constitution. The second and the third categories would be covered by the provisions of Section 9 of the Act. If a question arises as to whether, when or how an Indian citizen has acquired the citizenship of another country that has to be determined by the Central Government by virtue of the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 9 read with Rule 30 of the Citizenship Rules.

6. Counsel for respondent No. 1 has relied on a decision of a learned Single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Abida Khatoon v. State of U. P., AIR 1963 All 260 which was followed in the present case. There it was observed that a litigant, after filing a suit, acquired a vested right to have all questions determined by the Court in which the suit was filed and that the institution of the suit carried with it all the rights of appeal then in force. Referring to the normal principle that an Act is ordinarily not retrospective, that vested rights are not disturbed and that the jurisdiction of the civil courts in pending cases is not taken away by the creation of a new tribunal for the determination of a particular question, the learned Judge held that there was nothing in the language or the scheme of the Act to suggest that Parliament wanted to depart from these principles. We are unable to agree. In our judgment from the amplitude of the language employed in Section 9 which takes in persons in category (2) mentioned above, the intention has been made clear that all cases which come up for determination where an Indian citizen has voluntarily acquired the citizenship of a foreign country after the commencement of the Constitution have to be dealt with and decided in accordance with its provisions. In this view of the matter the entire argument which prevailed with the Allahabad Court can have no substance.

7. It has next been contended that retrospective operation should not be given to Section 9 of the Act because loss of citizenship is a serious and grave matter and it involves loss of personal liberty. Under Article 21 no person can be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law. The procedure established by law before the commencement of the Act was the ordinary procedure of determination by Civil Courts whenever a question arose about loss of Indian citizenship by acquisition of citizenship of a foreign country or State. It is suggested by learned Counsel for respondent No. 1 that by giving retrospective operation to Section 9 so as to make it applicable to pending proceedings the provisions of Article 21 will be contravened or violated. This would render Section 9 of the Act unconstitutional. It is somewhat difficult to appreciate the argument, much less to accede to it. If the Parliament was competent under Article 11, which is a constitutional provision read with the relevant Entry in List I to legislate about cases of persons belonging to categories 2 and 3 referred to at a previous stage it could certainly enact a legislation in exercise of its sovereign power which laid down procedure different from the one which obtained before. The new procedure would itself become the "procedure established by law" within the meaning of Article 21 of the Constitution. Therefore even on the assumption that loss of Indian citizenship with consequent deportation may involve loss of personal liberty within the meaning of Art. 21, it is not possible to hold that by applying Section 9 of the Act and Rule 30 of the Rules to a case in which a suit had been instituted prior to the commencement of the Act there would be any contravention or violation of that Article.

8 In conclusion it may be mentioned that this Court, in several cases, has consistently held that questions falling within Section 9 (2) have to be determined to the extent indicated therein by the Central Government and not by the Courts. Such matters as are not covered by that provision have, however, to be determined by the Courts, (see Akbar Khan Alam Khan v Union of India, 1962 (1) SCR 779 = (AIR 1962 SC 70) and (1962) Supp (3) SCR 235 = (AIR 1962 SC 1032) and Government of Andhra Pradesh v Sved Mohd Khan, (1962) Supp (3) SCR 288 = (AIR 1962 SC 1778)).

9. In the present case the High Court ought not to have called for a decision of the lower appellate Court on the issue of the plaintiff having acquired or not acquired the citizenship of Pakistan between July 3, 1952 and the date of his return to India. The appeal is, consequently, allowed and the order of the High Court is hereby set aside. It will be for the High Court now to make appropriate orders for determination of the aforesaid question by the Central Government after which alone the High Court will be in a position to dispose of the appeal finally. Costs will abide the result.

(B) Stamp Act (1899), Section 1 — Scope — Provisions are not meant to arm a litigant with technicalities to defeat the claim of the opponent.

The Stamp Act is a fiscal measure enacted to secure revenue for the State on certain classes of instruments. It is not enacted to arm a litigant with a weapon of technicality to meet the case of his opponents. The stringent provisions of the Act are conceived in the interest of the revenue. Once that object is secured according to law, the party staking his claim on the instrument will not be defeated on the ground of the initial defect in the instrument. (Para 5)

Mr. C K Daphtary, Senior Advocate, (Mr. I. N Shroff, Advocate with him), for Appellant, M/s Rameshwar Nath and Mahinder Narain, Advocates of M/s. Rajinder Narain and Co. for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: The respondents entered into a contract with Hindustan Steel Ltd for "raising, stacking, carting and loading into wagons limestone at Nandini Mines". Dispute which arose between the parties was referred to arbitration, pursuant to Cl 61 of the agreement. The arbitrators differed, and the dispute was referred to an umpire who made and published his award on April 19, 1967. The umpire filed the award in the Court of the District Judge, Rajnandgaon in the State of Madhya Pradesh and gave notice of the filing of the award to the parties to the dispute. On July 14, 1967, the appellant filed an application for setting aside the award under Sections 30 and 33 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940. One of the contentions raised by the appellants was that the award was unstamped and on that account "invalid and illegal and liable to be set aside". The respondents then applied to the District Court that the award be impounded and validated by levy of stamp duty and penalty. By order dated September 29, 1967, the District Judge directed that the award be impounded. He then called upon the respondents to pay the appropriate stamp duty on the award and penalty and directed that an authenticated copy of the instrument be sent to the Collector, Durg, together with a certificate in writing stating the receipt of the amount of duty and penalty. Against that order the appellant moved the High Court of Madhya Pradesh in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. The High Court rejected the petition and the appellant appeals to this Court with special leave.

2. It is urged by Counsel for the appellant that an instrument which is not stamped as required by the Indian Stamp Act, may, on payment of stamp duty and penalty, be admitted in evidence, but cannot be acted upon, for, "the instrument has no existence in the eye of law". Therefore, counsel urged, in proceeding to entertain the application for filing the award, the District Judge, Rajnandagaon, acted without jurisdiction.

3. The relevant provisions of the Stamp Act may be summarised. Section 3 of the Act provides:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act . . . the following instruments shall be chargeable with duty of the amount indicated in that Schedule as the proper duty therefor, respectively, that is to say—

(a) every instrument mentioned in that Schedule which, not having been previously executed by any person, is executed in India on or after the first day of July, 1899;

"Instrument" is defined in Section 2 (14) as including "every document by which any right or liability is, or purports to be, created, transferred, limited, extended, extinguished or recorded". An instrument is said to be "duly stamped" within the meaning of the Stamp Act when the instrument bears an adhesive or impressed stamp of not less than the proper amount and that such stamp has been affixed or used in accordance with the law for the time being in force in India: Section 2(11). Item 12 of Sch. I prescribes the stamp duty payable in respect of an award. Section 33 (1) provides, insofar as it is relevant:

"(1) Every person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence . . . before whom any instrument, chargeable . . . with duty, is produced or comes in the performance of his functions, shall, if it appears to him that such instrument is not duly stamped, impound the same."

Section 35 of the Stamp Act provides, insofar as it is relevant:

"No instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence, or shall be acted upon, registered or authenticated by any such person or by any public officer, unless such instrument is duly stamped:

Provided that"

Section 36 provides:

"Where an instrument has been admitted in evidence, such admission shall not, except as provided in section 61, be called in question at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that the instrument has not been duly stamped."

Section 38 deals with the impounding of the instruments: it provides:

"(1) When the person impounding an instrument under Section 33 has . . . authority to receive evidence and admits such instrument in evidence upon payment of a penalty as provided by Sec. 35 or . . . he shall send to the Collector an authenticated copy of such instrument, together with a certificate in writing, stating the amount of duty and penalty levied in respect thereof,"

By Section 39 the Collector is authorised to adjudge proper penalty and to refund any portion of the penalty which has been paid in respect of the instrument, sent to him. Section 40 prescribes the procedure to be followed by the Collector in respect of an instrument impounded by him or sent to him under Section 38. If the Collector is of the opinion that the instrument is chargeable with duty and is not duly stamped, he shall require the payment of proper duty or the amount required to make up the same together with a penalty of five rupees; or, if he thinks fit, an amount not exceeding ten times the amount of the proper duty or of the deficient portion thereof, Sec. 42 provides

"(1) When the duty and penalty (if any), leviable in respect of any instrument have been paid under Section 35, Section 40 or * * *, the person admitting such instrument in evidence or the Collector, as the case may be, shall certify by endorsement "thereon that the proper duty or, as the case may be, the proper duty and penalty (stating the amount of each) have been levied in respect thereof. * * *

(2) Every instrument so endorsed shall thereupon be admissible in evidence and may be registered and acted upon and authenticated as if it had been duly stamped, and shall be delivered on his application in this behalf to the person from whose possession it came into the hands of the officer impounding it, or as such person may direct:

The award, which is an "instrument" within the meaning of the Stamp Act was required to be stamped. Being unstamped, the award could not be received in evidence by the Court, nor could it be acted upon. But the Court was competent to impound it and to send it to the Collector with a certificate in writing stating the amount of duty and penalty levied thereon. On the instrument so received the Collector may adjudge whether it is duly stamped and he may require penalty to be paid thereon, if in his view it has not been duly stamped. If the duty and penalty are paid, the Collector will certify by endorsement on the instrument that the proper duty and penalty have been paid.

4. An instrument which is not duly stamped cannot be received in evidence by any person who has authority to receive evidence, and it cannot be acted upon by that person or by any public officer. Section 35 provides that the admissibility of an instrument once admitted in evidence shall not, except as provided in Section 61, be called in question at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that the instrument has not been duly stamped. Relying upon the difference in the phraseology between Sections 35 and 36 it was urged that an instrument which is not duly stamped may be admitted in evidence on payment of duty and penalty, but it cannot be acted upon because Section 35 operates as a bar to the admission in evidence of the instrument not duly stamped as well as to its being acted upon, and the Legislature has by Section 36 in the conditions set out therein removed the bar only against admission in evidence of the instrument. The argument ignores the true import of Section 36. By that section an instrument once admitted in evidence shall not be called in question at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that it has not been duly stamped. Section 36 does not prohibit a challenge against an instrument that it shall not be acted upon because it is not only duly stamped, but on that account there is no bar against an instrument not duly stamped being acted upon after payment of the stamp duty and penalty according to the procedure prescribed by the Act. The doubt, if any, is removed by the terms of Section 42 (2) which enact, in terms unmistakable, that every instrument endorsed by the Collector under Section 42 (1) shall be admissible in evidence and may be acted upon as if it had been duly stamped.

5. The Stamp Act is a fiscal measure enacted to secure revenue for the State on certain classes of instruments it is not enacted to arm a litigant with a weapon of technicality to meet the case of his opponent. The stringent provisions of the Act are conceived in the interest of the revenue. Once that object is secured according to law, the party staking his claim on the instrument will not be defeated on the ground of the initial defect in the instrument. Viewed in that light the scheme is clear. Section 35 of the Stamp Act operates as a bar to an unstamped instrument being admitted in evidence or being acted upon, section 40 provides the procedure for instruments being impounded, sub-section (1) of Section 42 provides for certifying that an instrument is duly stamped, and sub-section (2) of Section 42 enacts the consequences resulting from such certification.

6. Our attention was invited to the statement of law by M C Desai, J., in Mst Bittan Bibi v Kuntu Lal ILR (1952) 2 All 984 = (AIR 1952 All 996) that.

"A court is prohibited from admitting an instrument in evidence and a Court and a public officer both are prohibited from acting upon it. Thus a Court is prohibited from both admitting it in evidence and acting upon it. It follows that the acting upon is not included in the admission and that a document can be admitted in evidence but not be acted upon. Of course it cannot be acted upon without its being admitted, but it can be admitted and yet be not acted upon. If every document, upon admission, became automatically liable to be acted upon, the provision in Section 35 that an instrument chargeable with duty but not duly stamped, shall not be acted upon by the Court, would be rendered redundant by the provision that it shall not be admitted in evidence for any purpose. To act upon an instrument is to give effect to it or to enforce it."

In our judgment, the learned Judge attributed to Section 36 a meaning which the Legislature did not intend. Attention of the learned Judge was apparently not invited to Section 42 (2) of the Act which expressly renders an instrument, when certified by endorsement that proper duty and penalty have been levied in respect thereof, capable of being acted upon as if it had been duly stamped.

7. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Appeals Nos. 1594 and 1595 of 1968, D/- 20-2-1969.

(A) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 4, 6 — Disposal of part or whole of assets — Nature of realisation — Test — Sale of Colliery after prospecting and developing — Income held taxable as business income.

Where a person disposes of a part or the whole of his assets, the general rule is that the mere change or realisation of an investment does not attract liability to income-tax, but where such a realisation is an act which in itself is a trading transaction, profit earned by sale or conversion is taxable. (1914) AC 1001, Rel. on.

The test is — "Is the sum of gain that has been made a mere enhancement of value by realising a security, or is it a gain made in an operation of business in carrying out a scheme for profit-making. (1905) 5 Tax Cas 159, Rel. on. (Para 6)

In determining whether the gain is realization of mere enhancement of value or is a gain made in an operation of business in carrying out a scheme for profit-making, no uniform rule can be evolved. But general criteria indicating that certain facts have dominant significance in the context of other facts have been adopted in the decided cases. AIR 1965 SC 1898, Rel. on. (Para 7)

The assessee Company, among other businesses, worked certain coal mines. The Company obtained a prospecting licence for certain Collicry in 1944 and after prospecting for coal sold the colliery, and thereby earned a profit of Rs. 51,550 in the account year 1948-49 and Rs. 8,756 in the account year 1949-50. The Income-tax Officer brought the profits arising out of the sale of the colliery to tax as business profits. In appeal, the Company urged that prospecting for coal under a licence was not part of the business operations of the Company and that by selling the rights in the mine, the Company disposed of its assets and made gains of a capital nature.

Held that on the findings recorded by the Tribunal it followed that the prospecting for coal was a part of the coal mining business and the income was properly regarded as taxable. Case law referred to. The decision in I. T. Ref. No. 38 of 1960, D/- 29-8-1963 (Cal), Affirmed. (Para 10)

(B) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 24 (1) — Sale transaction on 1-10-1948 — Price finally settled in December 1949 resulting in loss to assessee — Year in which loss can be taken into account — The decision in I. T. Ref. No. 38 of 1960, D/- 29-8-1963 (Cal), Reversed.

The sale transaction of a Factory was completed on October 1, 1948, but the price was finally settled in December 1949. By the settlement, the Company suffered a loss of Rs. 34,891 in business transaction and the question related to the year in which the loss was liable to be taken into account.

Held that until the price was settled, loss did not accrue or arise to the Company. The loss was thus suffered in the account year 1949-50 and could be allowed against the income of that year under Sec. 24 (1). The assumption that the loss was suffered in the previous year i.e., 1948-49 was not warranted. The case was plainly governed by sub-section (1) of Sec-

SHAH, J. In respect of assessment years 1949-50 and 1950-51 the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal referred five questions to the High Court of Calcutta under Section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. Three of those questions which are canvassed in these appeals need be set out.

Assessment year 1949-50

"(1) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the sum of Rs 51,550 was a profit in the nature of revenue and therefore liable to tax under the Indian Income-tax Act?"

Assessment year 1950-51

"(3) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the sum of Rs 8,756 was a profit in the nature of revenue and was subject to tax under the Indian Income-tax Act?"

(4) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the loss of Rs 34,891 was allowable as a deduction against the business income of the assessee for the assessment year 1950-51?"

2. The appellant — a limited Company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913 — carries on business as Managing agents, dealers in shares and stocks, stores and spare parts of machinery and acts as insurance agents and manufacturers of carbon dioxide. It also works certain coal mines. The Company obtained a prospecting licence from the State of Korea for the Churim Colliery in 1944 and after prospecting for coal sold the colliery and thereby earned a profit of Rs 51,550 in the account year 1948-49 and Rs 8,756 in the account year 1949-50. The Income-tax Officer brought the profits arising out of the sale of the colliery to tax as business profits. The order was confirmed in appeal by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal.

3. The Company conducted a Dry Ice Factory at Lahore. The factory was sold in September 1948 to the Indo-Pakistan Corporation Ltd. The purchaser took over the factory on October 1, 1948, but the price was finally settled in December 1949. By the sale the Company suffered a loss of Rs 34,891. The Company claimed to deduct this loss from its income assessable to tax in the assessment year 1950-51. The Income-tax Officer disallowed the claim. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner agreed with that view, and the Tribunal confirmed the order.

4. In answering questions (1) and (3) the High Court observed

"The Churim Colliery was sold after prospecting and proving coal. The sale in such a case was a part of the trading activities of the assessee and such activity could be gathered from the surrounding circumstances as also from the manner in which it was sold, that is, within a very short time after its acquisition and after it was made fit for obtaining a reasonably higher price at the sale. . . . The profit thus acquired cannot be treated as a capital asset."

In answering question (4) the High Court observed.

"The loss of Rs 34,891 sustained by the assessee after the sale of Dry Ice Factory at Lahore in September 1948 cannot be treated as a loss of the business of sale, inasmuch as the Tribunal found as a fact that the loss not having occurred in the relevant accounting year, was referable to the transaction of business during a period when the business completely ceased before the commencement of the accounting year. . . ."

5. Counsel for the Company urges that prospecting for coal under a licence obtained from the State of Korea was not part of the business operations of the Company and that by selling the rights in the mine, the Company disposed of its assets and made gains of a capital nature. In any event, it was urged, this was a single transaction and in the absence of evidence that the Company carried on the business of obtaining prospecting licences and of selling the mines if "coal was proved", the profit arising out of sale of the mine which was a capital asset acquired by that transaction was not taxable.

6. Where a person disposes of a part or the whole of his assets, the general rule is that the mere change or realisation of an investment does not attract liability to income-tax, but where such a realisation is an act which in itself is a trading transaction, profit earned by sale or conversion is taxable: Commissioner of Taxes v. Melbourne Trust Ltd., 1914 AC 1001 at p. 1010. The cases which illustrate this distinction fall broadly into two categories—those where the sales formed part of trading activity, and, those in which the sale or realisation was not an act of trading. As observed in Californian Copper Syndicate (Limited and Reduced) v. Harris (Surveyor of Taxes), (1905) 5 Tax Cas 159 at p. 166 the test is—"Is the sum of gain that has been made a mere enhancement of value by realising a security or is it a gain made in an operation of business in carrying out a scheme for profit-making."

7. In determining whether the gain is realization of mere enhancement of value or is a gain made in an operation of business in carrying out a scheme for profit-making, no uniform rule can be evolved. It was observed by this Court in Janki Ram Bahadur Ram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1965-57 ITR 21 at p. 25 = (AIR 1965 SC 1898 at p. 1900):

".....no single fact has decisive significance, and the question whether a transaction is an adventure in the nature of trade must depend upon the collective effect of all the relevant materials brought on the record. But general criteria indicating that certain facts have dominant significance in the context of other facts have been adopted in the decided cases. If, for instance, a transaction is related to the business which is normally carried on by the assessee, though not directly part of it, an intention to launch upon an adventure in the nature of trade may readily be inferred. A similar inference would arise where a commodity is purchased and sub-divided, altered, treated or repaired and sold, or is converted into a different commodity and then sold. Magnitude of the transaction of purchase, the nature of the commodity, subsequent dealings and the manner of disposal may be such that the transaction may be stamped with the character of a trading venture: * * * * *"

8. A transaction of sale may in a given case be isolated: in another it may be intimately related to the normal business of the tax-payer. In the latter class profit arising from the transaction will probably arise out of the taxpayer's business and will be assessable as business profits. An instructive case of this class is Imperial Tobacco Co. (of Great Britain and Ireland) Ltd. v. Kelly, (1944) 25 Tax Cas 292. In that case the Company carried on the business of tobacco manufacture, for which large quantities of tobacco leaf were purchased in the United States, where the Company maintained a large buying organisation. To finance the purchases and the expenses of his organisation the Company bought dollars in the United Kingdom through its bankers who remitted them to the banking accounts of the Company in the United States, and it was the practice of the Company to accumulate a large holding of dollars each year before the leaf season commenced. The Company never bought dollars for the purpose of resale as a speculation. On the outbreak of war, in September, 1939, the appellant Company, at the request of the Treasury, stopped all further purchases of tobacco leaf in the United States, and, as a result, the Company had on hand a holding of dollars accumulated between January and August 1939. On September 30, 1939, the Company was ordered under the Defence (Finance) Regulations, 1939, to sell its surplus dollars to the Treasury, and, owing to the rise in the rate of exchange, the sale resulted in a profit to the Company. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the profit was liable to be included as profits of its trade under Sch. D, Case I. The tax-payer was not carrying on business in dollars, but the transactions in dollars were intimately related to their principal business and the profits earned by sale of dollars were treated as profits taxable as business profits.

9. In T. Beynon and Co. Ltd. v. Ogg (Surveyor of Taxes), (1918) 7 Tax Cas 125 the tax-payer carrying on business as Coal Merchants, Ship and Insurance Brokers, and as sole selling agent for various Colliery Companies, in which latter capacity it was part of its duty to purchase wagons on behalf of its clients, bought a large number of wagons on his own account with the intention of reselling them at profit. The contention of the tax-payer that the transaction being an isolated one, the profit was in the nature of a capital profit on the realisation of an investment was negatived. The profits realised in this transaction were held to result from the operation of the Company's business and properly includible in the computation of the Company's profits for assessment under Sch. D. In Gloucester Railway Carriage and Wagon Co. Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1928) 12 Tax Cas 720 the tax-payer carried on the business of manufacturing wagons for sale or hire. The tax-payer sold some of the wagons which were formerly hired out. The tax-payer contended that the profit realized by sale was an isolated transaction resulting in a capital profit. The House of Lords held that the "business was all one", namely, to make profit out of wagons and on that account the profits realized by sale of wagons were taxable.

10. The Tribunal in the present case recorded the following findings.

"It is no doubt true that this was a single transaction. But we were told by the assessee's counsel that the assessee obtained prospecting licence in the colliery, developed the colliery and then sold out. What was the purpose of obtaining the prospecting licence has not been told to us. The assessee was carrying on business of coal mining. The prospecting of coal is a part of the coal mining business. Therefore, in our opinion, the transaction of prospecting, developing and selling the colliery is a transaction in nature of a business. Therefore, the profit arising from the sale is a profit in the nature of revenue and has been rightly brought to tax." Our task would have been lightened if the Tribunal had stated the findings in greater detail. Nevertheless the Tribunal has found that the Company was carrying on the business of coal mining and prospecting of coal was a part of the coal mining business and on that account the transaction of prospecting, developing and selling the colliery was a transaction in the nature of a business. On the findings recorded by the Tribunal it follows that the prospecting for coal being a part of the coal mining business, the income was properly regarded as taxable. The answer recorded by the High Court on questions (1) and (3) must be upheld.

11. Turning to the fourth question: the sale transaction of the Dry Ice Factory was completed on October 1, 1948, but the price was finally settled in December 1949. In the settlement, the Company suffered a loss of Rs 34,891. The loss was suffered in the business transaction and the only dispute raised before the Tribunal related to the year in which the loss was liable to be taken into account. The Tribunal disallowed the loss in the assessment of income for the year 1950-51. The Tribunal held that the business of the Dry Ice Factory was not carried on in the year of account—April 1, 1949 to March 31, 1950 and on that account the loss was not admissible as a permissible deduction in computing the taxable income of the Company for the assessment year 1950-51. The High Court agreed with the Tribunal. In our judgment, the High Court was in error in holding that the loss was not a permissible deduction.

12. Section 24 of the Income-tax Act, 1922, in the relevant year of assessment read as follows:

"(1) Where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year under any of the heads mentioned in Section 6, he shall be entitled to have the amount of the loss set off against his income, profits or gains under any other head in that year."

Provided that * * *

(2) Where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year, being a previous year not earlier than the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, under the head profits of business, profession or vocation, and the loss cannot be wholly set off under sub-section (1) the portion not so set off shall be carried forward to the following year and set off against the profits or gains, if any, of the assessee from the same business, profession or vocation for that year.

Provided that * * *

13. By sub-section (1) the loss or profits or gains suffered under any head in any year was liable to be set off against the income, profits or gains under any other head, and by sub-sec. (2) where the loss suffered in any business, profession or vocation could not be wholly set off under Sub-section (1) the loss not so set off had to be carried forward to the following year and set off against the profits and gains of the same business in the subsequent years. The Tribunal and the High Court applied Sub-section (2) of Section 24 in computing the taxable income of the Company for the assessment year 1950-51. But in so proceeding, in our judgment, they were in error. The business of Dry Ice Factory was sold in October, 1948. We will assume that the Dry Ice Factory was a separate business of the Company and was not a part of the other business carried on by the Company. But the price for which the business was sold was settled in December, 1949. Until the price was settled loss did not accrue or arise to the Company. The loss was suffered in the account year 1949-50 and could be allowed against the income of that year under Section 24 (1), the assumption that the loss was suffered in the previous year i. e. 1948-49 was, in our judgment, not warranted. The case was plainly governed by Sub-section (1) of Section 24. The answer to the fourth question recorded by the High Court must be discharged.

14. The answers to questions (1) & (3) recorded by the High Court are affirmed. Question (4) will be answered in the affirmative and in favour of the Company. In view of the divided success, there will be no order as to costs in this Court. The order as to costs in the High Court is maintained.

J. C. SHAH, V. RAMASWAMI AND
A. N. GROVER, JJ.

State of Rajasthan and another, Appellants v. M/s. Man Industrial Corporation Ltd., Jaipur, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 812 of 1966, D/- 4-2-1969.

Sales Tax — Rajasthan Sales Tax Act (XXIX of 1954), Section 2 (o) — Sale — Works contract — Contract for fixing special type of steel windows as per specifications — Predominant idea being the fixing of the windows — ‘Fixing,’ held would require special technical skill and contract is a works contract and not contract of sale.

It cannot be laid down as universal test that whenever there is a contract to ‘fix’ certain articles made by a manufacturer, the contract must be deemed one for sale and not of service. The test in each case is whether the object of the party sought to be taxed is that the chattel as chattel passes to the other party and the services rendered in connection with the installation are under a separate contract or are incidental to the execution of the contract of sale.

Thus where the assessee carrying on the business of fabricating steel doors, windows and other goods entered into a contract to prepare the window leaves according to specifications and to ‘fix’ them to the building, the work to be completed within the specified time,

Held, on a consideration of the terms of the contract, that the contract entered into by the assessee was a contract of service and not one for sale. The primary undertaking was not merely to supply the windows but to fix them. This service was not rendered in separate contract nor was it shown to be rendered under customarily or normally as incidental to the sale by the person who supplied the window leaves. The ‘fixing’ of windows in the manner stipulated required special technical skill since it was only upon fixing of the window leaves and after the window leaves had become a part of the building construction that the property passed under the terms of contract. The contract was therefore a contract for work in which the use of material was accessory or incidental to the execution of the work. 1944-1 KB 484, Distinguished; AIR 1958 SC 560 and AIR 1965 SC 1396 and AIR 1965 SC 1655 and 1965-16 STC 518 (SC) and 1965-16 STC 385 (Bom) and 1966-17 STC 576 (SC) and 1968-21 STC 245 (SC), Ref.

ates of M/s J B Dadachani and Co,
for Respondents

The following judgment of the Court
was delivered by

SHAH, J: The respondent carries on the business of fabricating "steel doors, windows, sashes and other goods" On April 20, 1957, the respondent submitted in pursuance of an invitation by the Executive Engineer, Ajmer Central Division, its tender for providing and fixing "S H.
Windows 'W' Type", "S H Windows 'W1' type", "T H Windows" & "Composite Windows" of certain sizes "in accordance with the specifications, designs, drawing and instructions" The tender was accepted and the respondent carried out the contract

2 The Sales Tax Officer 'B' Circle, Jaipur City, included in the taxable turnover of the respondent Rs 23493 received under the contract. He held that the contract with the Executive Engineer was one of sale of goods and the respondent had with a view to promote sales of goods manufactured by it "voluntarily offered to fit" the goods and had made no separate charge for that service. The Deputy Commissioner Excise and Taxation in appeal held that from the acceptance of the tender, two contracts resulted one for providing doors and windows and another for "fixing" those doors and windows in a specified building, and that the price of the goods supplied, but not the charge for service, was taxable. He accordingly remanded the case with a direction to assess tax on the price for sale of materials only. The Board of Revenue exercising revisional power confirmed the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner observing that the contract undertaken by the respondent was not a contract of service.

3 The following question was referred by the Board of Revenue to the High Court of Rajasthan

"Whether on the proper interpretation of the contract between the applicant and the Executive Engineer, C.P.W.D., Ajmer, regarding the providing and fixing of the steel windows to the Accountant General's Office, Jaipur, and looking to the terms of the transaction of the type undertaken by the applicant the Board were justified in holding that the contract was divisible between two parts representing the sale of the windows and the labour charges in fixing the same and thus partly liable to sales-tax?"

The High Court held that the contract between the respondent and the Executive Engineer was a "building contract" and the amount received by the respondent was not taxable.

4 The relevant terms of the tender which was accepted by the Executive Engineer were

"Item Rate-tender for Works

I/we hereby tender for the execution for the President of India of the work specified in the under-written memorandum within the time specified in such memorandum at the rates specified therein, and in accordance in all respects with the specifications, designs, drawing, and instructions in writing referred to in Rule I hereof and in Class II of the conditions of contract and with such materials as are provided for, by and in all other respects in accordance with such conditions so far as applicable."

This recital was followed by a memorandum setting out the "general description" of the building in respect of which the window-leaves were to be supplied, the estimated cost of the contract and the description and the number of items of work offered to be done. The items of work offered to be done were "providing and fixing" four different types of windows. The relevant conditions were

"1 The work shall be executed as per the specifications attached

2 The work is to be completed in 6 months from the date of award of works

4 The windows are to be fitted with rawl plugs in cut stone works.

5 Work will be executed either by plain glass or ground glass as may be decided by the Engineer in Charge

"Note—

2 We are offering windows which will be glazed with plain glass only. If at a later date it is desired to have windows glazed with ground glass, the difference in cost of glass will have to be paid by you.

3. * * * * *

4. * * * * *

5. The quotation is based on the current prices of mild steel billets fixed by the Government. Should there be any change in the controlled price of billets supplied to us, proportionate revision in the cost of rolled sections used in the fabrication will be made in the quotation.

6. Sales Tax or any other tax is applicable will be extra.

7. Work will be completed in 6 months from the date of order."

These were followed by specifications relating to the steel to be used in the fabrication, glazing, fittings and finish of the windows.

5. The respondent offered to execute and complete the "work" mentioned in the written memorandum according to the specifications and conditions. In the view of the High Court the contract was for work, in the execution of which some movable property passed: it was not a contract for sale of windows and for rendering service in connection with the fixing of those windows.

6. Counsel for the State of Rajasthan contends that the respondent carried on the business of fabricating and selling window and door leaves and sashes etc. and entered into a contract for "sale of windows", and to promote sale of its manufactured goods undertook to fix the windows without demanding any charge for that service, and the High Court was in error in holding that the contract was one of service in the execution of which property in the materials supplied by the respondent passed. Counsel urged that the terms of the tender were not decisive and the Court was entitled to ascertain the true effect of the contract as disclosed by the nature of the work, and the "invoice" for payment made out by the respondent. Counsel submitted that it is usual for manufacturers or dealers in specialized articles to arrange to "fix and service" the articles sold by them and on that account the contract does not acquire the character of a contract of service. He gave instances of sale of motor-tyres, luggage carriers, air-conditioning units, refrigerators and contended that in undertaking to instal or fix these units or articles the sellers do not enter into a works contract merely because they undertake to instal or for the articles sold so as to make them fit for immediate service. But whether a particular contract is one for sale of goods or is a contract for service depends upon the main object of the parties gathered from the terms of the contract, the circumstances of the transaction, and custom of the trade and no universal rule applicable to all transactions may be evolved.

7. As observed in Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., Vol. 34 Art. 3 at p. 6:

"A contract of sale of goods must be distinguished from a contract for work and labour. A contract of sale is a contract whose main object is the transfer of the property in, and the delivery of the possession of, a chattel as a chattel to the buyer. Where the main object of work undertaken by the payee of the price is not the transfer of a chattel qua chattel, the contract is one for work and labour. The test is whether or not the work and labour bestowed and in anything that can properly become the subject of sale; neither the ownership of the materials, nor the value of the skill and labour as compared with the value of the materials is conclusive, although such matters may be taken into consideration in determining, in the circumstances of a particular case, whether the contract is in substance one for work and labour or one for the sale of a chattel."

What did the respondent agree to do when it offered its tender? Did the respondent agree to sell the window-leaves as described in the tender or did it, as part of a works contract, agree to "fix" windows of certain specifications in the building intended to be used for the offices of the Accountant-General? On a consideration of all the circumstances, we are of the view that the object of the respondent was to enter into a works contract. That clearly appears from the terms of the tender and its acceptance. The windows were to be fabricated according to the specifications with glass—plain or ground—as decided by the Engineer in Charge, and were to be "fixed" within six months from the date of its acceptance "to the building with rawl plugs in cut stone-work." The rate quoted by the respondent was based on the current price of mild steel billets, and the price was to be revised in the light of cost revision of the controlled price of steel supplied to the respondent.

8. The contract undertaken by the respondent was to prepare the window-leaves according to the specifications and to fix them to the building. There were not two contracts—one of sale and another of service. "Fixing" the windows to the building was also not incidental or subsidiary to the sale, but was an essential term of the contract. The window-leaves did not pass to the Union of India under the terms of the contract as window-leaves. Only on the fixing of the windows as stipulated, the contract could be fully executed and the property in the windows passed on the completion of the work and not before.

9. It was said by this Court in State of Madras v. Cannon Dunkerley and Co. (Madras) Ltd., 1958-9 STC 353 = (AIR 1958 SC 560) that in a building contract which is one, entire and indivisible, there is no sale of goods. In the case of a building contract the property in materials used does not pass to the other party to the contract as movable property. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the materials in the construction of a building become the property of the other party to the contract only on the theory of accretion.

10. In Government of Andhra Pradesh v. Cudat Tobacco Ltd., 1965-16 STC 240 = (AIR 1965 SC 1396) this Court pointed out (at p. 255 (of STC)) = (at p. 1404 of AIR)

"A contract for work in the execution of which goods are used may take one of three forms. The contract may be for work to be done for remuneration and for supply of materials used in the execution of the work for a price; it may be a contract for work in which the use of materials is accessory or incidental to the execution of the work, or it may be a contract for work and use or supply of materials though not accessory to the execution of the contract is voluntary or gratuitous. In the last class there is no sale because though property passes it does not pass for a price. Whether a contract is of the first or the second class must depend upon the circumstances, if it is of the first, it is a composite contract for work and sale of goods, where it is of the second category, it is a contract for execution of work not involving sale of goods."

The contract in question in this case is of the second variety.

11. Counsel relied upon Patnaik and Co. v. State of Orissa, 1965-16 STC 364 = (AIR 1965 SC 1635) and Mckenzie Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, 1965-16 STC 516 (SC). But in both these cases the Court held on a consideration of the terms of the contract and the circumstances that the assessee had agreed to and did supply "motor-bus bodies" and the contract being one for sale of chattels, they were liable to pay sales-tax.

12. Our attention was also invited to Commissioner of Sales Tax, Maharashtra State, Bombay v. Arun Electric, 1965-16 STC 885 (Bom). In that case a firm of electrical contractors undertook the job of installing electrical fittings in the houses of their customers, which involved the supply and fixing of goods such as wire, brass clips, wall brackets and tube lights with accessories. The assessee charged their customers consolidated rates for the materials consumed and labour involved in carrying out the contracts. The Sales Tax Officer charged to tax under the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959, the value of materials supplied in carrying out the contracts. It was held by the High Court of Bombay that the transaction of the assessee with their customers was not a pure works contract, but a combination of two distinct and separate contracts, one for the supply or the sale of goods for consideration, and the other for the supply of work and labour, and only that part of the contract, which consisted of supply of goods for consideration, was liable to tax under the Sales Tax Act. That case was brought in appeal to this Court at the instance of the assessee. This Court in Arun Electric, Bombay v. Commissioner of Sales Tax, Maharashtra State, 1966-17 STC 578 (SC) discharged the answer recorded by the High Court, holding that the conclusions recorded by the Deputy Commissioner and the Tribunal were based on no evidence, and the High Court could not record, on the facts found, an answer to the question referred. The Deputy Commissioner had proceeded only upon the terms of the invoice in which a charge was made for supplying and "fixing" the materials and providing light points complete with 1/8 CTS wire, brass clips, tapes and all approved accessories. The conclusion of the departmental authorities was not based on any intention of the parties as disclosed by the evidence, but plainly on the terms of the invoice which was ambiguous.

13. In State of Madras v. Richardson and Curudas Ltd., 1968-21 STC 245 (SC) the assessee without a formal contract agreed to supply, fabricate and erect steel structures for a sugar factory. The assessee completed the contract. A bill was submitted by the assessee for charges for fabrication, supply and erection of steel structures at certain rates. The High Court of Madras on a consideration of the evidence held that there was a stipulation for a consolidated lump-sum payment of Rs. 1,160 per ton for fabricating, supplying and erecting at site all steel work etc.; there was no stipulation for passing of property in the goods to the factory before actual completion of the erection work; there the contract did not contemplate dissecting the value of the goods supplied and the value of work and labour bestowed in the execution of the work; and the predominant idea underlying the contract was the bestowing of special skill and labour by the experienced engineers and mechanics of the assesseees. This Court agreed with the High Court and held that the contract was a works contract and not a contract for sale.

14. Our attention was invited to a judgment of the Court of Appeal in Love v. Norman Wright (Builders) Ltd., 1944-1 KB 484. In that case the respondents contracted with the Secretary of State for War to do the work and supply the materials mentioned in the Schedules to the contract, including the supply of blackout curtains, curtain rails and battens and their erection at a number of police stations. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the respondents were liable to pay purchase-tax. Reliance was placed upon the observations made by Goddard, L. J. at p. 484:

"If one orders another to make and fix curtains at his house the contract is one of sale though work and labour are involved in the making and fixing, nor does it matter that ultimately the property was to pass to the War Office under the head contract. As between the plaintiff and the defendants the former passed the property in the goods to the defendants who passed it on to the War Office." We do not think that these observations furnish a universal test that whenever there is a contract to "fix" certain articles made by a manufacturer the contract must be deemed one for sale and not of service. The test in each case is whether the object of the party sought to be taxed is that the chattel as chattel passes to the other party and the services rendered in connection with installation are under a separate contract or are incidental to the execution of the contract of sale.

15. In the present case, the specifications of the windows were set out in the contract. The primary undertaking of the respondent was not merely to supply the windows but to "fix" the windows.

This service is not rendered under a separate contract, nor is the service shown to be rendered customarily or normally as incidental to the sale by the person who supplies window-leaves. The "fixing" of windows in the manners stipulated required special technical skill. If the windows were not properly "fixed", the contract would not be complete, and the respondent could not claim the amount agreed to be paid to it. We agree with the High Court that it was only upon the "fixing" of the window-leaves and when the window-leaves had become a part of the building construction that the property in the goods passed under the terms of the contract.

16. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

(From Orissa: ILR (1967) Cut 735)

S. M. SIKRI, R. S. BACHAWAT, AND
K. S. HEGDE, JJ.

State of Orissa and another, Appellants
v. Binode Kishore Mohapatra, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2162 of 1968, D/- 11-4-1969.

(A) Civil Services — Indian Police Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules (1954), R. 3 (3) (b) Second proviso — Indian Police Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulation (1955), Regn. 5 — Pre-existing Draft Rules for preparation of select list, R. 2 — Lists of Police Service Officers 'fit for trial to promotion posts' purporting to be made under Draft R. 2, held could not be deemed to be 'select lists' within meaning of either Draft R. 2 or Promotion Regulation 5. ILR (1967) Cut 735, Reversed.

The lists of the Police Service officers 'fit for trial to promotion posts', purported to have been prepared under Draft Rule 2 by the Selection Committee in the year 1951, 1952, 1954 cannot be deemed to be 'Select Lists' within the second proviso to R. 3 (3) (b) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules because, as a matter of fact, the Selection Committee did not select names for the purpose of substantive appointment but only selected names for the purpose of officiation in the senior posts of the Indian Police Service. In view of the Regulation 5 of the Promotion Regulations and the pre-existing Draft Rule 2 (prepared by Federal Public Service Commission and acted upon by the States) the Committee should think of substantive appointments in the service and not officiating appointments. These 'fit for trial' lists cannot be deemed to be select lists made within the meaning of the draft rules which were being acted upon before the Promotion Regulations came into force or within the Promotion Regulations. (It was assumed without deciding that if proper select list had been made under Draft Rules, it would be a select list within meaning of the Second Proviso to R 3 (3) (b) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules — Para 23) ILR (1967) Cut 735, Reversed (Paras 19, 22)

(B) Civil Services — Indian Police Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules (1954), R 3 (3) (b), Second proviso and Explanation 1 — Scope — Object of second proviso and Explanation 1 — Officer appointed by promotion — Fixation of seniority and year of allotment ILR (1967) Cut 735, Reversed.

The object of the second proviso is to cut down the period of officiation which would be taken into consideration under R 3 (3) (b). It cannot be said that the only object of the second proviso is to limit the operation of the first proviso.

Explanation 1 really explains the expression "officiating continuously" occurring in rule 3 (3) (b). But it does not mean that where Explanation 1 applies the second proviso does not apply. The object of Explanation 1 is to deal with the problem arising in the case of officers holding appointments as a purely temporary or local arrangement.

The petitioner was appointed as Deputy Superintendent of Police in State of Orissa in 1947 and was confirmed as D S P on January 1, 1950. In May 1952 he was promoted as Additional Superintendent of Police in the I P. S. cadre. His name was included in the lists of officers fit for trial to promotion post to Indian Police Service, prepared by the selection Committee in the year 1951, 1952, 1954. On 10-2-1956, the Union Public Service Commission approved the 'fit for continuous officiation' list containing the name of the petitioner. On 15-2-1957 the Selection Committee placed the petitioner, including some others in the 'Select List' for substantive appointment to I P. S. and the petitioner was appointed to I P. S. on 10-7-1957.

The Government of India approved the period of officiation of these officers from 10-2-1956 for counting seniority. That date being later than the date i.e. 7th September, 1955 on which one officer (1951) R. R. started officiating in senior posts but earlier than the date on which regular recruits of 1952 started officiating these officers including the petitioner were allotted to 1951. The petitioner challenged the order and prayed to fix his seniority and year of allotment as 1948 instead of the year 1951.

Held that, the petitioner's case was covered by second proviso to R 3 (3) (b) of Seniority Rules and it was for the Central Government to approve, or not to approve, the period of officiation prior to the date of inclusion of the petitioner in the Select List. The first period (i.e., period before the date of inclusion of an Officer in the Select List) could only be counted if such period was approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission AIR 1967 SC 1301, Foll., ILR (1967) Cut 735, Reversed.

It could not be said that February 10, 1956 was an arbitrary date. It had definite relation to the question of approved period of officiation because it was on this date that the Public Service Commission approved the inclusion of the petitioner in the list for officiating appointment for the first time after the Promotion Regulations had come into force. The 'fit for trial lists' of 1951, 1952, 1954 could not be deemed to be select lists within the second proviso to R. 3 (3) (b) and there was nothing to show that the Government of India had approved his period of officiation prior to 10-2-1956. At any rate the approval had to be recorded after the appointment to I P. S. and not before. ILR (1967) Cut 735, Reversed.

(Paras 28, 30)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Indian Police Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules (1954), R 3 (3) (b) provisos — Petitioner governed by second proviso — His case cannot have any relationship to the case of officer appointed after the coming into force of Seniority Rules and governed by first proviso — There can be no question of discrimination in consideration of seniority. ILR (1967) Cut 735, Reversed.

(1967) Civil Appeal No. 405 of 1967,
D/- 14-8-1967 (SC), Padam Singh
Jhina v. Union of India 32

Mr. Niren De, Attorney-General for India, (M/s. Santosh Chatterjee and R. N. Sachthey, Advocates, with him), for Appellants; M/s. B. M. Patnaik, Vinoo Bhagat and P. C. Bhartari, Advocates and M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., for Respondent.

SIKRI, J.: This is an appeal by certificate granted by the High Court of Orissa under Article 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution from the judgment and order of the High Court in Writ Petition O. J. C. No. 156 of 1965 filed by B. K. Mohapatra, I. P. S., hereinafter referred to as the petitioner, against the State of Orissa and the Union of India. In this petition the petitioner had prayed for a writ of mandamus directing the respondents to fix the petitioner's seniority and year of allotment as 1948 instead of the year 1951 fixed by the Government of India. The High Court quashed the order of the Union Government, dated July 22, 1958, and directed the Central Government to fix the year of allotment and seniority of the petitioner in accordance with its judgment and the law.

2. In order to appreciate the points raised before us it is necessary to set out the facts somewhat in detail. The petitioner was appointed as Deputy Superintendent of Police in the State of Orissa on January 1, 1947. On January 1, 1950, he was confirmed as D. S. P. In the meantime an agreement had been arrived at between the Central Government and some State Governments, including Orissa, regarding the constitution of an Indian Police Service. This agreement is printed as annexure to the Indian Police Cadre Rules, 1950. This agreement provided for various matters such as the strength, including both the number and character of posts of the Indian Police Service, the method of recruitment to the Service, framing of rules regarding conditions of service, the penalties which could be imposed, etc. We are concerned, in particular, with para 2 (e) and para 7 which are as under:

"2 (e) The rules regulating the promotion of Provincial Police Service Officers to the Indian Police Service shall be framed by the Provincial Government concerned in consultation with the Federal Public Service Commission shall provide that no Provincial Police Service Officer shall be appointed to hold a superior post included in the Schedule for a period of more than one year unless the Federal Public Service Commission have certified that the officer is in every way fit to hold a superior post in the Indian Police Service.

7. In order to ensure that the conditions of service applicable to officers of the Indian Police Service are as uniform as possible, rules regulating pay and other conditions of services will be framed by the Central Government to such extent as may be considered necessary. Provincial Governments will, however, be consulted before the rules are framed, and before they are amended in any manner. In respect of matters not covered by the said rules, an officer of the Indian Police Service will be governed by such rules as may be framed by the Government under which he is for the time being serving and, if no such rules are framed, by the rules applicable to the Central Service/Provincial Police Service Class I, as the case may be."

3. The All India Services Act, 1951, came into force on October 29, 1951. Section 3 enabled the Central Government to make rules for the regulation of recruitment and conditions of service of persons appointed to an All India Service which was defined to include, among others, the Indian Police Service. Section 4 provided:

"All rules in force immediately before the commencement of this Act and applicable to an All India Service shall continue to be in force and shall be deemed to be rules made under this Act."

4. On April 30, 1951, the State Government wrote to the Secretary, Union Punjab Service Commission, that they proposed to hold a meeting of the committee (to be constituted in accordance with R. 2 of the Draft Rules) sometime in June 1951 with a view to prepare a select list of officers suitable for promotion to the Indian Police Service. The Commission was asked to depute one of its members to preside over the said meeting in accordance with Rule 3 of the Draft Rules. On September 6, 1951, the Union Public Service Commission approved the recommendation of the above committee which met to prepare the select list for promotion to Indian Police Service, and agreed to the select list as drawn up by the Committee. The petitioner's name appears at No 5 of Part II of the list which is in the following form

"I List of Officers fit for confirmation in promotion post

II List of officers fit for trial to promotion posts

1 H P Singh Deo.

6 Shri Banamali Das".

5. On May 14, 1952, the petitioner was promoted as Additional Superintendent of Police in the I P. S cadre. On August 21, 1952, his name again appeared in the list which we may call "fit for trial list". His name also appeared in a similar list on July 12, 1954.

6. One of the questions which has to be decided in this case is whether these lists can come within the expression "select list" used in the second proviso in R 3 (3) of the Indian Police Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954, hereinafter referred to as the Seniority Rules, which came into force on September 8, 1954.

7. On November 10, 1955, the first meeting of the Selection Committee set up in accordance with Regulation 3 of the Indian Police Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulation, 1955, hereinafter referred to as the Promotion Regulations, was held at Cuttack. In this meeting the Committee selected and recommended officers for officiating appointment in the I P S and the petitioner's name appeared as No 2 in the List.

8. On February 10, 1956, the Union Public Service Commission approved the recommendations of the above selection committee. On December 1, (sic) 1956, the Government of India wrote to the Union Public Service Commission requesting for its advice as to whether the list prepared by the Selection Committee could be treated as "Select List" as recommended by the State Government. On January 10, 1957, the Commission replied as follows.

"I am directed to refer to Shri S. P. Mukherjee's letter No. 5/1/56-AIS(I) dated the 10th (sic) December, 1956 and to say that the Selection Committee which met at Cuttack on the 10th November, 1955, did not recommend any officer for appointment to the Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service. The Committee only recommended officers who were considered suitable to hold Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service cadre posts in an officiating capacity. Lists of such officers are made to avoid frequent references to the Commission in making interim arrangements in cadre posts till cadre officers become available and these lists cannot be considered as Select Lists.

I am to suggest that the State Government may be advised to place the cases of all these officers before the Selection Committee when it meets again in Orissa sometime in the month of February, 1957, for preparation of the Select List."

9. On February 15, 1957, the Selection Committee met and placed the petitioner, including some others, in the "Select List" for substantive appointment to the Indian Police Service. The Committee also recommended some persons for holding cadre posts in an officiating capacity.

10. Reiterating the view that it had already expressed on January 23, 1957, on March 27, 1957, the Commission wrote to the Government of India stating

"(i) that the "fit for trial" list is intended merely in order to avoid specific references to the Commission for casual appointments to senior Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service Posts.

(ii) that the Commission have advised in para 2 of their letter No F. 950/55-R.III dated the 25th September, 1956, that the "fit for trial" list being not a list envisaged under the Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations, any officiation of an officer included in the "fit for trial" list cannot be taken as approved officiation for purposes of seniority and"

11. On May 7, 1957, the Government of India wrote to the State Governments and observed.

"The question whether the officiation in senior posts of the State Civil Service/State Police Officer after inclusion of their names in the "fit for trial list" should or should not be taken into account for the purpose of seniority, on their subsequent appointment to the Indian Administrative Service, Indian Police Service, has been engaging the attention of the Government of India for some time past. As the State Governments are aware, the Indian Administrative/Police Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations do not provide for the preparation of any such "fit for trial list". Such a list has been devised merely to enable the State Government to try out a few officers irrespective of their seniority with a view to test their suitability for senior posts and is intended only to avoid specific reference to the Union Public Service Commission for casual short term appointments of the State Civil Service/State Police Service officers to senior Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service posts. The Union Public Service Commission, who were consulted in this respect have advised that any officiation of State Civil Service/State Police Service officers included in the fit for trial list should not be taken into account to determine their seniority in the Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service."

12. The Central Government further stated:

"The Government of India have accordingly decided that wherever such lists have been prepared in some States, the officiation in the senior posts of the State Civil Service/State Police Service officers included in the 'fit for trial' list cannot be counted for the purpose of determining the seniority of such officers, under the Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rule, 1954."

13. On July 10, 1957, the petitioner was appointed to the Indian Police Service. On July 22, 1958, the Government of India wrote to the Government of Orissa regarding the seniority of the petitioner. It stated:

"The approved continuous officiation of these officers counting for seniority commenced from the 10th February, 1956 — the date on which the Union Public Service Commission approved the 'fit for continuous officiation list' containing their names. This date being later than the date i.e., 7th September, 1955 on which Shri S. S. Padhi (1951 R. R.) started officiating in the senior posts but earlier than the date on which regular recruits of 1952 started officiating, it has been decided that these officers may be finally allotted to 1951 and placed enbloc below Shri S. S. Padhi (1951 R. R.) and above Shri B. N. Misra (1952-R.R.)."

14. It is this order which has been quashed by the High Court.

15. The learned Attorney-General, who appears for the appellant, urges that the case of the petitioner is covered by the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) of the Seniority Rules and is not governed only by Rule 3 (3) (b). He urges that the lists of 1951, 1952 and 1954, mentioned above, were not Select Lists within the meaning of the second proviso, and it is only the Select List which was made on February 15, 1957, which is the Select List within the second proviso, and that there has been no discrimination or breach of Article 14, as held by the High Court.

16. The learned Counsel for the petitioner on the other hand contends that the second proviso does not govern R. 3 (3) (b) but in fact governs the first proviso only. He says that the Select List of 1951 was a Select List within the meaning of the second proviso and the seniority of the petitioner should be counted from that date. In the alternative he contends that the petitioner's officiation in senior posts prior to July 10, 1957, had in fact been approved and was approved officiation within the second proviso. He further contends that the date, February 10, 1956, mentioned in the order dated July 22, 1958, is an arbitrary date and the Government has, in fact not applied its mind to the question. He further says that there has been discrimination and one Singhdeo has been given benefit which has been denied to the petitioner.

17. The main point that arises in this case is whether the Select Lists of 1951, 1952 and 1954 can be deemed to be treated as Select Lists within the second proviso. It is necessary to set out rule 3 of the Seniority Rules in order to deal with this point.

18. Rule 3 reads thus:

"3. Assignment of Year of Allotment. — (1) Every officer shall be assigned a year of allotment in accordance with the provisions hereinafter contained in this rule.

(2) The year of allotment of an officer in service at the commencement of these rules shall be the same as has been assigned to him or may be assigned to him by the Central Government in accordance with the orders and instructions in force immediately before the commencement of these rules:

Provided that where the year of allotment of an officer appointed in accordance with Rule 9 of the Recruitment Rules has not been determined prior to the commencement of these Rules, his year of allotment shall be determined in accordance with the provision in clause (b) of sub-rule (3) of this rule and for this purpose such officer shall be deemed to have officiated in a senior post only if and for the period for which he was approved for such officiation by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission

(3) The year of allotment of an officer appointed to the Service after the commencement of these rules, shall be—

(a) where the officer is appointed to the Service on the results of a competitive examination, the year following the year in which such examination was held,

(b) where the officer is appointed to the Service by promotion in accordance with Rule 9 of the Recruitment Rules, the year of allotment of the junior-most among the officers recruited to the Service in accordance with Rule 7 of those Rules who officiated continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the date of commencement of such officiation by the former,

Provided that the year of allotment of an officer appointed to the Service in accordance with Rule 9 of the Recruitment Rules who started officiating continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the date on which any of the officers recruited to the Service, in accordance with rule 7 of those Rules, so started officiating shall be determined ad hoc by the Central Government in consultation with the State Government concerned,

Provided further that an officer appointed to the Service after the commencement of these Rules in accordance with Rule 9 of the Recruitment Rules shall be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post prior to the date of the inclusion of his name in the Select List prepared in accordance with the requirements of the Indian Police Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations framed under Rule 9 of the Recruitment Rules, if the period of such officiation prior to that date is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission.

Explanation 1—An officer shall be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post from a certain date if during the period from that date to the date of his confirmation in the senior grade he continues to hold without any break or reversion a senior post otherwise than as a purely temporary or local arrangement.

Explanation 2—An officer shall be treated as having officiated in a senior post during any period in respect of which the State Government concerned certifies that he would have so officiated but for his absence on leave or appointment to any special post or any other exceptional circumstance."

19. It seems to us that the 1951, 1952 and 1954 lists cannot be deemed to be Select Lists within the second proviso because, as a matter of fact, the Selection Committee did not select names for the purpose of substantive appointment but only selected names for the purpose of officiation in the senior posts of the Indian Police Service Regulation 5 (1) of the Promotion Regulations inter alia provided

"5 Preparation of a list of suitable officers — (1) The committee shall prepare a list of such members of the State Police Service as satisfy the condition specified in regulation 4 and as are held by the committee to be suitable for promotion to the Service"

Now this clearly means that the Committee should think of substantive appointments in the service and not officiating appointments.

20. Similarly, the draft Rule 2, which was being acted upon before the Promotion Regulations came into force, provided

"A committee shall be constituted by the State Government composed . . . (for the Indian Police Service) of the Chief Secretary the Inspector-General of Police and Deputy Inspectors of General of Police. This Committee shall prepare a select list of State. . . Police Service Officers who are considered suitable for promotion. The list will be renewed and revised annually."

21. Draft Rule 3 provided that "the State Government should invite the Union Public Service Commission to depute one of their members to preside at the meetings of the Committee." Draft Rule 4 provided that "in preparing this list, the Committee shall be guided by the suitability of the officers for appointment to the . . . Indian Police Service. No officer shall be included in the list who has not definitely proved his fitness for such appointment"

22. It seems to us that the Public Service Commission and the Government of India were quite right in deciding that the 'fit for trial' lists could not be deemed to be select lists made within the draft rules or the Promotion Regulations

23. In view of this conclusion it is not necessary to decide the question, which was raised by the learned Attorney General, that in any event the second proviso is only dealing with select lists made after the Promotion Regulations came into force and not with select lists made under the so-called draft rules. We are assuming, without deciding, that if a proper select list had been made under the draft rules it would be a select list within the meaning of the second proviso.

24. This takes us to the next point whether the petitioner is governed by the main portion of rule 3 (3) (b) and not by the second proviso. In our opinion, the object of the second proviso is to cut down the period of officiation which would be taken into consideration under Rule 3 (3) (b). It is common ground that the case of the petitioner is not covered by the first proviso. We are unable to agree with the learned Counsel for the petitioner that the only object of the second proviso is to limit the operation of the first proviso.

25. Explanation 1 really explains the expression "officiated continuously" occurring in Rule 3 (3) (b). But it does not mean that where Explanation 1 applies the second proviso does not apply. The object of Explanation 1 is to deal with the problem arising in the case of officers holding appointments as a purely temporary or local arrangement.

26. If the second proviso applies, as we hold it does, it was for the Central Government to approve, or not to approve, the period of officiation prior to the date of inclusion of the petitioner in the Select List. As observed by this Court in D. R. Nim v. Union of India, (1967) 2 SCR 325 at p. 329=(AIR 1967 SC 1301 at p. 1303), "the first period (i.e., period before the date of inclusion of an officer in the Select List) can only be counted if such period is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission." They have approved the period from February 10, 1956, to July 10, 1957. No material has been brought to our notice to show that the Central Government did not apply its mind to the problem.

27. The learned Counsel for the petitioner contends that in the letter dated July 22, 1958, a list called the "fit for continuous officiation list" is mentioned which is said to have been approved by the Public Service Commission. The learned Counsel rightly points out that no such list exists. Apparently this is an expression coined by the draftsman to express the views of the Public Service Commission which clearly stated in the letter dated February 10, 1956, that they approved the recommendation of the Selection Committee which met at Cuttack for the selection of police officers for promotion to the Indian Police Service in an officiating capacity.

28. There is no doubt from the correspondence we have set out above that the Government of India were quite aware of the requirements of a Select List.

29. We are unable to agree with the learned Counsel that February 10, 1956, is an arbitrary date. It has definite relation to the question of approved period of officiation because it is on this date that the Public Service Commission approved the inclusion of the petitioner in the list for officiating appointment for the first time after the Promotion Regulations had come into force.

30. The next point which we may now consider is whether the officiation period prior to February 10, 1956, was as a matter of fact, approved by the Government of India. The learned counsel has taken us through the correspondence. He has been able to point out some letters written by the State Government on the point but no letter from the Government of India has been shown which could possibly be read as approving his period of officiation prior to February 10, 1956. At any rate the approval of Government of India has to be accorded after the appointment to I. P. S. and not before.

31. The only point that remains now is the question of discrimination. Singh Deo was an officer who was appointed on June 1, 1955, after the Seniority Rules had come into force and he seems to be governed by the first proviso. We have not been able to appreciate how this case has any relationship to the case of the petitioner.

32. The learned Attorney General had raised the point that all the officers who were likely to be affected by the decision of the writ petition had not been impleaded as parties to the petition, and he referred to us the decision of this Court in Padam Singh Jhina v. Union of India, Civil Appeal No. 405 of 1967, D/- 14-8-1967 (SC) where Shah, J., speaking for the Court observed:

"But we are unable to investigate the question whether there has been infringement of the rules governing fixation of seniority, for a majority of those who were placed above the appellant in the seniority list are not impleaded in the petition before the Judicial Commissioner and are not before this Court. It is impossible to pass an order, assuming that the appellant is able to convince us that a breach of the rules was committed, altering the list of seniority, unless those who are likely to be affected thereby are before the Court and have an opportunity of replying to the case set up by the appellant."

This is a salutary rule and should be observed. But the learned Counsel for the petitioner says that he was concerned with his year of allotment and in that question nobody else was interested directly. Each officer has to have a year of allotment and no other officer is directly interested in it. But as we are allowing the appeal it is not necessary to finally decide whether the petition should have been dismissed only on this ground.

33 In the result the appeal is allowed, the judgment and order of the High Court set aside and the petition dismissed, but there will be no order as to costs here and in the High Court

LGC/D.V.C. Appeal allowed.

Civil Appeals Nos. 386 and 387 of 1966, D/- 11-3-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 80 — Object of notice under — Compliance with section — Matters to be taken into consideration — Notice given by Karta of joint family — Partition subsequent to notice — Notice held sufficient to sustain suit by divided coparceners — F. A. No. 217 of 1959, D/- 16-4-1963 (M. P.), Reversed.

Section 80 is no doubt imperative, failure to serve notice complying with the requirements of the statute will entail dismissal of the suit. But the notice must be reasonably construed. Any unimportant error or defect cannot be permitted to be treated as an excuse for defeating a just claim. In considering whether the provisions of the statute are complied with, the Court must take into account the following matters in each case (1) whether the name, description and residence of the plaintiff are given so as to enable the authorities to identify the person serving the notice, (2) whether the cause of action and the relief which the plaintiff claims are set out with sufficient particularity, (3) whether a notice in writing has been delivered to or left at the office of the appropriate authority mentioned in the section, and (4) whether the suit is instituted after the expiration of two months next after notice has been served, and the plaint contains a statement that such a notice has been so delivered or left. In construing the notice the Court cannot ignore the object of the legislature, viz. to give to the Government or the public servant concerned an opportunity to reconsider its or his legal position. If on a reasonable reading of the notice the plaintiff is shown to have given the information which the statute requires him to give, any incidental defects or irregularities should be ignored.

Suit was instituted on 20-7-1954 against State of Madhya Pradesh by one A and his three grandsons C, D and E. A's son B was pro forma defendant. Notice under Section 80 was given on 11-1-1954 by only A. C, D and E were joined as plaintiff because in partition made subsequent to giving of notice but before institution of suit, they were each entitled to one fifth share along with A. There was substantial identity between the person giving notice and the persons filing the suit. Notice was given by A as representative of the joint family and in view of partition suit had to be instituted by all divided members. Requirements as to cause of action, the name, description and residence of plaintiff were complied with and reliefs were duly set out in notice, though A did not describe himself as Karta of the family.

Held that notice given by karta was sufficient to sustain the suit brought by divided coparceners. F. A No 217 of 1959, D/- 16-4-1963 (M. P.), Reversed; AIR 1947 PC 197 and AIR 1949 PC 143, Distinguished.

The passage relating to proposed method of settlement in p. 213 of C. P. Settlement Instructions (Reprint of 1953) only applies to a case where the ownership of the land was unknown i. e. where possession is proved for a long time, but its original title could not be traced, and not to a case where the land is recorded as Government land. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by RAMASWAMI, J.: These appeals are brought by special leave from the judgment of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh dated 16th April, 1963 in First Appeal No. 217 of 1959, whereby the High Court modified partly the judgment of the first Additional District Judge, Jabalpur dismissing Civil Suit No. 10-A of 1954.

2. The suit was instituted against the State of Madhya Pradesh by Beohar Raghubir Singh and his three grandsons. Beohar Raghubir Singh's son Beohar Rajendra Sinha, was a pro forma defendant. A notice under Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code had been given by Raghubir Singh on 11th January, 1954. Plaintiffs 2, 3 and 4, his grand-sons were joined as plaintiffs because in a partition made subsequent to the giving of the notice, they were each entitled to 1/5th share along with the first plaintiff. Beohar Rajendra Sinha was joined as a defendant because he did not choose to join as the plaintiff. The plaintiffs sought a declaration (1) that the three nazul plots in suit had been in possession of the plaintiffs and their predecessors in their own right from time immemorial and their status was that a Raiyat Sarkar; and (2) that the order of the State Government in the Survey and Settlement Department refusing to recognise their possession over the plots was wrong and ultra vires. The dispute relates to Phoota Tal a tank situated within the town of Jabalpur. It was plot No. 282 in the settlement of 1863 A. D. Its area then was 5.24 acres. It was recorded as Malkiat Sarkar and in the last column there was an entry showing possession of Aman Singh Thakur Prasad. The next settlement took place in 1890-91. The survey number of Phoota Tal was changed to plot No. 325. Its area remained the same, it was recorded as "water (pani)" and in the last column, the entry showed the possession of Beohar Narpatsingh Raghubir Singh. The third settlement took place in 1909-10. The plot number of Phoota Tal was then changed to 327. Its area remained the same, it was still recorded as "water" but there was no entry in favour of any one showing possession. The nazul settlement took place in 1922-23. In this settlement the tank was given new numbers 33, 34, 35, 36, 37 and 171. Its area was recorded as 5.24 acres. In this settlement about 2 acres of land was found to be occupied by the Municipal Committee, Jabalpur. The land so found to be occupied was recorded in the possession of the Municipal Committee, Jabalpur and the remaining land was again recorded as "milkiat sarkar". There was no entry regarding possession in the remarks column so far as the remaining land was concerned. The plaintiffs alleged that Thakur Prasad and Aman Singh were their ancestors, that they had been in continuous possession of the disputed land and the omission to record their possession in the last two settlements of 1909-10 and 1922-23 was due to some oversight. In 1948 the first plaintiff made an application for correction to the Deputy Commissioner, Jabalpur, who made an order in his favour Ex P-5. The order of the Deputy Commissioner was however set aside by the State Government on 28th May, 1953 and it was held that the plaintiffs had no title to the disputed land. The plaintiff therefore prayed for a declaration of the title to the disputed plots and for the correction of the entry in the settlement record showing the status of the plaintiff as that of "Raiyat Sarkar". The suit was contested by the State of Madhya Pradesh. It was urged that the plaintiff had no possession over the disputed land and the order of the State Government dated 28th May, 1953 was correct. It was contended that plaintiffs 2, 3 and 4 had no right to institute the suit because no notice under Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code was given on their behalf. The suit was not contested by the second defendant Beohar Rajendra Sinha. By its judgment dated 24th January, 1959 the trial Court held that there was no documentary evidence from 1891 to 1932 to support the possession of the ancestors of the plaintiffs regarding Phoota Tal. The trial Court also held that in all the settlement entries, the land was recorded as belonging to the Government "Milkiat Sarkar". In any event, between 1891 to 1932 there was no evidence regarding the user of the property by the plaintiffs and in the subsequent years a part of the property was found in possession of the Municipal Committee. The trial Court dismissed the suit. Against the judgment of the trial Court the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the High Court. The High Court held in the first place that the notice Ex. P-8 was not in conformity with section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. The High Court held that Beohar Raghubir Singh had lost the right to represent the joint family as karta at the time of institution of the suit because there had been a severance of joint status and the notice served by Beohar Raghubir Singh could not entitle to the benefit of the other plaintiffs. On the merits of the case, the High Court found that the plaintiffs had established their possession for the statutory period of 60 years. The High Court held that the plaintiffs had acquired the right of Raiyat Sarkar, and that the order of the State Government refusing to correct the revenue record was illegal. On these findings the High Court modified the judgment of the trial Court to the extent that there was a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs that they were entitled to 1/5th share of the property in dispute and the claim regarding the 4/5th share was dismissed. The order of the State Government dated 28th May, 1953 refusing to recognise the possession of the plaintiffs was held to be wrong and illegal.

3 The first question to be considered in these appeals is whether the High Court was right in holding that the notice given under Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code by the first plaintiff was effective only with regard to Raghubir Singh and the notice was ineffective with regard to the other plaintiffs and therefore Raghubir Singh alone was entitled to a declaration as regards the 1/5th share of the disputed plot. On behalf of defendant No. 1 it was contended by Mr. Shroff that at the time of giving notice the plaintiff and the second defendant were joint and plaintiff No. 1 Raghubir Singh was karta of the joint family. The notice was given on 11th January, 1954 and the suit was instituted on 20th July, 1954. It was admitted that between these two dates there was a disruption of the joint family of which Raghubir Singh was a karta. It was argued that the right of the first plaintiff to represent the family had come to an end before the institution of the suit, and hence plaintiffs 2, 3 and 4 had to comply individually with the provisions of Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code before appearing as plaintiffs in the suit. In our opinion, there is no justification for this argument. We consider that there is substantial identity between the person giving the notice and the persons filing the suit in the present case. At the time of giving notice the first plaintiff Beohar Raghbir Singh was admittedly the eldest member of the joint family and being a karta he was entitled to represent the joint family in all its affairs. The cause of action had accrued at the time of giving of the notice and it was not necessary to give a second notice merely because there was a severance of the joint family, before 20th July, 1954 when the suit was actually instituted. It is obvious that the notice was given by Beohar Raghbar Singh as a representative of the joint family and in view of the subsequent partition the suit had to be instituted by all the divided members of the joint family. We are of the opinion that the notice given by Beohar Raghbir Singh on 11th January, 1954 was sufficient in law to sustain a suit brought by all the divided coparceners who must be deemed to be as much the authors of the notice as the karta who was the actual signatory of the notice. There is substantial identity between the person giving the notice and the persons bringing the suit in the present case and the argument of defendant No. 1 on this point must be rejected.

4. The object of the notice under Section 80, Civil Procedure Code is to give to the Government or the public servant concerned an opportunity to reconsider its or his legal position and if that course is justified to make amends or settle the claim out of court. The section is no doubt imperative; failure to serve notice complying with the requirements of the statute will entail dismissal of the suit. But the notice must be reasonably construed. Any unimportant error or defect cannot be permitted to be treated as an excuse for defeating a just claim. In considering whether the provisions of the statute are complied with, the Court must take into account the following matters in each case (1) whether the name, description and residence of the plaintiff are given so as to enable the authorities to identify the person serving the notice; (2) whether the cause of action and the relief which the plaintiff claims are set out with sufficient particularity, (3) whether a notice in writing has been delivered to or left at the office of the appropriate authority mentioned in the section; and (4) whether the suit is instituted after the expiration of two months next after notice has been served, and the plaint contains a statement that such a notice has been so delivered or left. In construing the notice the Court cannot ignore the object of the legislature, viz., to give to the Government or the public servant concerned an opportunity to reconsider its or his legal position. If on a reasonable reading of the notice the plaintiff is shown to have given the information which the statute requires him to give, any incidental defects or irregularities should be ignored.

5. In the present case, the notice was served on 11th January, 1954 by Beohar Raghbir Singh. The notice stated the cause of action arising in favour of the joint family. The requirements as to cause of action, the name, description and residence of the plaintiff were complied with and the reliefs which the plaintiff claimed were duly set out in the notice. It is true that Beohar Raghbir Singh did not expressly describe himself as the karta. But reading the contents of the notice Ex. P-8 in a reasonable manner it appears to us that the claim of Beohar Raghbir Singh was made on behalf of the joint family. It is true that the terms of Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code must be strictly complied but that does not mean that the terms of the notice should be scrutinised in an artificial or pedantic manner. In Dhian Singh Sobha Singh v. The Union of India, 1958 SCR 781 = (AIR 1958 SC 274) Bhagwati, J. observed in the course of his judgment:—

“We are constrained to observe that the approach of the High Court to this question was not well founded. The Privy Council no doubt laid down in Bhakchand Dagadusa v. Secretary of State, 54 Ind App 333 = (AIR 1927 PC 176) that the terms of this section should be strictly complied with. That does not however mean that the terms of the notice should be scrutinised in a pedantic manner or in a manner completely divorced from common sense. As was stated by Pollock C. B. in Jones v. Nicholls, (1844) 13 M and W 361, 363 = 153 ER 149, 150. “We must import a little common sense into notices of this kind”. Beaumont C. J. also observed in Chandu Lal Vadilal v. Government of Bombay, ILR (1943) Bom 128 = (AIR 1943 Bom 138). ‘One must construe section 80 with some regard to common sense and to the object with which it appears to have been passed.....’

6. As already pointed out, the suit was instituted in the present case by the divided members of the Hindu joint family on 20th July, 1954. The notice had been given on 11th January, 1954 by Beohar Raghubir Singh who was the karta of the undivided joint family. In our opinion, there was identity between the person giving a notice and the persons filing the suit because it must be deemed in law that each of the plaintiffs had given the notice under Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code through the karta Beohar Raghubir Singh. It is not disputed that the cause of action set out in the notice remained unchanged in the suit. It is also not said that the relief set out in the plaint is different from the relief set out in the notice. We are accordingly of the opinion that the notice given by the karta was sufficient to sustain the suit brought by the divided coparceners and the decision of the High Court on this point must be overruled.

7. The view that we have expressed is borne out by the judgment of this Court in State of Andhra Pradesh v. Gundugola Venkata Suryanarayan Garu, 1964-4 SCR 945 = (AIR 1965 SC 11). In that case the Government of Madras applied the provisions of the Madras Estates Rent Reduction Act, 1947 to the lands in the village Mallindhapuram on the ground that the grant was of the whole village and hence an estate within the meaning of Section 3 (2) (d) of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908. The respondent and another person served a notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the Government of the State of Madras in which they challenged the above mentioned notification and asked the Government not to act upon it. Out of the two persons who gave the notice, the respondent alone filed the suit. The trial Court held that the original grant was not of the entire village and was not so confirmed or recognised by the Government of Madras and as it was not an "Estate" within the meaning of S 3 (2) (d) of the Madras Estates Land Act, the Madras Rent Reduction Act, 1947 did not apply to it. But the suit was dismissed on the ground that although two persons had given notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure, only one person had filed the suit. The High Court agreed with the trial Court that the grant was not of an entire village but it also held that the notice was not defective and the suit was maintainable as it was a representative suit and the permission of the Court under Order 1, Rule 8 had been obtained in this case. The High Court granted the respondent the relief prayed for by him. Against the order of the High Court the appellant appealed to this Court which dismissed the appeal holding that in the circumstances of the case there was no illegality even though the notice was given by two persons and the suit was filed by only one. If the Court grants permission to one person to institute a representative suit and if the person had served the notice under Section 80, the circumstance that another person had joined him in serving the notice but did not join him in the suit, was not a sufficient ground for regarding the suit as defective. At p. 953 (of SCR) = (at p. 15 of AIR) Shah, J., observed as follows -

"The notice in the present suit was served by the plaintiff and Yegnehwara Sastri. They raised a grievance about the notification issued by the Government of Madras on May 16, 1950, it was not an individual grievance of the two persons who served the notice but of all the Inamdars, or agramamdars. The relief for which the suit was intended to be filed was also not restricted to their personal claim. The notice stated the cause of action arising in favour of all the Inamdars, and it is not disputed that the notice set out the relief which would be claimable by all the Inamdars or on their behalf in default of compliance with the requisition. The plaintiff it is true alone filed the suit but he was permitted to sue for and on behalf of all the Inamdars by an order of the Court under Order 1, Rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The requirements as to the cause of action, the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff were therefore complied with and the relief which the plaintiff claimed was duly set out in the notice. The only departure from the notice was that two persons served a notice under Section 80 informing the Government that proceedings would be started, in default of compliance with the requisition, for violation of the rights of the Inamdars, and one person only out of the two instituted the suit. That in our judgment is not a defect which brings the case within the terms of Section 80".

8. On behalf of respondent No. 1 reference was made to the two decisions of the Judicial Committee in Vellayan Chettiar v. Government of the Province of Madras, AIR 1947 PC 197 and Government of the Province of Bombay v. Pestonji Ardesheer Wadia, 78 Ind App 85 = (AIR 1949 PC 143). But the principle of these decisions has no bearing on the question presented for determination in the present case. In Vellayan Chettiar's case, AIR 1947

PC 197 (supra) a notice was given by one plaintiff stating the cause of action, his name, description and place of his residence and the relief which he claimed although the suit was instituted by him and another. It was observed by the Judicial Committee:

"The section according to its plain meaning requires that there should be in the language of the High Court of Madras 'identity of the person who issues the notice with the person who brings the suit': See Venkata Rangiah Appa Rao v. Secretary of State, ILR 54 Mad 416 = (AIR 1931 Mad 175) and on appeal Venkata Rangiah Appa Rao v. Secretary of State, AIR 1935 Mad 389. To hold otherwise would be to admit an implication or exception for which there is no justification."

9. Two persons had sued for a declaration that certain lands belonged to them, and for an order setting aside the decision of the Appellate Survey Officer in regard to those lands. It was found that one alone out of the two persons had served the notice. The relief claimed by the two persons was personal to them and the right thereto arose out of their title to the land claimed by them. It was held by the Judicial Committee that without a proper notice under Section 80 the suit could not be instituted for to hold otherwise would be to admit an implication or exception for which there was no justification. In the other case, in Pestonji Ardeshir Wadia's case 76 Ind App 85 = (AIR 1949 PC 143) (supra) two trustees of a trust served a notice in October, 1933 upon the Government of Bombay under Section 80 intimating that the trustees intended to institute a suit against the Government on the cause of action and for the relief set out therein. One of the trustees died before the plaint was lodged in Court, and two more trustees were appointed in the place of the deceased trustee. Thereafter the two new trustees and the surviving trustee filed the suit out of which the appeal arose which was decided by the Judicial Committee. No notice was served on the Government on behalf of the two new trustees. The Judicial Committee accepted the view of the High Court that where there were three plaintiffs, the names and addresses of all of them must be given in the notice. Their Lordships observed that:

"the provisions of Section 80 of the Code are imperative and should be strictly complied with before it can be said that a notice valid in law has been served on the Government. In the present case it is not contended that any notice on behalf of plaintiffs 2 and 3 was served on the Government before the filing of the suit".

It is clear that the principle of these two decisions of the Judicial Committee has no application in the present case because the material facts are different.

10. We proceed to consider the next question arising in these appeals viz., whether the High Court was right in holding that the plaintiffs had established their title as raiyat sarkar with regard to 1/5th share in nazul plots Nos. 34/3, 33 and 171/1 mentioned in the Deputy Commissioner's order dated 7th May, 1948 in Revenue Case No. 9/45-46. It was argued on behalf of defendant No. 1 that there was no evidence to show that the plaintiffs were in possession of the land from 1909 to 1932, and the plaintiffs had not established their title by prescription for the statutory period of 60 years. It was contended that the High Court had no justification for holding that the plaintiffs had established the title of "Raiyat Sarkar" and the finding of the High Court was not based upon any evidence. In our opinion, the argument put forward on behalf of defendant No. 1 is well founded and must be accepted as correct. In the settlement of 1863-64 Ex. P-1 the names of Amansingh and Thakurprasad were noted in the remarks column. But the column regarding tenancy right is definitely blank. The owner is shown in the Khasra as the State "Milkiat Sarkar". In the settlement of 1890-91 Amansingh Narpatsingh is again shown in the remarks column of the khata. But the column regarding any kind of tenancy right is again blank. It is clear that in the settlements of 1860 and 1890-91 the ownership of the land is recorded as that of the Government. The possession of the plaintiffs or of their ancestors could not be attributed to ownership or tenancy right of the property. In the settlement of 1909-10, Ex. P-3 there is no entry in the remarks column showing the possession of the ancestors of the plaintiffs. It was said on behalf of the plaintiffs that no notice was given to them of the proceedings of the settlements of 1909-10. Even assuming that this allegation is correct the entries of the khasra P-3 cannot be treated to be a nullity and of no effect. In any event it was open to the plaintiffs to adduce other reliable evidence to prove their possession between the years 1909 to 1932.

But the plaintiffs have failed to produce any such evidence. In the oazul settlement of 1922-23 the tank was given new plot numbers 33, 34, 35, 36, 37 and 171 and its area was recorded as 5.24 acres. In this settlement about 2 acres of land was found to be occupied by the Municipal Committee, Jabalpur. The land so found to be occupied was recorded in the possession of the Municipal Committee, Jabalpur and the remaining land was again recorded as "Milkiat Sarkar". There is no entry as regards the remaining land recording anybody's possession in the remarks column. Actually proclamations were made during this settlement and objections were invited as per Ex ID-14. A date was fixed upto 31st August, 1924 but no one came forward. The proclamation clearly recited that the vacant sites which were not in possession of anybody were not recognised as belonging to any person. It is impossible to believe that the plaintiffs or their ancestors were unaware of such a proclamation. Had they been in possession they would not have failed to make a claim. For the period after 1933-34 the plaintiffs produced account books to show that they exercised certain rights. Certain receipts were also proved but they also relate to a period after 1939. We have gone through the oral evidence produced by the plaintiffs and it appears to be unreliable. The result is that for the period 1891 till 1932 there is no reliable oral documentary evidence to prove that the plaintiffs or their ancestors had any possession over the disputed land. On the contrary the disputed land i.e., Phoota Tal was always recognised as Milkiat Sarkar and the State Government was justified in holding that the order of the Deputy Commissioner dated 7th May, 1948 should be set aside.

11. In the course of the argument reference was made by Mr. Gupta to the following passage in the Central Provinces Settlement Instructions (Reprint of 1953) page 213

"In dealing with proposed method of the settlement of titles it will be convenient in order to remove all causes for misapprehension among residents, to lay emphasis on the policy of Government in making these settlements. That policy was defined in the Chief Commissioner's Resolution No. 502-B-K dated the 19th October, 1917, in the Revenue and Scarce City Department, but its main principles will bear repetition.

As it is not the intention of Government in making the settlement to disturb long possession, but only to obtain an accurate record of the lands which are its property and to secure its right to any land revenue to which it may be entitled, long possession, even without clear proof of a definite grant from Government will be recognised as entitled the holder to possession. In deciding what constitutes long possession in any individual town, regard will be had to the special circumstances of the place, and while this point will be dealt with more particularly in the Deputy Commissioner's report, the following general principles will ordinarily be observed.

(1) all occupants who are able to prove possession to any land prior to 1891 or such later date as may be fixed for each town, either by themselves or by a valid title from a previous holder, and all occupants who can prove a definite grant or lease from Government will be recorded as entitled to hold such land as against Government (paragraph 6 of the Resolution)"

On the basis of this passage it was argued that it was the duty of the settlement officer to treat the plaintiffs as having established their title because they were shown to be in possession in the settlement of the year 1890-91. We are unable to accept this argument as correct. The passage quoted above only applies to a case where the ownership of the land was unknown i.e., where possession is proved for a long time, but its original title could not be traced, and not to a case where the land is recorded as Government land.

12. For the reasons expressed, we hold that the suit brought by the plaintiffs being Civil Suit No. 10-A of 1954 should be dismissed. Civil Appeal 386 of 1966 is accordingly dismissed and Civil Appeal 387 of 1966 is allowed with costs in favour of defendant No. 1 i.e., State of Madhya Pradesh. There will be one bearing fee.

(A) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2) (vi) and (vi-a) — Income-tax Rules (1922), R. 33 — Assessee non-resident Company engaged in shipping business — Computation of taxable business income — Method of.

Section 10 of the Act which charges to tax the profits and gains of business, profession or vocation carried on by an assessee applies also to assessee who are non-residents. Profits and gains of business of a non-resident received or deemed to be received in the taxable territories by or on behalf of the assessee and profits and gains of business which accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to him in the taxable territories are taxable. Section 4 is one of the pivotal sections in the scheme of the Income-tax Act. The Act, however, gives no clear guidance for determining when income may be said to have arisen or accrued within the taxable territories. But R. 33 framed under the Act purports to give some direction to the Income-tax Officer for determining income, profits or gains accruing or arising to a non-resident for the purpose of assessment to income-tax. The profits of the business taxable under the Income-tax Act, 1922, are a fraction of the world-profits — and the profits are to be determined under Rule 33 of the Income-tax Rules. (Paras 8, 9)

Rule 33 of the Income-tax Rules authorises the Income-tax Officer to adopt one of the three methods of determining income, profits or gains for the purpose of assessment to income-tax where the Income-tax Officer is unable to ascertain the actual amount of income, profits or gains, arising inter alia out of a business connection in the taxable territories: (a) a percentage of turnover considered reasonable; (b) a proportion of the total profits (computed according to the provisions of the Income-tax Act) of the business of the assessee equal to the proportion which the receipts accruing or raising bear to the total receipts of the business and (c) such other manner as the Income-tax Officer may deem suitable. (Paras 9, 10)

(B) Income-tax Act (1922), Section 10 — Income-tax Rules (1922), Rule 33 — Claim of non-resident assessee for additional depreciation — Additional depreciation is a statutory allowance in the determination of taxable profits under Section 10 of the Act, and in the case of a non-resident where actual income cannot be determined, and resort is had to

Rule 33 and not when a special empirical method evolved by I. T. O. is adopted for computation of the taxable income. (Para 15)

(C) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66A — Powers of Supreme Court — In appeal from order of High Court in Income-tax reference Supreme Court exercises only advisory jurisdiction and has only to answer question referred by the Tribunal. (Para 15)

(D) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2) (vi) — Assessee non-resident company — Computation of taxable business income — Observation of High Court that “no relief in any shape or form can be enjoyed by any assessee under the Income-tax Act in respect of a source of income unless the income from that source is taken into consideration for the purpose of that Act” when that was not the plea of the commissioner held on facts was wrong. Mr. Sachin Chaudhuri, Senior Advocate, (M/s. T. A. Ramachandran and D. N. Gupta, Advocates, with him), for Appellant (In all the Appeals); Mr. S. T. Desai, Senior Advocate, (M/s. S. A. L. Narayana Rao, R. H. Dhebar, R. N. Sachthey and B. D. Sharma, Advocates, with him), for Respondent (In all the Appeals).

SHAH, J.: Netherlands Steam Navigation Company Ltd. — hereinafter called “the assessee” — is a non-resident Company engaged in shipping business. For the assessment years 1952-53 to 1956-57 the assessee filed its return of income for the relevant accounting years disclosing taxable income computed on the basis of its annual turnover in its Indian trade i.e., “round voyages” to and from Indian Ports. The assessee did not furnish particulars of its world income. The Income-tax Officer computed the taxable business income of the assessee for each year by the application of the following formula:

Indian Port receipts

Total Port receipts

By the expression “Indian trade profits” in the formula was meant profit earned in “round voyages” made by the assessee’s ships which touched Indian ports. Operation of the formula may be illustrated

"Total gross earnings in Indian Trade . . .		Kr. 10,024,996
Deduct :—
(1) Total expenses in Indian Trade . . .	Kr. 7,705,474
(2) Depreciation allowance Net profit Indian Trade	Kr. 733,671	Kr. 8,439,145
Gross earnings from Indian ports		Kr. 1,585,851
Proportionate Indian profits—		Kr. 5,440,042
5,440,042
	$\times 1,585,851$	Kr. 860,559
(Rs. 100 : Kr. 79.80)		Rs. 10,78,395"

2. In computing the profits of the assessee in India in each year the Income-tax Officer allowed normal depreciation and other trade allowances admissible under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the relevant rules made thereunder. He, however, did not allow initial depreciation and additional depreciation in respect of the ships of the assessee in any of the assessment years, because the ships acquired by the assessee were not introduced into the Indian business in the years in which they were newly acquired. The orders of assessment were confirmed by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner.

3. In appeal to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal the assessee claimed additional depreciation for four ships for which the following details were furnished:

"(1) S S. Bintang — Brought into use in 1930

Brought into use in the Indian trade in 1951.

Claim for the assessment years 1952-53 to 1954-55

(2) S S. Billiton — Brought into use in 1951

Brought into use in the Indian trade in 1952.

Claim for the assessment years 1953-54 to 1956-57.

(3) S S. Banka. — Brought into use in 1953

Brought into use in the Indian trade in 1954

Claim for the assessment years 1955-56 and 1956-57.

(4) S S. Bawean. — Brought into use in 1953

Brought into use in the Indian trade in 1954

Claim for the assessment years 1955-56 and 1956-57."

The assessee and the Commissioner were agreed that the taxable income of the assessee had to be determined by the application of the second method in Rule 33 of the Indian Income-tax Rules, 1922. The Tribunal also observed that the Commissioner and the assessee agreed that the formula adopted by the Income-tax Officer was "the correct method of assessment."

4. The Commissioner submitted before the Tribunal that if the Indian business of the assessee be regarded as part of its world business and not independent of it, the world profits of the assessee must be computed according to the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and additional depreciation may be taken into account in determining the taxable profits under the Indian Income-tax Act as a fraction of the world profits. But he maintained that if the Indian trade be regarded as a separate business and not part of the world trade of the assessee, additional depreciation could only be allowed under Section 10 (2) (vi-a) of the Indian Income-tax Act, provided ships which are new are introduced into the Indian trade and not otherwise.

5. In the opinion of the Tribunal, in computing the taxable income of the assessee under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 the Indian business must be taken to be part of the assessee's world business, and depreciation which the assessee was entitled to, in respect of its world business by the application of the Indian Income-tax Act would be proportionately "available in respect of its business." The Tribunal observed that under Rule 33 "the profits have to be calculated under the terms of the Indian Income-tax Act and this Act postulated that on all machinery, plants and such other things like steamers brought into business after March 31, 1948, additional depreciation must also be granted." The Tribunal then observed that the ships brought into the Indian trade were not new in the years of account relevant to the five years of assessment, but the assessee was still qualified under Section 10 (2) (vi-a) to additional depreciation for a continuous period of five years, and "the fact that in the first of these years the new ships did not call at the Indian Ports in one assessment year did not disentitle the assessee to the benefit not only for that year but also for the succeeding four years." Accordingly the Tribunal held that in respect of all the four ships of the assessee, additional depreciation was admissible as claimed.

6. At the instance of the Commissioner of Income-tax, the following question was referred by the Tribunal to the High Court of Calcutta for opinion in respect of each of the five years:

"Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case the assessee-Company is entitled to additional depreciation in respect of the four ships mentioned above?"

The High Court answered the question in the negative.

7. Clause (vi-a) was inserted in Section 10 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, by Section 11 of the Taxation Laws (Extension to Merged States and Amendment) Act 67 of 1949. The clause as amended by Section 8 of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act 25 of 1953 with effect from April 1, 1952, reads as follows:

"In respect of depreciation of buildings newly erected, or of machinery or plant being new which has been installed, after the 31st day of March, 1948, a further sum (which shall be deductible in determining the written down value) equal to the amount admissible under clause (vi) (exclusive of the extra allowance for double or multiple shift working of the machinery or plant and the initial depreciation allowance admissible under that clause for the first year of erection of the building or the installation of the machinery or plant) in not more than five successive assessments for the financial years next following the previous year in which such buildings are erected and such machinery and plant installed and falling within the period commencing on the 1st day of April, 1949, and ending on the 31st day of March, 1959."

The assessee is a non-resident Company. It maintains a Branch Office in Calcutta;

but on that account the Indian business of the assessee cannot be regarded as business distinct from its world business. It was not so treated by the Income-tax Officer, or by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. In computing profits or gains of business carried on by an assessee, normal depreciation under Section 10 (2) (vi) and additional depreciation under Section 10 (2) (vi-a) are undoubtedly admissible in the conditions and to the extent allowed under the two clauses.

8. By Section 4 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, the total income of any previous year of a non-resident includes all income, profits and gains from whatever source derived which—

(1) are received or are deemed to be received in the taxable territories in such year by or on behalf of such person, and

(2) which accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to him in the taxable territories during such year.

Section 10 of the Act which charges to tax the profits and gains of business, profession or vocation carried on by an assessee applies to assessee who are residents, residents but not ordinarily residents, and non-residents. Profits and gains of business of a non-resident received or deemed to be received in the taxable territories by or on behalf of the assessee are taxable under the Indian Income-tax Act 1922; profits and gains of business which accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to him in the taxable territories are also taxable under that Act; but profits and gains which accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to a non-resident without the taxable territories are not taxable under the Act.

9. Section 4 is one of the pivotal sections in the scheme of the Income-tax Act. Thereby within the total income of a non-resident is included income received, arising or accruing, or deemed to be received, or to have arisen or accrued, within the taxable territories. The Act however gives no clear guidance for determining when income may be said to have arisen or accrued within the taxable territories. But Rule 33 framed under the Act purports to give some direction to the Income-tax Officer for determining income, profits or gains accruing or arising to a non-resident for the purpose of assessment to income-tax. There is no dispute that the profits of the business taxable under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, are a fraction of the world-profits — and the profits are to be determined under R. 33 of the Income-tax Rules. Rule 33 of the Income-tax Rules reads as follows:

"In any case in which the Income-tax Officer is of opinion that the actual amount of the income, profits or gains accruing or arising to any person residing out of the taxable territories whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection in the taxable territories or through or from any property in the taxable territories, or through or from any asset or source of income in the taxable territories, or through or from any money lent at interest and brought into the taxable territories in cash or in kind cannot be ascertained, the amount of such income, profits or gains for the purposes of assessment to income-tax may be calculated on such percentage of the turnover so accruing or arising as the Income-tax Officer may consider to be reasonable, or on an amount which bears the same proportion to the total profits of the business of such person (such profits being computed in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act) as the receipts so accruing or arising bear to the total receipts of the business, or in such other manner as the Income-tax Officer may deem suitable."

The rule authorises the Income-tax Officer to adopt one of the three methods of determining income, profits or gains for the purpose of assessment to income-tax where the Income-tax Officer is unable to ascertain the actual amount of income, profits or gains, arising inter alia out of a business connection in the taxable territories — (a) a percentage of turnover considered reasonable, (b) a proportion of the total profits (computed according to the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act) of the business of the assessee equal to the proportion which the receipts accruing or arising bear to the total receipts of the business and (c) such other manner as the Income-tax Officer may deem suitable.

10. The second method, it was common ground, was properly applicable to the determination of taxable income of the assessee. That method requires as a first step, determination of the total profits of the business of the assessee in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, the next step is to determine the proportion between the receipts accruing or arising within the taxable territories and the total receipts of the business, and the third step is to determine the income, profits or gains by the application of the proportion for the purpose of assessment to income-tax. This method ordains that the fraction which the total profits bear to the total world receipts is to be applied to the Indian receipts for determining the taxable profits. The income so determined will be the taxable income without any further allowances, because the permissible allowance will all enter the computation of the world income and income taxable under the Income-tax Act is also a fraction thereof.

11. Apparently the Income-tax Officer did not apply the second method under Rule 33 in computing the taxable income of the assessee, for under that method in determining the taxable income the receipts accrued or arising in India had to be multiplied by the proportion between the total profits of the business and the total receipts of the world business.

12. Counsel for the assessee asked us to assume that the profits computed by the Income-tax Officer according to the formula adopted by him are profits determined by the second method in Rule 33, and claimed on that footing that besides normal depreciation, additional depreciation ought also to have been taken into account and the taxable profits of the assessee determined on that basis. But that assumption cannot be made. One of the essential conditions of the applicability of the second method in Rule 33 is the determination of the total world profits of the assessee under the Indian Income-tax Act, and reduction of the Indian taxable profits by the application of the appropriate fraction. The assessee has not produced its books of account of its world trade to enable the Income-tax Officer to determine its total taxable profits arising from its world business.

13. There was apparently no clear appreciation of the true import of the second method under Rule 33 before the Departmental Authorities and the Tribunal. Counsel for the assessee suggested that his client may be willing to produce before the Income-tax Officer the books of account of the relevant years for computing the total world profits according to the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the benefit of additional depreciation may then be allowed to the assessee in computing the total profits under the Indian Income-tax Act. Counsel for the Commissioner expressed his willingness to the adoption of that course. Counsel requested us to adjourn the bearing to enable them to obtain instructions from their respective clients, and the bearing was ad-

cordingly adjourned for three weeks. But ultimately counsel for the assessee informed us that his client may not be able to bring before the Income-tax Officer the books of account of their world trade.

14. The Income-tax Officer has evolved a special formula for determining the profits which is not the second method in Rule 33 of the Income-tax Rules. The assessee has not challenged the correctness of that method, nor has the Department. In the application of that formula, normal depreciation and trade expenses are deducted from the total gross earning in the Indian trade, but not the additional depreciation.

15. Clearly the Income-tax Officer did not in computing the taxable income resort to the second method in Rule 33 of the Income-tax Rules. We are exercising in these appeals advisory jurisdiction, and are only called upon to answer the question referred by the Tribunal. We are incompetent to decide whether computation of the taxable income by the Income-tax Officer by the application of the formula evolved by him is correct; that question is not before us. We are only concerned to determine the validity of the claim for admitting additional depreciation in the computation of the taxable income of the assessee by the method adopted by the Income-tax Officer. Additional depreciation is a statutory allowance in the determination of taxable profits under Section 10 of the Act, and in the case of a non-resident where actual income cannot be determined, and resort is had to Rule 33, not when an empirical method is adopted for computation of the taxable income.

16. We are however unable to agree with the observations of the High Court that "no relief in any shape or form can be enjoyed by any assessee under the Indian Income-tax Act in respect of a source of income, unless the income from that source is taken into consideration for the purpose of that Act. In the reference before us the income in question was outside the purview of assessment under the Indian Income-tax Act." That was not the plea of the Commissioner. The source of the income of the assessee charged to tax was business; it was not income from any other source. The Commissioner and the assessee were ad idem on that matter. The only dispute was whether additional depreciation was admissible in the computation of the taxable income, when the taxable business profits were determined by the Income-tax Officer by the method evolved by him.

17. It was common ground that the appropriate method for determining the profits was the second method in Rule 33. But that method was never applied; if it was applied in the computation of the world profits of the assessee, it would have been necessary to allow the various depreciation allowances. The assessee could not, while accepting determination of taxable profits in a manner not warranted by the second method under Rule 33, claim that additional depreciation should be allowed. The answer to the question therefore is that additional depreciation is not admissible as an allowance in the computation of the taxable income by the special formula adopted by the Income-tax Officer.

18. The appeals fail. The assessee will pay the costs of these appeals. One hearing fee.

AIR 1969 SUPREME COURT 1267 (V 56 C 230)

(From Allahabad: AIR 1965 All 586)

J. C. SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal, Appellant v. National Building Material Supply, Gurgaon, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 697 of 1966, D/- 17-3-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, Rr. 17 and 153 and O. 30, R. 1 — Amendment of plaint — Discretion of Court — Not to be refused on technical grounds — AIR 1965 All 586, Reversed.

Where the plaintiff, M, who was the manager of a joint family, and was carrying on its business under a business name, brought a suit in that business name, and, when objection was taken by the defendant that the firm being an unregistered firm was incompetent to sue, applied for the amendment of the plaint stating that he himself had intended to file and had in fact filed the action on behalf of the family in the business name.

Held that the application could not be refused on the ground that there was no averment therein that the misdescription was on account of a bona fide mistake, and on that account the suit must fail. There is no rule that unless in an application for amendment of the plaint it is expressly averred that the error, omission or misdescription is due to a bona fide mistake, the Court has no power to grant leave to amend the plaint. The power to grant amendment of the pleadings is intended to serve the ends of justice and is not governed by any such narrow or technical limitations. (Para 7)

The description of the plaintiff by a firm name in a case where the Code of Civil Procedure did not permit a suit to be brought in the firm name should properly be considered as a case of description of the individual partners of the business and as such a misdescription, which in law can be corrected. It should not be considered to amount to a description of a non-existent person. AIR 1961 SC 325 & AIR 1933 Bom 304, Rel. on; AIR 1965 All 586, Reversed. (Para 6)

Rules of procedure are intended to be a handmaid to the administration of justice. A party cannot be refused just relief merely because of some mistake, negligence, inadvertence or even infraction of the rules of procedure. The Court always gives leave to amend the pleading of a party, unless it is satisfied that the party applying was acting mala fide, or that by his blunder, he had caused injury to his opponent which may not be compensated for by an order of costs. However, negligent or careless may have been the first omission, and, however, late the proposed amendment, the amendment may be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side (Para 5)

(B) Limitation Act (1908), Sec. 3 — Amendment of plaint — Suit originally instituted misdescribing the plaintiff — Amendment of plaint substituting real plaintiff — No question of limitation arises — Plaint must be deemed on such amendment to have been instituted in the name of the real plaintiff, on the date on which it was originally instituted. (Para 8)

SHAH, J.: On March 11, 1950, Manohar Lal s/o Jai Jai Ram commenced an action in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nanital, for a decree for Rs 10,139/12 being the value of timber supplied to the defendant — the National Building Material Supply, Gurgaon. The action was instituted in the name of "Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal" which was the name in which the business was carried on. The plaintiff Manohar Lal subscribed his signature at the foot of the plaint as "Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal, by the pen of Manohar Lal", and the plaint was also similarly verified. The defendant by its written statement contended that the plaintiff was an unregistered firm and on that account incompetent to sue.

2. On July 18, 1952, the plaintiff applied for leave to amend the plaint. Manohar Lal stated that "the business name of the plaintiff is Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal and therein Manohar Lal the owner and proprietor is clearly shown and named. It is a joint Hindu family business and the defendant and all knew it that Manohar Lal whose name is there along with the father's name is the proprietor of it. The name is not an assumed or fictitious one". The plaintiff on those averments applied for leave to describe himself in the cause title as "Manohar Lal proprietor of Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal" and in paragraph 1 to state that he carried on the business in timber in the name of Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal. Apparently no reply was filed to this application by the defendant. The Subordinate Judge granted leave to amend the plaint. He observed that there was no doubt that the real plaintiff was Manohar Lal himself, that it was Manohar Lal who intended to file and did in fact file the action, and that the "amendment was intended to bring what in effect had been done in conformity with what in fact should have been done".

3. The defendant then filed a supplementary written statement raising two additional contentions — (1) that Manohar Lal was not the sole owner of the business and that his other brothers were also the owners of the business, and (2) that in any event the amendment became effective from July 18, 1952, and on that account the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

4. The Trial Judge decreed the claim for Rs 6,568/6/3. Against that decree an appeal was preferred to the High Court of Allahabad. The High Court being of the view that the action was instituted in the name of a "non-existing person" and Manohar Lal having failed to aver in the application for amendment that the action was instituted in the name of "Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal" on account of some bona fide mistake or omission, the Subordinate Judge was incompetent to grant leave to amend the plaint. The High Court after making an extensive quotation from the judgment of this Court in Purushottam Umedbhai and Co. v. Messrs. Manilal and Sons, 1961-1 SCR 982=(AIR 1961 SC 325) observed that the action could not be instituted by the plaintiff in the business name; it should have been instituted in the name of the Karta of the Hindu undivided family in his representative capacity or else all the members of the joint family must join as plaintiffs. The Court then observed.

"The suit instituted by the joint Hindu family business in the name of an assumed business title was a suit by a person, who did not exist and was, therefore, a nullity. Hence there could be no amendment of the description of such a plaintiff who did not exist in the eye of law. The Court below was in obvious error in thinking otherwise and allowing the name of Manohar Lal to be added as proprietor of the original plaintiff Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal, which was neither a legal entity nor an existing person who could have validly instituted the suit."

The High Court was also of the opinion that the substitution of the name of Manohar Lal as a plaintiff during the pendency of the action took effect from July 18, 1952, and the action must be deemed to be instituted on that date: the amendment could not take effect retrospectively and on the date of the amendment the action was barred by the law of limitation. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court with special leave.

5. The order passed by the High Court cannot be sustained. Rules of procedure are intended to be a handmaid to the administration of justice. A party cannot be refused just relief merely because of some mistake, negligence, inadvertence or even infraction of the rules of procedure. The Court always gives leave to amend the pleading of a party, unless it is satisfied that the party applying was acting mala fide, or that by his blunder, he had caused injury to his opponent which may not be compensated for by an order of costs. However, negligent or careless may have been the first omission, and, however, late the proposed amendment, the amendment may be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side. In Amulakchand Mewaram v. Babulal Kanlal, 35 Bom LR 569=(AIR 1933 Bom 304), Beaumont, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Bombay High Court set out the principles applicable to cases like the present and observed:

"..... the question whether there should be an amendment or not really turns upon whether the name in which the suit is brought is the name of a non-existent person or whether it is merely a misdescription of existing persons. If the former is the case, the suit is a nullity and no amendment can cure it. If the latter is the case, prima facie, there ought to be an amendment because the general rule, subject no doubt to certain exceptions, is that the Court should always allow an amendment where any loss to the opposing party can be compensated for by costs."

In Amulakchand Mewaram's case, 35 Bom LR 569=(AIR 1933 Bom 304) a Hindu undivided family sued in its business name. It was not appreciated at an early stage of the suit that in fact the firm name was not of a partnership, but was the name of a joint Hindu family. An objection was raised by the defendant that the suit as filed was not maintainable. An application to amend the plaint, by substituting the names of the three members of the joint family for the name of the family firm as plaintiffs, was rejected by the Court of first instance. In appeal the High Court observed that a suit brought in the name of a firm in a case not within Order 30, Civil Procedure Code being in fact a case of misdescription of existing persons, leave to amend ought to have been given.

6. This Court considered a somewhat similar case in Purushottam Umedbhai's case, 1961-1 SCR 982=(AIR 1961 SC 325). A firm carrying on business outside India filed a suit in the firm name in the High Court of Calcutta for a decree for compensation for breach of contract. The plaintiff then applied for amendment of the plaint by describing the names of all the partners and striking out the name of the firm as a mere misdescription. The application for amendment was rejected on the view that the original plaint was no plaint in law and it was not a case of misnomer or misdescription, but a case of a non-existent firm or a non-existent person suing. In appeal, the High Court held that the description of the plaintiff by a firm name in a case where the Code of Civil Procedure did not permit a suit to be brought in the firm name should properly be considered a case of description of the individual partners of the business and as such a misdescription, which in law can be corrected and should not be considered to amount to a description of a non-existent person. Against the order of the High Court an appeal was preferred to this Court. This Court observed (at p. 99D)

"Since, however, a firm is not a legal entity the privilege of suing in the name of a firm is permissible only to those persons who, as partners, are doing business in India. Such privilege is not extended to persons who are doing business as partners outside India. In their case they still have to sue in their individual names. If however, under some misapprehension, persons doing business as partners outside India do file a plaint in the name of their firm they are misdescribing themselves, as the suit instituted is by them, they being known collectively as a firm. It seems, therefore, that a plaint filed in a Court in India in the name of a firm doing business outside India is not by itself a nullity. It is a plaint by all the partners of the firm with a defective description of themselves for the purpose of the Code of Civil Procedure. In these circumstances, a Civil Court could permit, under the provisions of Section 153 of the Code (or possibly under Order VI, Rule 17, about which we say nothing), an amendment of the plaint to enable a proper description of the plaintiffs to appear in it in order to assist the Court in determining the real question or issue between the parties." These cases do no more than illustrate the well-settled rule that all amendments should be permitted as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties, unless by permitting the amendment injustice may result to the other side.

7. In the present case, the plaintiff was carrying on business as commission agent in the name of "Jai Jai Ram Manohar Lal". The plaintiff was competent to sue in his own name as Manager of the Hindu undivided family to which the business belonged he says he sued on behalf of the family in the business name. The observations made by the High Court that the application for amendment of the plaint could not be granted, because there was no averment therein that the misdes-cription was on account of a bona fide mistake, and on that account the suit must fail, cannot be accepted. In our view, there is no rule that unless in an application for amendment of the plaint it is expressly averred that the error, omission or misdescription is due to a bona fide mistake, the Court has no power to grant leave to amend the plaint. The power to grant amendment of the pleadings is intended to serve the ends of justice and is not governed by any such narrow or technical limitations.

8. Since the name in which the action was instituted was merely a misdescription of the original plaintiff, no question of limitation arises; the plaint must be deemed on amendment to have been instituted in the name of the real plaintiff, on the date on which it was originally instituted.

9. In our view, the order passed by the Trial Court in granting the amendment was clearly right, and the High Court was in error in dismissing the suit on a technicality wholly unrelated to the merits of the dispute. Since all this delay has taken place and costs have been thrown away, because the defendant raised and persisted in a plea which had no merit even after the amendment was allowed by the Trial Court, he must pay the costs in this Court and the High Court. The appeal is allowed and the decree passed by the High Court is set aside. It appears that the High Court has not dealt with the appeal on the merits. The proceedings will stand remanded to the High Court for disposal according to law on the merits of the dispute between the parties.

Tenancy Laws — U. P. Tenancy Act (17 of 1939), Ss 16S, 271 (2) — Civil P. C (1908), S. 47 — Rent decree — Order under S 16S directing delivery of possession to decree-holder — Order relates to execution, discharge or satisfaction of decree and is appealable — ILR (1965) 2 All 383, Reversed.

The whole scheme of the Section 168 shows that the application under it is a step in the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Where, therefore, in a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the land-holder, the Assistant Collector confirms an order under S. 168 for delivery of possession to the decree-holder, the order is one relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and an appeal lies against it. Mr. S. P. Sinha, Senior Advocate (M/s. J. P. Goyal and S. P. Singh, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Mr. C. B. Agarwala, Senior Advocate (Mr. S. Shaukat Hussain, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

SIKRI, J.: The only question involved in this appeal by special leave is whether an appeal lies against an order passed under Section 168 of the U. P. Tenancy Act, 1939, hereinafter referred to as the Act. Before we deal with this point it is necessary to give a few facts.

2. Balak Singh, appellant before us, was a tenant of the respondent Waqf. The respondent had obtained a decree on May 17, 1956, for Rs. 752/- against Balak Singh for arrears of rent. The respondent tried to execute the decree by attachment of crops, but Balak Singh had apparently removed the crops. Thereupon the respondent, through one Reazuddin, claiming to be the Mutawalli of the respondent Waqf, applied under Section 168 of the Act, praying that the amount of the decree be got paid under Section 168 and in default of payment of the decretal amount Balak Singh may be dispossessed. This application was filed on July 4, 1957. On April 3, 1958, notice was issued under Section 168 for May 2, 1958. On the latter date Parwana Dakhil (Warrant of Possession) in favour of the decree-holder was issued, and it was directed that the file be put up on June 13, 1958. On May 30, 1958, Balak Singh put in a petition raising various objections, one of them being that no notice of the proceedings taken under Section 168 had been served on him. He further contended that Reazuddin had no right to file the application under Section 168. On July 12, 1958, the Assistant Collector, 1st Class, cancelled the order dated May 2, 1958, and directed that fresh notice be issued under Section 168 of the Act to the judgment-debtor giving him time upto August 8, 1958, "to deposit the decretal amount otherwise he will be ousted of the land in suit". He also directed that the decree-holder should file evidence of the succession of Reazuddin to Abdul Latif who was the previous Mutawalli.

3. On August 8, 1958, Balak Singh raised some more objections, including the objection that he should be granted 120 days time for payment of the decretal amount in execution as provided in Section 168. On August 8, 1958, the Assistant Collector held that he had already given a long time to pay the dues and no question of granting further time arose. He further held that Reazuddin had filed papers to prove that he had a right to continue the proceedings. The Assistant Collector confirmed the order previously passed regarding delivery of possession to the decree-holder. He noted that possession had already been delivered.

4. Against this order Balak Singh filed an appeal to the District Judge. The District Judge held that it had not been established that Reazuddin was a legal representative or agent of the decree-holder and that, at any rate, no proper notice under Section 168 of the Act had been served on Balak Singh and it was not right for the Court to have confirmed the previous order without complying with the mandatory provisions of Section 168. He accordingly allowed the appeal and sent the case back to the execution Court with a direction to readmit it and deal with it according to law.

5. The respondent then filed an appeal to the High Court. Mathur, J., came to the conclusion that the appeal to the District Judge was incompetent as no appeal lay against an order passed under Section 168 of the Act. He was of the view that an order under Section 168 was passed in the main suit and not in execution.

6. Section 168 of the Act reads thus:

"168. (1) When a decree for arrears of rent against an exproprietary, an occupancy or hereditary tenant has not been completely satisfied within one year from the date of such decree by any mode of execution other than sale of holdings, the land-holder may apply to the Court, which passed the decree, for the issue of a notice to the tenant for payment of the amount outstanding and for his ejectment, in case of the default and the Court shall thereupon issue such notice.

(2) The notice shall require the tenant to appear within thirty days of the service of the notice, and either to show cause why he should not be ejected from the holding, or to admit the claim and obtain leave to pay the amount into the Court within one hundred and twenty days from the date of his appearance in the Court.

(3) If the tenant does not appear in accordance with the terms of the notice, or having appeared either does not show cause why he should not be ejected or does not ask for leave to pay, the Court shall immediately order his ejectment from the holding.

(4) If the tenant appears and obtains leave to pay, then, unless within one hundred and twenty days from the date of his appearance in the court, the tenant has paid the amount or payment thereof has been certified to the Court in accordance with Rule 2, Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the Court shall on the 31st of May next following, order his ejectment.

(5) The order of ejectment shall be executed on or after the first day of June next following the date of the order. If within one month after the delivery of possession, the tenant deposits the decretal amount, the ejectment order shall be cancelled and possession restored forthwith to the tenant.

(6) No extension of time for payment shall be allowed:

Provided that the tenant shall be ejected only from such portion of the holding the rent of which does not exceed one-sixth of the decretal amount."

7. The learned counsel for the appellant contends that an appeal lies under Section 271 (2) of the Act, which reads as follows.

"An appeal shall lie from an order mentioned in Section 47 or Section 104 or Section 144 or in Order XLIII, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and made by an Assistant Collector of the first class or a collector.

Such appeal shall lie to the Court, if any, having jurisdiction under Section 265 of this Act to hear an appeal from the decree in the suit, or in the case of an application for execution, to the Court having jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the decree which is being executed."

8. The answer to the question depends on whether the order under Section 163 of the Act can be said to be an order relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. It seems to us that the order dated August 8, 1958, was an order relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree for rent, dated May 17, 1956.

9. It will be noticed that sub-s. (1) of Section 163 contemplates the decree-holder having tried to execute the decree by other modes of execution. If the decree has not been satisfied within one year of the date of the decree, the decree-holder is entitled to apply to the Court which passed the decree for the issue of the notice to the tenant for payment of the amount outstanding and for ejectment in case of default. Once the conditions are satisfied the Court had no option but to issue a notice. The object of the application is satisfaction of the decree, it may be satisfied by payment of the amount outstanding or failing that by ejectment in case of default. Under sub-section (2) the tenant is entitled to apply and obtain leave to pay the amount in Court within 120 days from the date of appearance in the Court. He is also entitled to show cause why he should not be ejected. Under sub-sec. (3) the Court is entitled to immediately order his ejectment from the holding if the tenant does not appear in accordance with the terms of notice or having appeared either does not show cause why he should not be ejected or does not ask leave to pay. Under sub-section (4) in default of payment or certification to the Court in accordance with R. 2, O. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court is entitled to order his ejectment on May 31, next following. Then sub-section (5) provides for the execution of the order of ejectment.

10. It seems to us that the whole scheme of the section shows that the application under Section 163 of the Act is a step in the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that the application is to the Court which passed the decree. But this does not necessarily show that the order passed on the application is not one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. As provided in Section 38 of the Civil Procedure Code "a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution."

prietary, an occupancy or hereditary tenant, Section 170 of the Act deals with a decree passed for arrears of rent against a non-occupancy tenant. A similar application is provided for in Section 170 and the legislature clearly contemplates that this is a mode of execution for it uses the words "the land-holder may, in addition to any other mode of execution, apply to the Court which passed the decree for issue of a notice." A mode similar to the mode or proceeding under Section 168 is thus treated as a mode of execution.

12. In the result we hold that the High Court erred in holding that the appeal to the District Judge was not competent. Various other questions arise in the appeal to the High Court. In the circumstances we set aside the judgment and order passed by the High Court and remit the case to it to dispose of it in accordance with law. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal.

Houses and Rents — East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act (3 of 1949), S. 13 (2) (i), Proviso — Tender of payment — Tenant depositing money under S. 31, East Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934 — Not a valid tender of payment — Civ. The deposit of the amount in the Civil Court under S. 31, East Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934 by the tenant who is in arrears of rent is not a valid tender of payment under S. 13 (2) (i) of the East Punjab Rent Restriction Act, 1949 and hence cannot save him from the consequences of the default under S. 13 of the Rent Restriction Act. Civil Revision No. 750 of 1962, D/- 18-3-1964 (Punj), Reversed; ILR (1964) 1 Punj 626, Overruled. (Para 6)

Eviction under the Rent Restriction Act takes place on the ground of non-payment or tender of rent due within time fixed by the tenancy and 15 days thereafter. There is only one saving for the tenant and that is when he tenders the full rent in Court before the Rent Controller together with interest and costs. (Para 4)

Section 31 of the Relief of Indebtedness Act is intended to operate between debtors and creditors where difficulty in making the payment, either wholly or partly may arise and the debtor wishes to save himself from interest which is running. The Act is not intended to operate between landlords and tenants; nor is the Civil Court created into a clearing house for rent. The phrase "any person who owes money" in that section must be read to cover cases of debtors and creditors between whom there is an agreement for payment of interest because the deposit is intended to stop interest from running. No interest is agreed to be paid by tenants, at any rate, nor ordinarily, and, therefore, the section cannot be said to cover a case between a landlord and a tenant. Further the amount can be deposited in part under this section and that cannot possibly be a valid tender in case of rent. (Para 5)

Further where the deposit of money under the Relief of Indebtedness Act is not only of the rent due but also of future rent the conclusion that it cannot be treated as a valid tender of payment becomes inevitable. Under Section 19 read with Section 6 of the Urban Rent Restriction Act a landlord is liable to be sent to jail if he recovers advance rent beyond one month. It is impossible to think that the landlords would be required to go to the Civil Court with a view to finding out whether their tenants have deposited rent due to them or not. No doubt there is a provision for sending a notice, but that notice is not intended to cover such cases. (Para 6)

Mr Bishan Narain, Senior Advocate (Mr Naunit Lal, Advocate, with him), for Appellant, Mr. N. N. Keswani, Advocate, for Respondent, M/s Janardan Sharma and S. K. Nandy, Advocates, for Intervener

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.: This is a landlord's appeal against an order of the High Court of Punjab, March 18, 1964, confirming the dismissal of his petition for the eviction of the respondent from certain premises taken on rent. The appellant had made the application under Section 13 of the East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act, 1949 on the allegation that rent for the premises from October 1, 1959 to June 30, 1961 had not been paid. The rent of the premises was Rs 32-8-0 and the water connection charges were Rs 2-8-0. On the first date of hearing the tenant appeared and tendered Rs 292-8-0 as rent from October 1, 1960 to June 30, 1961. He also paid Rs 7 as interest and Rs 25 as costs. These amounts were accepted by the landlord without prejudice to his claim that the rent for the earlier period had not been paid.

2. It appears that the tenant had made two deposits in the Court of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ludhiana under Section 31 of the East Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934 on December 23, 1959 and July 18, 1960, the amount being Rs 210 on each occasion. The tenant claimed that this was a valid tender of rent to the landlord. The Rent Controller, by his order, decided that the tenant was not in default and the Appellate Authority and the High Court also took the same view. It was held by the Appellate Authority, as well as by the High Court, that the deposit under Section 31 of the Relief of Indebtedness Act was a valid tender under Section 13 of the Urban Rent Restriction Act. The Division Bench in the High Court followed an earlier decision of the same Court reported in Mam Chand v. Chhotu Ram, 1LR (1964) 1 Punj 626. The correctness of that decision as well as the decision under appeal are challenged before us.

3. Before the hearing commenced the respondent took objection to the grant of special leave stating that the appellant was guilty of making "certain inaccurate, untrue and misleading statements in respect of certain material facts". The charge was that before the Rent Controller there was no issue that the deposit under Section 31 of the Relief of Indebtedness Act was a valid tender of payment, although this was mentioned as a fact in the petition for special leave. It was also said that this question was given up before the Appellate Authority although it was stated that the point was decided by the Appellate Authority. Reliance was placed in this connection upon two decisions of this Court reported to Hari Naram v. Badri Das, (1964) 2 SCR 203 = (AIR 1963 SC 1558) and Rajabhai Abdul Rehman Munshi v. Vasudev Dhanjibhai Mody, 1964-3 SCR 480 = (AIR 1964 SC 345). There were cases of gross-misstatement where the party applying for special leave had deliberately chosen to make false statements and false pleas. In the present case the same cannot be said of the appellant. There was only one issue before the Court and it was whether the deposit under one Act was good for the purposes of the other Act. All that the courts had to consider was whether that deposit saved the tenant from eviction or not. The High Court mentioned that this was the only point before all the Courts below and we do not think that the complaint that there had been any false averment in the petition for special leave was sustainable. We accordingly rejected the contention, raised by C M P No 64 of 1969.

4. As regards the merits of the case Section 13 (2) (i) of the East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act reads as follows —

"13 Eviction of tenant

(1) A tenant in possession of a building or rented land shall not be evicted therefrom in execution of a decree passed before or after the commencement of this Act or otherwise and whether before or after the termination of the tenancy, except in accordance with the provisions of this section, or in pursuance of an order made under Section 13 of the Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act, 1947, as subsequently amended.

(2) A landlord who seeks to evict his tenant shall apply to the Controller for a direction in that behalf. If the Controller, after giving the tenant a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the applicant, is satisfied —

(i) that the tenant has not paid or tendered the rent due by him in respect of the building or rented land within fifteen days after the expiry of the time fixed in the agreement of tenancy with his landlord or in the absence of any such agreement, by the last day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable:

Provided that if the tenant on the first hearing of the application for ejectment after due service pays or tenders the arrears of rent and interest at six per cent per annum on such arrears together with the cost of application assessed by the Controller, the tenant shall be deemed to have duly paid or tendered the rent within the time aforesaid."

The Act does not lay down any other procedure under which money can be deposited with any Government Authority. Such provisions are to be found in other Rent Control Acts but are missing in this Act. Eviction, therefore, takes place on the ground of non-payment or tender of rent due within time fixed by the tenancy and 15 days thereafter. There is only one saving for the tenant and that is when he tenders the full rent in Court before the Rent Controller together with interest and costs. In the present case, the tenant did tender rent but only for a portion of the period and he relied on his deposit under the Relief of Indebtedness Act as due discharge of his liability for the earlier period. It may be stated that the deposit before the Senior Sub-Judge was made not only of arrears of rent but prospectively for some future period for which the rent was then not due. The question is whether such payment is a valid payment or tender to the landlord.

5. Section 31 of the Relief of Indebtedness Act reads as follows:—

"31. Deposit in Court.

(1) Any person who owes money may at any time deposit in Court a sum of money in full or part payment to his creditor.

(2) The Court on receipt of such deposit shall give notice thereof to the creditor and shall, on his application, pay the sum to him.

(3) From the date of such deposit interest shall cease to run on the sum so deposited."

This Act was passed to govern the relation between the debtors and creditors. The scheme of the Act bears upon this relationship because it provides for insolvency procedure, usurious loans, damped, redemption of mortgages, deposit in Court, and sets up Debt Conciliation Boards, suitably amending the civil law wherever necessary. Incidentally, it provides for deposit in Court with a view to giving a chance to debtors to save interest on the outstanding dues either wholly or partially. The section therefore, is intended to operate between debtors and creditors where difficulty in making the payment, either wholly or partly, may arise and the debtor wishes to save himself from interest which is running. The Act is not intended to operate between landlords and tenants; nor is the Court of the Senior Sub-Judge created into a clearing house for rent. Although the general words "any person who owes money" may appear to cover the case of a tenant, we have to look at the Act as a whole and see what kind of a person is intended thereby. The phrase must be read to cover cases of debtors and creditors between whom there is an agreement for payment of interest because the deposit is intended to stop interest from running. No interest is agreed to be paid by tenants, at any rate, nor ordinarily, and, therefore, the section cannot be said to cover a case between a landlord and a tenant. There is no provision in the Urban Rent Restriction Act for making a deposit except one, and that is on the first day of the hearing of the case. It could not have been intended that all tenants who may be disinclined to pay rent to their landlords should be enabled to deposit it in the Court of a Senior Sub-Judge making the Senior Sub-Judge a kind of a Rent Collector for all landlords. The provision for stoppage of interest is a pointer that the interest in the first instance must have been due. In our judgment, Section 31 has been misunderstood in the High Court. A second pointer is that the amount may be deposited in part which cannot possibly be a valid tender in case of rent. It may be pointed out that the decision of the Division Bench runs counter to two other decisions of Single Judges of the same High Court who have taken the same view which we are taking here. The decisions are noticed by the Division Bench but have not been accepted. The decisions of the learned Single Judges are to be preferred. The Division Bench has taken a very extended view of the deposit under the Relief of Indebtedness Act.

6. Further the deposit of money in the present case was not only of the rent due but also of future rent. Under Section 19 read with Section 6 of the Urban Rent Restriction Act a landlord is liable to be sent to jail if he recovers advance rent beyond one month. It is impossible to think that the landlords would be required to go to the Court of the Senior Sub-

Judge with a view to finding out whether their tenants have deposited rent due to them or not. No doubt there is a provision for sending a notice, but we do not think that that notice is intended to cover such cases. On the whole, therefore, we are of opinion that the deposit under Section 31 of the Relief of Indebtedness Act did not save the tenant from the consequences of the default as contemplated by Section 13 of the Urban Rent Restriction Act. We accordingly allow the appeal and, setting aside the judgment of the High Court, order the eviction of the tenant from the premises rented out by him. He shall have three months' time in which to vacate the premises. The costs throughout must also be borne by the respondent.

Civil Appeals Nos. 940 and 941 of 1966,

(A) Sales Tax — M. P. General Sales Tax Act (2 of 1959), Section 18 (5) — M. P. General Sales Tax Rules (1959), Rule 33 — Requirement under, of giving 15 days' period to show cause against assessment — Non-compliance with — Does not invalidate notice under S. 18 (5) in absence of any prejudice to assessee.

A notice of assessment under S. 18 (5) which does not give an assessee, a clear period of 15 days to show cause as required under Rule 33, is not invalid in absence of any suggestion that because of the insufficiency of time the assessee was unable to submit his explanation for failure to make his returns of turnover. The rule is not intended to be either invariable or rigid and unless prejudice has resulted to the tax payer the proceedings are not liable to be set aside. The terms of Rule 33 are not mandatory. (Para 3)

(B) Sales Tax — M. P. General Sales Tax Act (2 of 1959), Section 2 (d) — 'Dealer' — Who is — Person carrying on business of buying is also a dealer.

A person to be a 'dealer' within the meaning of the Act need not both purchase and sell goods a person who carries on the business of buying is by the express definition of the term in S. 2 (d) a "dealer". It is not predicated of a dealer that he must carry on the business of buying and selling the same goods. A person does not cease to be a registered dealer merely because in respect of the periods his turnover in respect of sales was assessed as nil. 1965 Jab LJ 1073, Affirmed, AIR 1965 SC 531, Rel. on.

(C) Sales Tax — M. P. General Sales Tax Act (2 of 1959), Section 7 — Purchase of taxable commodities in course of business by dealer — Consumption thereof otherwise than in manufacture of goods for sale — Purchase price of commodities to liable to tax.

Where a registered dealer purchases building materials, which are taxable under the Act, in the course of his business and consumes them otherwise than in the manufacture of goods for sale and for a profit motive, the purchase price of the building materials is taxable on the plain meaning of Section 7. (Para 7)

The expression "either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods and otherwise" in Section 7 does not mean that the price paid for buying goods consumed in the manufacture of other goods intended to be sold or otherwise disposed of alone is taxable. It is intended by the Legislature that consumption of goods renders the price paid for their purchase taxable, if the goods are used in the manufacture of other goods for sale or if the goods are consumed otherwise. Whether in a particular set of circumstances a person may be said to be carrying on business in a commodity must depend upon the facts of that case and no general test may be applied for determining that question. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: In respect of assessment to sales-tax for two accounting periods April 1, 1961 to June 30, 1961 and July 1, 1961 to September 30, 1961, the Board of Revenue, Madhya Pradesh, referred the following questions to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh for opinion:

"(1) Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case the notice in Form XVI that was served on the applicant was invalid and therefore the assessment of the applicant on the basis of that notice was bad in law?

(2) Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case the applicant was a dealer during the assessment period under the Act and the imposition of purchase tax on him under Section 7 of the Act was in order?"

The High Court answered the first question in the negative, and the second in the affirmative. These appeals are preferred with special leave granted by this Court.

2. The appellants are a firm of building contractors and are registered as dealers under the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Act 2 of 1959. The appellants purchased building materials in the two account periods and used the materials in the course of their business. The Sales Tax Officer, Jabalpur Circle, served notices upon the appellants to show cause why "best judgment" assessments should not be made, and by order dated November 30, 1961, he assessed the appellants to tax in respect of goods purchased by the appellants for use in their construction business and imposed a penalty of Rs. 200 in each case. Appeals against the orders imposing tax and penalty were dismissed by the Assistant Commissioner of Sales Tax and the Board of Revenue.

3. Rule 33 of the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Rules, 1959, provides that a notice of assessment under Section 18 (5) shall be in Form XVI, and ordinarily it shall give not less than 15 days from the date of the service to the assessee to show cause why he should not be assessed or reassessed to tax and/or to pay penalty. The notices served upon the appellants did not give them a clear period of 15 days to show cause. But we are unable to hold on that account that the notices and the assessments were invalid. We agree with the High Court that the rule is not intended to be "either invariable or rigid", and "unless prejudice has resulted to the tax-payer the proceedings are not liable to be set aside". It is not even suggested that because of the insufficiency of time the appellants were unable to submit their explanation for failure to make their returns of turnover. Two cases on which reliance was placed by counsel for the appellants in support of the plea that the notices were invalid have, in our judgment, no bearing. In Messrs. Kajorimal Kalyanmal v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 3 ITC 451 = (AIR 1930 All 209) it was held that a notice under Section 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, giving the assessee 29 days for filing the return was "entirely illegal". In Jamna Dhar Potdar and Co., Lyallpur v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 3 ITR 112 = (AIR 1935 Lah 201) it was held, following the judgment in Kajorimal Kalyanmal's case, 3 ITC 451 = (AIR 1930 All 209) that a notice which does not give to a tax-payer under Section 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922 clear notice for furnishing a return, of thirty days from the date of service is illegal. But these cases were decided under Section 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, before it was amended by the Income-tax (Amendment) Act 7 of 1939. Under the section as it then stood, it was enacted that the Income-tax Officer shall serve a notice upon any person whose total income is in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer of such an amount as to render that person liable to pay income-tax. The section was held to be mandatory. But the terms of Rule 33 of the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Rules are plainly not mandatory. The answer given by the High Court on the first question must be accepted.

4. To appreciate the scope of the enquiry under the second question, the relevant provisions of the Act may be summarised. By Section 2 (d) of the Act, insofar as it is relevant, the expression "dealer" is defined as meaning, amongst others, "any person who carries on the business of buying, selling, supplying or distributing goods, directly or otherwise". By Section 4 (2) every dealer is liable to tax in respect of sales or supplies of goods effected in Madhya Pradesh with effect from the date on which his turnover calculated during a period of twelve months immediately preceding such date first exceeds the limits specified in sub-s (5). Section 6 provides that the tax payable by a dealer under the Act shall be levied on his taxable turnover relating to the goods specified in Sch. II. Section 7 provides

"Every dealer who in the course of his business purchases any taxable goods, in circumstances in which no tax under S 6 is payable on the sale price of such goods and either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods for sale or otherwise or disposes of such goods in any manner other than by way of sale in the State or despatches them to a place outside the State except as a direct result of sale or purchase in the course of inter-State trade or commerce, shall be liable to pay tax on the purchase price of such goods at the same rate at which it would have been leviable on the sale price of such goods under section 6

Provided

5 Counsel for the appellants submitted that the appellants were not "dealers" within the meaning of the Act because they did not carry on the business of buying goods, and that in any event, the goods purchased by them for use in their construction business were not liable to tax under Section 7.

6 The appellants are registered dealers under the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Act, 1958 (Act 2 of 1959). It is true that in respect of the periods their turnover in respect of sales was assessed as "nil". But on that account they did not cease to be registered dealers within the meaning of the Act. A person to be a dealer within the meaning of the Act need not both purchase and sell goods: a person who carries on the business of buying is by the express definition of the term in Section 2 (d) a

"dealer". This Court held in the State of Andhra Pradesh v. H. Abdul Bakshi and Bros., 15 STC 644 = (AIR 1965 SC 531) that it is not predicated of a dealer that he must carry on the business of buying and selling the same goods. A person who buys goods for consumption in the process of manufacture of articles to be sold by him is a dealer within the meaning of the Hyderabad General Sales Tax Act 14 of 1950. In H. Abdul Bakshi and Bros.'s case, 15 STC 644 = (AIR 1965 SC 531) the assessee sold skins after tanning hides and skins purchased by them. In the process of tanning, they had to use tanning bark purchased by them. This Court held that the turnover arising out of the tanning bark purchased by the assessee for consumption in the process of tanning was liable to tax on the footing that the assessee was carrying on the business of buying goods, even though the goods bought were consumed in the process of tanning. In dealing with the question whether an activity of purchase of goods required for consumption in a manufacturing process may be regarded as a business, the Court observed (at p. 647 of STC) = (at p. 532 of AIR)

"A person to be a dealer must be engaged in the business of buying or selling or supplying goods. The expression 'business' though extensively used is a word of indefinite import. In taxing statute it is used in the sense of an occupation, or profession which occupies the time, attention and labour of a person normally with the object of making profit. To regard an activity as business there must be a course of dealings, either actually continued or contemplated to be continued with a profit motive, and not for sport or pleasure. But to be a dealer a person need not follow the activity of buying, selling and supplying the same commodity. Mere buying for personal consumption, i. e., without a profit motive will not make a person dealer within the meaning of the Act, but a person who consumes a commodity bought by him in the course of his trade, or use in manufacturing another commodity for sale, would be regarded as a dealer. The Legislature has not made sale of the very article bought by a person a condition for treating him as a dealer, the definition merely requires that the buying of the commodity mentioned in Rule 5 (2) must be in the course of business, i. e., must be for sale or use with a view to make profit out of the integrated activity of buying and disposal. The commodity may itself be converted into another saleable commodity, or it may be used as an ingredient or in aid of a manufacturing process leading to the production of such saleable commodity."

This Court agreed with the view expressed in L. M. S. Sadak Thamby and Co. v. The State of Madras, (1963) 14 STC 753 (Mad) in which a similar question was decided by the High Court of Madras. In that case the assessee had purchased tanning bark and had consumed it in tanning raw hides. The Madras High Court held that the buying of goods was in the course of business since it was associated with the business of tanning of hides carried on with a profit-making motive. These decisions support the contention of the State that price paid for goods bought for consumption in manufacturing an article for sale is exigible to purchase-tax even if the goods purchased are either destroyed or transformed into another species of goods.

7. Counsel for the appellants urged that in the cases of H. Abdul Bakshi and Bros., 15 STC 644 = (AIR 1965 SC 531) and L. M. S. Sadak Thamby and Company, (1963) 14 STC 753 (Mad) the assessee were carrying on the business of selling goods manufactured by them and for the purpose of manufacturing those goods certain other goods were purchased and consumed in the process of manufacture, but here the goods are not consumed in producing another commodity for sale and on that account the two cases are distinguishable. The answer to that argument must be sought in the terms of Section 7. The phraseology used in that section is somewhat involved, but the meaning of the section is fairly plain. Where no sales tax is payable under Section 6 on the sale price of the goods, purchase-tax is payable by a dealer who buys taxable goods in the course of his business, and (1) either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods for sale, or (2) consumes such goods otherwise; or (3) disposes of such goods in any manner other than by way of sale in the State, or (4) despatches them to a place outside the State except as a direct result of sale or purchase in the course of inter-State trade or commerce. The assessee is registered as a dealer and they have purchased building materials in the course of their business: the building materials are taxable under the Act, and the appellants have consumed the materials otherwise than in the manufacture of goods for sale and for a profit-motive. On the plain words of Sec. 7 the purchase price is taxable.

8. Mr. Chagla for the appellants urged that the expression "or otherwise" is intended to denote a conjunctive introducing a specific alternative to the words "for sale" immediately preceding. The clause in which it occurs means, says Mr. Chagla, that by S. 7 the price paid for buying goods consumed in the manufacture of other goods intended to be sold or otherwise disposed of, alone is taxable. We do not think that that is a reasonable interpretation of the expression "either consumes such goods in the manufacture of other goods for sale or otherwise". It is intended by the Legislature that consumption of goods renders the price paid for their purchase taxable, if the goods are used in the manufacture of other goods for sale or if the goods are consumed otherwise.

9. The decision in Versova Koli Sahakari Vahatuk Sangh Ltd. v. The State of Maharashtra, (1968) 22 STC 116 (Bom) on which reliance was placed by Mr. Chagla has, in our judgment, no application. In that case a society registered under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925, carried on the business of transporting fish belonging to its members from fishing centres to the markets and vice versa. For preserving fish in the course of transport, the society used to purchase ice, and the members, whose fish was transported, were charged for the quantity of ice required in respect of their baskets of fish. The difference between the price paid by the society for ice purchased and the charge made by the society for ice supplied was brought to tax by the Sales Tax Officer under the Bombay Sales Tax Act, 1959. The High Court of Bombay held that the society was not supplying ice with the intention of carrying on business in ice, and on that account the society was not a "dealer" within the definition of that term in Section 2 (11) of the Act in regard to the supply of ice by it to its members. In that case the taxing authority did not seek to impose purchase-tax: he sought to bring to tax the difference between the price paid by the society for purchasing ice and the charges which it made from its members for supplying ice, and the High Court held that in supplying ice the society was not carrying on business in ice, and on that account was not a "dealer." Whether in a particular set of circumstances a person may be said to be carrying on business in a commodity must depend upon the facts of that case and no general test may be applied for determining that question.

J. M. SHELAT, V. BHARGAVA AND
C. A. VAIDIALINGAM, JJ.

Workmen of the Motor Industries Co. Ltd., Appellants v. Management of Motor Industries Co. Ltd. and another, Respondents

Civil Appeal No. 2123 of 1968, D/- 15-4-1969.

(A) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Sections 12 (3), 18 (3) and 2 (p) — Settlement arrived at before conciliation officer, between management and association of workmen — Binding on workmen until validly terminated — Settlement by association held was in representative capacity.

A settlement was arrived at between the management and the association of workmen before the conciliation officer on 23-12-1964 and one of its clauses provided that neither the association nor the management would resort to any direct action, such as strikes, go slow tactics or lock out or any such coercive action without giving the other side a four day's notice. It was to come into force as from 1-1-1965 and was to remain in force for three years and was thereafter to continue to be in force until its termination by either side. But on 11-5-1966, the workers spontaneously without giving any notice went on strike.

Held that the settlement was one as defined by Section 2 (p) of the Industrial Disputes Act and was one under S. 12 (3) and binding on workmen under S. 18 (3) of the Act until it was validly terminated and was in force when the strike took place. The strike was lightening one, was resorted to without notice and was not at the call of association and was therefore, in breach of the settlement. The settlement arrived at by association must be regarded as one made by it in its representative character and it could not be said that strike by workmen without any call from association would not require any such notice. (Paras 4, 5)

As the strike was illegal under the provisions of law, Standing Order 22 of the company came into operation and starting or joining such a strike and inciting others to join amounted to misconduct for which disciplinary action by management was possible. (Para 4)

(B) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Sections 23 (c), 29, 24 and 26 — Strike envisaged by Sections 23 (c) and 29 — Distinction pointed out — Held on facts that strike in question was not in respect of one of the matters covered by settlement but in contravention of one of the clauses of settlement arrived at between management and workers' association and was illegal and punishable under Section 29 and was not illegal under Section 24 read with Section 23 (c).

There is a distinction between a strike envisaged by Section 23 (c) in respect of a matter covered by a settlement and a strike in breach of a settlement envisaged by Section 29. A strike in breach of a contract during the operation of a settlement and in respect of a matter covered by that settlement falls under Section 23 (c) and is illegal under Section 24. But whereas Section 26 punishes a workman for going on an illegal strike or for any act in furtherance of such a strike Section 29 lays down the penalty for a person, not necessarily a workman, who commits breach of a term of a settlement which is binding under the Act. Thus, commencing a strike or acting in furtherance of it in breach of a settlement binding on the person who so commences it or acts in its furtherance is an offence punishable under Section 29 (Paras 6, 7)

Where one of the clauses of the settlement arrived at between the management and association of workmen, before the conciliation officer for standing the demands, provided that neither the association nor the management would resort to any direct action such as strike or lock out without giving to the other a four day's notice, but during the operation of the settlement, the workers, on the question of suspension of one of the

Held that, the strike was in the matter of the suspension of a workman pending a domestic enquiry against him a matter which obviously was not one of the matters covered by the said settlement. It was, therefore, not a strike illegal under Section 24 read with Section 23 (c). However, the strike was in contravention of the clause of the settlement forbidding strike without notice and settlement being binding on the workmen concerned and in operation at the time, was punishable under Section 29, and therefore, illegal under that section. (Para 7)

(C) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Finding of fact — Departmental enquiry — Dismissal of workman for misconduct by incitement and disorderly behaviour — Finding neither perverse nor such as no reasonable body of persons could come to on evidence on record — Labour Court, on evidence on record holding that the workers' Association had failed to prove its case that the management had agreed not to take action against any workman in connection with strike and that in fact the management did not impose any penalty against any workman for joining strike — Finding purely one of fact — Cogent reasons given by Labour Court — No interference. (Paras 9, 11)

(D) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Sch. 2, Item 6 — Domestic enquiry — Victimisation — Discrimination — Strike by workers — Management dismissing three workers for misconduct by incitement, intimidation and riotous and disorderly behaviour considering them as 'very grave in nature' — No action was taken for striking or stopping or for loitering about in company's premises as a large number of 'misguided' workmen had stopped work: Held on facts that once a misconduct graver than that of rest was found proved against those workers and for which punishment was dismissal, victimisation could not be attributed to management — Having been found to be leaders of crowd, action taken against them could not on any principle be regarded as discriminatory or unequal — (Constitution of India, Article 14).

As a result of domestic enquiry against three workers on charges in relating to strike or stoppage of work, abandoning the place of work, inciting clerks and officers to join the strike, disorderly behaviour including intimidation and assault on one, the management passed an order of dismissal. That order stated four acts of misconduct: (1) striking or stopping work, (2) inciting, (3) riotous and disorderly behaviour and (4) loitering about in the company's premises. Though each one of those acts, according to the order, was misconduct punishable with dismissal, the order stated that so far as acts 1 and 4 were concerned, the management did not wish to take a serious view of them as a large number of "misguided" workmen had stopped work and left their places of work without permission. The management, therefore, took action only in respect of acts falling under Clauses 3 and 13 of Standing order 22 evidently for the reason that they considered incitement, intimidation and riotous and disorderly behaviour as "very grave in nature".

Held that the order of dismissal could not be characterised as act of victimisation. It could not be said that in taking that view the management discriminated against the three workmen concerned as against the rest or that they dismissed them with the object of victimising. Once a misconduct graver than that of the rest was found proved against these three workmen and for which the punishment was dismissal, victimisation could not legitimately be attributed to the management. So far as their participation in the strike and loitering about were concerned no action was taken against these three workmen on the ground that those acts were common with those of the rest of the workmen. (Para 11)

As the evidence in the enquiry clearly disclosed that when the crowd forced its way into the particular department it was led by those three workmen, all of whom were in the forefront thereof and two of them had defiantly forced the officers to leave their tables and one of them threatened as to what he and the others who were behind him could do to him if he did not comply, the management could not be blamed if they took a serious view of those acts of the three workmen concerned.

An act of discrimination could only occur if amongst those equally situated an unequal treatment was meted out to one or more of them. Having been found to be the leaders of the crowd, action taken against them could not on any principle be regarded as discriminatory or unequal. (Para 11)

The following Judgment of the Court
 was delivered by

SHELAT, J.: This appeal, founded on special leave, arises out of an industrial dispute between the respondent-company and the Motor Industries Company Employees Association which the Government of Mysore referred to the Labour Court, Bangalore, for adjudication under Section 10 (1) (c) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. The dispute related to the dismissal by the management of three workmen, Sandhyavoo, C Prabhakar and M V Vasudevan out of the five workmen against whom the management had held a domestic enquiry at which they were found guilty of acts of misconduct charged against them.

2. The facts leading to the said dispute and the reference are as follows

On August 24, 1964 the said association handed over to the management a charter of demands. Negotiations between the parties having failed, the demands were taken before the conciliation officer when the parties arrived at a settlement dated December 23, 1964. On April 29, 1966, the management issued a notice suspending for a day, i.e., May 4, 1966, one B C Shenoy as and by way of penalty. In consequence of the protest by the association, the said suspension was postponed and on May 10, 1966, the management served a charge-sheet on Shenoy and suspended him pending an enquiry. On May 11, 1966 the association demanded withdrawal of the said suspension and the said charge-sheet. Discussions took place on that day from 9.45 A.M. to 12.30 P.M. between the association and the management and the parties thereafter adjourned at 1 P.M. for lunch having decided to resume the talks at 2.30 P.M.
 At 2 P.M. the first shift ended and the workers of the second shift began to come in. The workmen of the first shift, however, stayed on and those of the second shift along with the workmen of the general shift joined them and all of them went on strike. The discussions which were resumed at 2.30 P.M. ended in an agreement at 5 P.M. and the workmen returned to work. On May 18, 1966 the assistant establishment officer submitted a complaint to the chief personnel officer alleging certain acts of misconduct by a crowd of workmen mentioning therein the names of five of them including the said three workmen. On May 25, 1966 charge-sheets alleging stoppage of work, abandoning the place of work, inciting clerks and officers of C 2 department to join the said strike, disorderly behaviour including intimidation and assault on one, A. Lakshman Rao, were served upon those five workmen.

 Correspondence thereafter ensued between the association and the management wherein the association protested against the management's decision to adopt disciplinary action against the said five workmen despite the agreement arrived at on May 11, 1966. Thereafter, a domestic enquiry was held on June 30, 1966 which was completed on July 27, 1966 when the enquiry officer made his report holding the said three workmen, Sandhyavoo, Prabhakar and Vasudevan, guilty of acts of misconduct under standing order 22 (2), (3), (13) and (18). He exonerated the other two workmen except on the charge of participating in the strike and loitering about under Cls (2) and (18) of the said standing order. On August 12, 1966, the management, agreeing with the report, passed orders of dismissal against the said three workmen which gave rise to the said reference. On March 23, 1966 the Labour Court gave its award holding that the said enquiry was validly held and that the management were justified in passing the said orders of dismissal.

3. Mr Ramamurthi, appearing for the association, challenged the said award on the following grounds (1) that the said association not having given a call for the said strike, the said charges were misconceived and the orders of dismissal were consequently not sustainable, (2) that the said strike, which was spontaneously staged by the workmen, was not illegal under Section 24 of the Industrial Disputes Act, nor was it in contravention of any law as required by Standing order 22 (2) and (3), (3) that the said disciplinary proceedings were in contravention of the agreement arrived at on May 11, 1966, and therefore, the dismissal following such disciplinary proceedings amounted to unfair labour practice; (4) that the orders of dismissal were passed on charges including that of intimidation though the misconduct of intimidation was not found proved by the enquiry officer and hence the said orders were illegal; (5) that to punish only three workmen when a large number of workmen had taken part in staging the strike and in inciting others to join it constituted victimisation; and (6) that the findings of the enquiry officer were based on no evidence or were perverse in that no reasonable body of persons could have arrived at them on the evidence before him.

4. The argument on which the first contention was based was that the settlement dated December 23, 1964 was arrived at between three parties, the management, the association and the workmen; and that the association being the union registered under the Trade Unions Act was an entity distinct from the workmen. Under Clause 5 of the settlement it was the association which was obliged to give four days' notice if it decided to resort to strike, go-slow tactics or other coercive action. The said clause did not impose any such obligation on the workmen. The workmen thus having no such obligation and the said strike being a spontaneous one, without any call for it from the association, it could not be said to be in breach of the said settlement, and therefore, would not fall under the mischief of Section 23 of the Act, the first condition of which is that to be illegal under Section 24 read with Section 23 it must be in breach of a contract. Standing Order 22 requires that participating in a strike would be misconduct if it is in breach of some provision of law. But as the strike was not in contravention of Section 23, it would not constitute misconduct under that standing order. Therefore, the charges against the said three workmen were misconceived and the orders of dismissal passed against them on the basis that they stood established were bad. In our view this argument cannot be sustained. The construction of Clause 5 of the settlement suggested by Mr. Ramamurthi is contrary to (a) the tenor of that settlement, and (b) the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act under which a settlement arrived at between an employer and a union representing the employees during conciliation proceedings is binding not only on such union but also the workmen whom it represents and (c) the principles of collective bargaining recognised by industrial law. The settlement was a package settlement by which the management and the workmen, through their association, arrived at certain terms in the presence of the conciliation officer. The settlement, besides settling the demands contained in the said charter of demands, sets out the necessity of harmonious relations and of co-operation between the management and the workmen so as to promote higher and better production. It was to achieve this object that direct action on the part of either of them such as a strike by the workmen and a lock out by the employer without notice was prohibited. Evidently the provision for four days' notice before any direct action was taken by either of them was provided for so that during that period if there was any grievance it could be ironed out by negotiation. Clause 5 of the settlement falls in two parts: (1) the substantive part, and (2) the corollary thereof. The first part inter alia provided that neither the association nor the management would resort to any direct action, such as strike, go-slow tactics or lock out or any such coercive action without giving to the other a four days' notice. The second part provided an undertaking on the part of the association to co-operate with the management, if there was any strike by workmen without any call therefor from the association, if the management were to take disciplinary action against the workmen. If the construction of Clause 5 suggested by Mr. Ramamurthi were to be accepted, it would lead to a surprising result, namely, that though a strike at the instance of the association required four days' notice, a strike by the workmen without any call from the association would not require any such notice and that the settlement left complete liberty to the workmen to launch a sudden strike. Such a construction appears on the very face of it contrary to the object and purpose of the settlement and particularly Clause 5 which envisaged a notice period of four days to enable the parties to resolve a dispute before direct action on its account is resorted to by either of them. The suggested construction is also untenable, for, surely the association irrespective of the workmen cannot by itself resort to any direct action. How can, for instance, the association resort to go-slow tactics without giving a call for it to the workmen? It is obvious, therefore, that Clause 5 does not contemplate any dichotomy between the association and the workmen as suggested by Mr. Ramamurthy, besides being repugnant to the principle that a settlement arrived at by the association must be regarded as one made by it in its representative character, and therefore, binding on the workmen. Therefore, although the settlement mentions in Clause 5 the management, workmen and the association, the expression 'workmen' therein was unnecessary, for, without that expression also it would have been as efficaciously binding on the workmen as on the association. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that the settlement mentions the management and the association on behalf of the workmen only as the parties thereto and the signatories thereto also are only the representatives of the two bodies. None of the workmen, nor any one separately representing them affixed his signature to it. If a lightning strike without notice is illegal under any provision of law (a question which we shall presently consider) standing Order 22 would come into operation and starting or joining such a strike and inciting others to join it would amount to misconduct for which disciplinary action by the management would be possible.

5 The next question is whether the management could validly take disciplinary action against the workmen concerned in respect of the said strike. The recitals of the said settlement show that as a result of the association presenting the said charter of demands negotiations between the management and the association took place on the said demands as also on certain proposals made by the management, that on their failure conciliation proceedings took place in the course of which the parties arrived at the said settlement which, as aforesaid, was signed by the representatives of the management and the association in the presence of the conciliation officer. The settlement thus was one under Sec. 12 (3) of the Industrial Disputes Act and R 59 of the Rules made thereunder by the Government of Mysore. It was to come into force as from January 1, 1965 and was to remain in force for three years and was thereafter to continue to be in force until its termination by either side. It is clear from Part I thereof that the object with which it was made was to promote harmonious relations and co-operation between the company, the association and the workmen so that the company may on the one hand be able to achieve increased production and on the other be in a position to afford maximum opportunity for continued employment. To accomplish these aims it was agreed that the company on its part should be managed on sound and progressive lines and the association and the workmen on their part should combat any wasteful practices adversely affecting workmanship and production and assist the management in apprehending persons responsible for acts such as theft, sabotage and other subversive activities. As cl (5) of the settlement itself states it was "in order to ensure continuation of smooth working" that the company and the association agreed that in no case would either of them resort to direct action such as lock outs, strikes, go-slow and other coercive action without four days' notice and that should one or more workmen resort to any such direct action without the approval of the association, the association would co-operate with the company in any disciplinary action which the company would take against such workmen. Then follows the agreement on the said demands of the workmen, and the proposals made by the management in the details of which it is not necessary to go, and finally, the agreement that the parties would adhere to the code of discipline and the grievance procedure annexed as annexure IV to the settlement. The said code also inter alia provided that there should be no strike or lock out without notice, that neither party should resort to coercion, intimidation, victimisation or go-slow tactics, that they would avoid litigation, sit-down and stay-in strikes and lock-outs and would not permit demonstrations which are not peaceful or rowdyism. Read in the context of the other provisions of Part I of the settlement of which it is part, cl 5 was intended to prohibit (a) direct action without notice by or at the instance of the association, and (b) strikes by workmen themselves without the approval of the association. The words "in no case" used in the clause emphasise that direct action by either party without notice should not be resorted to for any reason whatsoever. There can be no doubt that the settlement was one as defined by Section 2 (p) of the Industrial Disputes Act and was binding on the workmen under Section 18 (3) of the Act until it was validly terminated and was in force when the said strike took place. The strike was a lightening one, was resorted to without notice and was not at the call of the association and was, therefore, in breach of Clause 5.

6. Could the management then take disciplinary action against the concerned workmen in respect of such a strike? Standing Order 22 enumerates various acts constituting misconduct. Clauses 2, 3, 13 and 18 provide that striking either singly or in combination with others in contravention of the provisions of any Act, inciting any other workmen to strike in contravention of any law, riotous or disorderly behaviour or any act subversive of discipline and loitering within the company's premises while on duty or absence without permission from the appointed place of work constitute misconduct. The point is whether participation in and incitement to join the said strike were in respect of a strike which was in contravention of any Act or law. Section 23 provides that no workman employed in an industrial establishment shall go on strike in breach of contract and during the period in which a settlement is in operation, in respect of any of the matters covered by such a settlement. The prohibition against a workman going on strike thus envisages two conditions; (a) that it is in breach of a contract and (b) that it is during the period in which a settlement is in operation and is in respect of any of the matters covered by such settlement. The said settlement was a contract between the company and the association representing the workmen and it was in operation on May 11, 1966. But was it in respect of a matter covered by the settlement? Under Section 24 a strike is illegal if it is commenced in contravention of Section 23. Section 26 inter alia provides that any workman who commences, continues or otherwise acts in furtherance of a strike which is illegal under the Act shall be punished with imprisonment for a term extending to one month or with fine which may extend to Rs. 50 or with both. Section 27 provides punishment of a person who instigates or incites others to take part in or otherwise acts in furtherance of an illegal strike. The strike envisaged by these two sections is clearly the one which is illegal under Section 24 read with Section 23. A strike in breach of a contract during the operation of a settlement and in respect of a matter covered by that settlement falls under Section 23 (c). But whereas Section 26 punishes a workman for going on an illegal strike or for any act in furtherance of such a strike, Section 29 lays down the penalty for a person, not necessarily a workman, who commits breach of a term of a settlement which is binding under the Act. It is, therefore, an offence for any person on whom a settlement is binding under the Act to commit a breach thereof and the legislature has viewed it to be a more serious offence, for, it has a higher punishment of imprisonment extending to six months than the punishment for commencing etc. an illegal strike under Section 26. Thus, commencing a strike or acting in furtherance of it in breach of a settlement binding on the person who so commences it or acts in its furtherance is an offence punishable under S. 29.

7. It is clear that there is a distinction between a strike envisaged by Section 23 (c) in respect of a matter covered by a settlement and a strike in breach of a settlement envisaged by S. 29. That position was conceded by Mr. Gokhale for the management. But his argument was that the strike in question was, firstly in respect of a matter covered by the said settlement, namely, its prohibition without notice while that settlement was in force and secondly that it was in breach of that settlement, and consequently, it was illegal both under Section 24 and Section 29. This contention does not seem correct, firstly, because though an agreement not to resort to a strike without notice would be the subject matter of a settlement, a strike in contravention of such an agreement is not in respect of any of the matters covered by such settlement. Secondly, such a construction would mean as if Parliament intended to provide two different penalties, one under Section 26 and the other under Sec. 29, for the very same offence, one higher than the other, an intention difficult to attribute. The strike was in the matter of the suspension of the said Shenoy pending a domestic enquiry against him, a matter which obviously was not one of the matters covered by the said settlement. It was, therefore, not a strike illegal under Section 24 read with S. 23 (c). However, the strike was in contravention of Clause 5 of the said settlement and that settlement being binding on the workmen concerned and in operation at the time was punishable under Sec. 29, and therefore, illegal under that section.

8. The question whether a strike in contravention of a similar clause in a settlement was illegal arose in Tata Engineering and Locomotive Co Ltd v C B Mitter, C A No 633 of 1963, D/- 2-4-1964 (SC) As in Cl 5 of the settlement before us, the settlement there also provided that "in no case" would the parties thereto resort to direct action such as lock-outs, strikes, go-slow and other direct action without four days' notice. The strike in question was commenced in respect of a demand by a workman for a pair of gum-boots, a demand not covered by the settlement. It was common ground that the strike would not fall within the ambit of Section 24 but the controversy was whether it was otherwise illegal, the workmen's contention being that it was not, as the said clause against a strike without notice applied only to one declared for enforcing one or the other demands which formed the subject matter of the settlement and since the strike arose out of a matter not covered by the settlement, that clause was inapplicable. This Court negatived the contention and held that the words "in no case" in that clause meant a strike for whatever reason and though it was conceded that it was not illegal under Section 24, it was, nevertheless, held to be illegal not because it was in respect of a matter covered by the said settlement but because it was in contravention of the settlement which was binding on the concerned workmen which meant that the Court held the strike to be illegal under Section 29. In our view the decision in the present case must be the same. The strike was illegal not under Section 24 but because it was in contravention of the settlement binding on the workmen concerned. Consequently, standing order 22 would apply and participating in or inciting others to join such a strike would amount to misconduct for which the management were entitled to take disciplinary action.

9. But against that position the argument was that the agreement dated May 11, 1968 under which the workmen called off the strike also provided that no disciplinary action would be taken against any workmen in respect of the strike on that day and that therefore the proceedings taken against the three workmen in violation of that agreement amounted to unfair labour practice. The agreement was oral. According to Bernard, Secretary of the association, the agreement was that (a) the charges and the suspension order nassed against the said Shenoy should be withdrawn, (b) the Company should pay the wages for the 3½ hours period of the strike provided the workmen made good the loss of production during that period, and (c) the management would take no action against any one for going on strike. The evidence of Martin, the company's technical director, on the other hand, was that the company agreed only not to punish the said Shenoy and to consider paying wages for the hours of the strike. The Labour Court on this evidence held that the association failed to prove that the management had agreed not to take action against any of the workmen in connection with the strike though it may be that they might have agreed not to victimise any workman for participating in the strike. In fact, the management did not impose any penalty against any workman for joining the strike, not even against the three concerned workmen. This finding being purely one of fact and the Labour Court having given cogent reasons for it, we would not interfere with it without the utmost reluctance. We have been taken through the evidence and the correspondence between the parties but we fail to see any error on the part of the Labour Court in reaching that finding.

10. The next contention was that the orders of dismissal were bad as they took into account the charge of intimidation of the company's officers although the enquiry officer had found that that charge was not proved. The charge-sheets, etc M/4A, M/5A and M/6A against the three workmen alleged in express terms disorderly behaviour and intimidation. The report of the enquiry officer - against the said Vasudevan clearly stated that the enquiry officer accepted the evidence of the management's witnesses and that on that evidence all the charges against him stood proved. While summarising those charges he, no doubt, did not in so many words use the expression "intimidation". But the evidence which he, as aforesaid accepted, was that Vasudevan along with other workmen entered the G 2 department at about 3 P. M. on that day and thumping his band on the table of the said Lakshman Rao threatened that officer in the following words "now I am in the forefront (of the crowd) You cannot do anything. You ask your people to come out and you also come out. Otherwise you can see what we can do for you now". The said Lakshman Rao had also deposed that he was surrounded by the workers who started pushing and pulling him. The evidence of other officers was that as the crowd which forced its way into this department got unruly they were also forced to leave their places of work. The evidence against Prabhakar was that he too was in the forefront of that crowd which squeezed Lakshman Rao and some members thereof inflicted kicks on him. Similarly, there was the evidence of one Raja, the assistant personnel officer, and others that Sandhyavoo was one of those in the forefront of that crowd. According to Raja, Sandhyavoo tried to lift him from his seat with a view to force him to leave his table and finding that the crowd had become restive he left his place. Acceptance of this evidence by the enquiry officer must necessarily mean acceptance of the version of these officers that they were intimidated by the crowd which forced its way into their department led by these workmen. Though enquiry officer has not, in so many words used the expression "intimidation" his finding of disorderly behaviour must be held to include acts of intimidation.

11. Lastly, were the orders of dismissal against the three workmen acts of victimisation on the part of the management when admittedly a large number of workmen had staged the strike and also incited others to join that strike? The orders against the three workmen being identical in terms we take the order passed against Vasudevan as a specimen. That order sets out four acts of misconduct by him; (1) striking or stopping work, (2) inciting, (3) riotous and disorderly behaviour and (4) loitering about in the company's premises. Though each one of these acts, according to the order, was misconduct punishable with dismissal, the order states that so far as acts 1 and 4 were concerned, the management did not wish to take a serious view of them as a large number of "misguided" workmen had stopped work and left their places of work without permission. The management, therefore, took action only in respect of acts falling under Clauses 3 and 13 of Standing order 22 evidently for the reason that they considered incitement, intimidation and riotous and disorderly behaviour as "very grave in nature." We do not think that in taking this view the management discriminated against the three workmen concerned as against the rest or that they dismissed them with the object of victimising. The evidence in the enquiry clearly disclosed that when the crowd forced its way into the G. 2 department it was led by these three workmen, all of whom were in the forefront thereof and two of them had defiantly forced the officers to leave their tables. One of them had threatened as to what he and the others who were behind him in that crowd could do to him if he did not comply and the other had tried even to lift another officer from his chair to compel him to leave his place of work. In these circumstances the management cannot be blamed if they took a serious view of these acts of the three workmen concerned, who had taken up their position in the forefront of that crowd, a position indicative of their having led that crowd into that department and having acted as its leaders. An act of discrimination can only occur if amongst those equally situated an unequal treatment is meted out to one or more of them. Having been found to be the leaders of the crowd, action taken against them cannot on any principle be regarded as discriminatory or unequal. The decision in Burn and Co. Ltd. v. Workmen, 1959-1 Lab LJ 450 = (AIR 1959 SC 529) relied on by Mr. Ramamurthi has no bearing on the facts of this case and cannot assist him. Once a misconduct graver than that of the rest was found proved against these three workmen and for which the punishment is dismissal, victimisation cannot legitimately be attributed to the management. It is relevant in this connection to remember that so far as their participation in the strike and loitering about were concerned, no action was taken against these three workmen on the ground that those acts were common with those of the rest of the workmen. In view of these facts it is not understandable how the impugned orders of dismissal could be characterised as acts of victimisation. It is also not possible to say that the finding of incitement and disorderly behaviour of these three workmen was perverse or such as no reasonable body of persons could come to on the evidence on record on the ground only that the others also were guilty of those acts. For there would be nothing wrong if those who misled or misguided other workmen were selected for disciplinary action and not the victims of their persuasion, who in following their precept did similar acts.

12. In our judgment the orders of dismissal, based on the findings in the domestic enquiry which did not suffer from any infirmity, could not be successfully impeached, and therefore, the Labour Court was right in upholding them. The appeal fails and is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

J C SHAH AND A. N. CROVER, JJ.

S Kartar Singh, Appellant v. Chaman Lal and others, Respondents.

Civil Appeal No 661 of 1966, D/- 14-3-1969

(A) Houses and Rents — Delhi Rent Control Act (59 of 1958), Sections 14 (1) (h) and 57 (2) First proviso — Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act (38 of 1952), Section 13 (1) (h) — Effect of first proviso on proceedings pending under 1952 Act.

The first proviso to Section 57 (2) of the new Act (59 of 1958) must be read harmoniously with the substantive provisions of sub-section (2) and the only way of harmonising the two is to read the expression "shall have regard to the provisions of this Act" as merely meaning that where the new Act had slightly modified or clarified the previous provisions those modifications and clarifications should be applied. These words did not take away what was provided by sub-section (2) and ordinarily the old Act (38 of 1952) would apply to pending proceedings.

(Para 7)

The only change that was made in Section 14 (1) (h) of 1958 Act was that the word 'suitable' before the word 'residence' appearing in S 13 (1) (h) of 1952 Act was omitted. However it was held in the facts of the case, that whether S 13 (1) (h) of old Act or Section 14 (1) (h) of new is applied the result, would be the same in the instant case.

(Para 8)

(B) Houses and Rents — Delhi Rent Control Act (59 of 1958) Ss. 14 (1) (h) — Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act (38 of 1952), Section 13 (1) (h) — Premises let out to predecessor-in-interest of tenants for residence-cum-business or professional purposes — Suit for eviction under Section 13 (1) (h) — No eviction could be ordered merely on ground that tenants had built a large residential house.

*(Civil Revn No 92-D of 1962, D/- 8-12-1964—Punjab at Delhi)

Where the premises had been let out to the predecessors-in-interest of the tenants not for residential purpose alone but also for business or professional purposes, no eviction could be ordered under the provisions of Section 13 (1) (h) of the Act of 1952 or Section 14 (1) (h) of the new Act of 1958 merely by showing that the tenant had built a large residential house. Civil Revn No. 92-D of 1962, D/- 8-12-1964, (Punjab at Delhi), Affirmed. (Paras 8, 9)

Where the original tenant was one who was in occupation of premises which were used for a composite purpose, namely, residence and profession, there could, be no eviction merely by acquisition of vacant possession of a residence elsewhere by such a tenant and the position would be the same with regard to his heirs and legal representatives. Section 14 (1) (h) of the new Act could apply only where a tenant was in occupation of a premises which were only residential. (Para 9)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 136 — Concurrent findings of fact — Eviction suit — Concurrent findings of lower Courts that premises were taken for residential-cum-business purposes — Finding being one of fact must be accepted as final — (Houses and Rents — Delhi Rent Control Act (59 of 1958), S. 14 (1) (h).)

Mr S C Manchanda, Senior Advocate (M/s S. K. Mehta and K. L. Mehta, Advocates, with him), for Appellant, Mr Bisban Narain, Senior Advocate (M/s I S Sawhney and M. R. Chabra, Advocates, with him), for Respondents

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Punjab High Court (Circuit Bench at New Delhi) dismissing a petition for revision directed against the concurrent judgments of the courts below dismissing the action for eviction filed by the appellant against the respondents from a premises on Ajmal Khan Road Karol Bagh, New Delhi.

2 The facts may be succinctly stated. By means of a rent deed dated February 13, 1950 the appellant, who is the owner of the suit premises inducted as a tenant Labha Mal Arora, now deceased who was a practising Advocate. Clauses (2) and (6) of the rent deed were in the following terms:

"2. That the tenant agrees to use the property for his residence.

6. That the tenant shall not assign or sublet the abovesaid property or any part thereof without the written consent of the landlord or utilise the property for any purpose other than that mentioned above."

3. On the same date a letter Ex. D-2 was written by the appellant to the late Labha Mal Arora saying:

"As per our oral talk regarding your tenancy for my house No. 6/64, I have no objection your having your professional office along with residence there provided it is not inconsistent with the provisions of Delhi Improvement Trust Act."

It appears and it has been so found, that Labha Mal Arora who had his office at a different place shifted the same to the suit premises where he was residing with his family. He died in the year 1952. Till 1952 the premises were being used only for residence by his sons and widow. In August 1957 Chaman Lal respondent No. 1, who qualified himself as a legal practitioner, started having an office in the premises. It would appear that the other son respondent No. 3 also started practising as a lawyer in the same premises some time later. On 21st November, 1957 the appellant served a notice on the sons and widow of the deceased Labha Mal Arora that it had been learnt that they had constructed a double-storeyed building in Naiwala Karol Bagh and that since the suit premises were required bona fide for the personal residence of the appellant they should shift to their house and vacate the rented premises. This was followed by a second notice to the same effect.

4. As the possession of the premises was not delivered the appellant instituted a suit for ejectment against the respondents under the Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952 (hereinafter called the old Act). Two grounds were taken for seeking eviction. One was that the respondents had built a large residential house and were liable to be ejected under Section 13 (1) (h) of the old Act. The second was that the premises were required bona fide for personal use. It may be mentioned that the second ground was abandoned in the trial court. The suit was contested by the respondents on the ground that the late Labha Mal Arora had taken the premises on rent for residence as well as for an office for professional purposes and the premises had been used as residence-cum-office. For this reason it was asserted that the construction of a residential house by the respondents did not furnish a ground for eviction.

5. During the pendency of the suit the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 (hereinafter called the new Act) came into force. Section 14 (1) (h) which was equivalent to Section 13 (1) (h) of the old Act (which?) contained the word 'suitable' which was omitted as it appeared before the word "residence" in S. 13 (1) (h): the relevance and significance of this omission will be noticed presently. The trial court relied inter alia on the letter Ext. D-2 and the statement of Chaman Lal respondent according to whom two rooms were used by the late Labha Mal Arora as his office and another one room was being used by his clerk and held that the premises had been let for "residence-cum-business purposes". The argument that the late Labha Mal Arora had only been granted a licence to use the premises for professional purposes and that the licence came to an end on his death was repelled. It was found that the respondents had built a residential house, and since the premises in suit had been let out to their predecessor-in-interest not for residential purpose alone but also for business purposes no eviction could be ordered under the provisions of Section 13 (1) (h) of the old Act or 14 (1) (h) of the new Act. The Additional Senior Sub-Judge dismissed the appeal preferred by the appellant in agreement with the decision of the trial court. The following portion from his judgment relating to the finding with regard to the purpose for which the premises had been let out to the late Labha Mal Arora may be reproduced:

"It is in evidence that prior to taking the premises in suit on rent from the appellant, Labha Mal deceased, was having his professional office as an advocate in Sadar Bazar, Delhi and on taking the premises in suit on rent he had shifted his office in the suit premises. This fact is fully supported by the statement of Shri Chaman Lal, respondent No. 1, and the notices Ex. D. W. 9/1 and D. W. 9/2 issued by Shri Labha Mal from the suit premises. Shri Chaman Lal has stated that out of the five rooms of the suit premises, two rooms were used by his deceased father as office. From the above also it is proved that the suit premises were let by the appellant to Shri Labha Mal deceased for residence-cum-business purposes."

On the question of the ambit and scope of Section 13 (1) (h) of the old Act the learned Judge expressed the opinion that it would be unreasonable to hold that a tenancy which had been created both for purposes of residence and carrying on of a profession could be successfully terminated merely by showing that the tenants had acquired a suitable residence.

6. The appellant approached the High Court on the revisional side. J S Bedi J considered the rent deed Ext P-3 and the letter Ex D-2 as also the other evidence and came to the same conclusion at which the courts below had arrived. Reliance was placed on the additional fact that when the suit was instituted the premises were being used by Chaman Lal both for purposes of residence and office.

7. Before dealing with the contentions raised on behalf of the appellant it is necessary to refer to Section 13 (1) (h) of the old Act and Section 14(1) (h) and Sec 57 of the new Act. Section 13(1)(h) of the old Act contained a provision that if the Court was satisfied inter alia that the tenant had whether before or after the commencement of the Act built, acquired vacant possession of or been allotted a suitable residence it could order ejectment. In Section 14 (1) (h) of the new Act, the only change that was made was that the word "suitable" before the word "residence" was omitted. Under S. 57 of the new Act notwithstanding the repeal of the old Act all suits and other proceedings pending under that Act were to be continued and disposed of in accordance with provisions of the old Act. According to the first proviso to sub-sec (2) the court or other authority "shall have regard to the provisions of this Act". In Karam Singh v. Shri Pratap Chand, 1964-4 SCR 647 = (AIR 1964 SC 1305) this Court had to consider the effect of what was contained in Section 57 of the new Act. It was held that the effect of the first proviso to Section 57 (2) was that pending proceedings would continue under the old Act with this addition that where the new Act had slightly modified or clarified the previous provisions those modifications and clarifications would govern the case. Similarly in Brij Kishore and others v. Vishwa Mitter Kapur, AIR 1965 SC 1574 it was laid down that the first proviso to Section 57 (2) of the new Act must be read harmoniously with the substantive provisions of sub-section (2) and the only way of harmonising the two was to read the expression "shall have regard to the provisions of this Act" as merely meaning that where the new Act had slightly modified or clarified the previous provisions those modifications and clarifications should be applied. These words did not take away what was provided by sub-section (2) and ordinarily the old Act would apply to pending proceedings.

8. It has been contended by Mr S C. Manchanda for the appellant that the new section would be applicable as no radical departure has been made in S 14 (1) (h) by omission of the word "suitable" and that there was only slight modification or clarification of the previous provision, namely, Section 13 (1) (h). In our opinion whether Section 13 (1) (h) of the old Act or Section 14 (1) (h) of the new Act is applied the result, as will be presently seen, will be the same in the instant case.

9. Coming to the question whether the suit premises were taken by the late Labha Mal Arora for residence only or for residence as well as for use as office for carrying on his professional work of a legal practitioner, it may be observed that the concurrent finding of the court below is that the premises had been taken for residential-cum-business or professional purposes. That finding being one of fact must be accepted as final. It would, therefore, seem that the decision of this Court in Dr Gopal Dass Verma v. Dr. S. K. Bhardwaj, (1962) 2 SCR 678 at p 685 = (AIR 1963 SC 337 at p 340) can be appositely applied. In that case it was held that a tenant could not be ejected under Section 13 (1) (h) because the tenancy of premises let out or used for residence and carrying on of profession could not be terminated merely by showing that the tenant had acquired a suitable residence. There the premises had been let out to a doctor who was an ear, nose and throat specialist. It was found that the premises had been used by the tenant for professional as well as residential purposes with the consent of the landlord. The case, therefore fell outside S 13 (1) (e) but even under S 13 (1) (h) eviction could not be ordered, this is what was said in that connection.

If the premises from which ejectment is sought are used not only for residence but also for profession how could Section 13 (1) (h) come into operation? One of the purposes for which the tenancy is acquired is professional use and that cannot be satisfied by the acquisition of premises which are suitable for residence alone, and it is the suitability for residence alone which is postulated by Section 13 (1) (h). Therefore, in our opinion, it would be unreasonable to hold that the tenancy which has been created or used both for residence and profession can be successfully terminated merely by showing that the tenant has acquired a suitable residence."

In the above case this Court further held that Section 2 (g) of the old Act which defined the word "premises" referred to three kinds of user to which the premises can be put to i. e. residence, commerce and any other purpose. This necessarily included residence and commerce combined. Since it was shown that the premises had been let both for residence and for commercial purposes it did not follow that the premises ceased to be premises under Section 2 (g); they continued to be premises under the last clause of that provision. The definition of 'premises' in the new Act is contained in S. 2 (i) and it is the same as in S. 2 (g) of the old Act. The word "tenant" is defined by Section 2 (1) of the new Act to mean "any person by whom or on whose account or behalf the rent of any premises is or but for a special contract would be, payable.....". Having regard to Section 14 (1) (h) of the new Act the original tenant in the present case was one who was in occupation of premises which were used, for a composite purpose, namely, residence and profession. There could, therefore, be no eviction merely by acquisition of vacant possession of a residence by such a tenant and the position would be the same with regard to his heirs and legal representatives, the present respondents. It is quite clear that Section 14 (1) (h) can apply only where a tenant is in occupation of a premises which are only residential; then alone he would have to go if he acquires or has residential accommodation of his own.

10. Mr. Manchanda has next contended that the decision of this Court in Dr. Gopal Das Verma's case, 1962-2 SCR 678 = (AIR 1963 SC 337) is distinguishable because it appeared from various facts that the dominant intention was to use the premises as a nursing home. He submits that in the present case the dominant intention was to use the premises as residence and the late Labha Mal Arora was merely given permission or licence which was of a personal nature to have his office as well there. We are unable to find that any test of dominant intention was applied in Dr. Gopal Das Verma's case, 1962-2 SCR 678 = (AIR 1963 SC 337).

11. The position in England is different where premises are let partly for business purposes and partly for residence. There the statutory provisions lay down that where a dwelling is let partly for business purposes and partly for residence, the Rent Act applies to the whole.* Moreover where there is no covenant as to user and the question is what user was contemplated, the Court will infer what use was contemplated by the tenancy agreement; the test was the "main purpose" or "predominant intention" or "the prevailing contemplation" or "a preponderating contemplation for the letting" (ibid p. 69). We are unable to derive any assistance from the English cases on the point.

12. Lastly Mr. Manchanda sought to raise the question of the permission contained in the letter Ext. D-2 being a licence which was personal to late Labha Mal Arora and which should be deemed to have come to an end on his death. It is further pointed out that after his death for a number of years the respondents used the premises purely for residence. In view of the finding of the courts below that the premises had been let to the predecessor-in-interest of the respondents for residence-cum-business or profession, this submission cannot be entertained.

13. For all the above reasons this appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs. LGC/D.V.C. Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeal No. 53 of 1969, D/- 12-3-1969.

IM/IM/B774/69/D

(A) T. P. Act (1882), Section 111 — Surrender of lease — Agreement as to reduction or increase in rent — Inference of surrender of existing lease and grant of new lease cannot be drawn — Agreement must show intention to terminate old tenancy. (Para 5)

(B) Houses and Rents — Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act (17 of 1950), Section 13 (1) (e) — Realisation of rent by landlord after subletting of premises — Permission for subletting cannot be inferred — Knowledge of subletting is essential. (Para 6)

(C) Houses and Rents — Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act (17 of 1950), Section 13 (1) (e) — Subletting without permission of landlord — Eviction is proper — Premises whether sublet before or after commencement of Act is immaterial.

If the "tenant" has sublet the premises without the permission of the landlord either before or after the coming into force of the Act, he is not protected from eviction under Section 13 (1) (e), and it matters not that he had the right to sublet the premises under Section 103 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act. This becomes clear upon construction of Cl (e) of Section 13 (1). The relevant words in Clause (e) are "has sub-let." The present perfect tense contemplates a completed event connected in some way with the present time. The words take within their sweep any sub-letting which was made in the past and has continued up to the present time. It does not matter that the sub-letting was either before or after the Act came into force. All such sub-lettings are within the purview of Clause (e). (Paras 9, 10, 11)

(D) Civil P. C. (1908), Sections 100, 101 — Finding by lower Courts that increase in rent did not import new demise — Finding cannot be interfered in second appeal. (Para 5)

(E) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 14, Rule 2; Order 6, Rule 2 — Denial by tenant that he has sub-let premises — No pleading or issue that permission to sub-let taken — Court has no jurisdiction to decide whether permission was granted. (Para 6)

BACHAWAT, J.: This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment by a landlord against a tenant. The defendant is the tenant of six shops belonging to Thakurji Shri Dwarkadheesbji installed in the temple at Chaura Raasta, Japur. Devendra Prasad is the adhkari or manager of the temple. He gave a notice to the defendant to quit the shop on August 1 1957. On February 28, 1958, the deity and Devendra Prasad filed a suit against the defendant claiming recovery of possession of the six shops and Rs. 1006 on account of arrears of rent. The suit was governed by the Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1950 (Act No. XVII of 1950). The plaintiffs asked for ejectment of the defendant on the ground that he had sub-let the six shops, the other grounds of ejectment were not established, and it is not necessary to mention them. The courts below concurrently found that Devendra Prasad as the adhkari of the temple was entitled to give the notice to quit and to maintain the suit.

2. The trial court held that (1) all the six shops were sub-let by the defendant; (2) the sub-letting was with the permission of the landlord and (3) the notice to quit was waived by acceptance of rent subsequently accrued due. Accordingly, the trial court dismissed the suit so far as it claimed ejectment and passed a decree for Rs. 1006 on account of arrears of rent. The plaintiffs filed an appeal against the decree. The District Judge, Japur City, dismissed the appeal. The plaintiffs filed a second appeal against the decree. The High Court held that (1) there was one integrated tenancy of all the six shops; (2) four shops were sub-let with the permission of the landlord, (3) two shops were sub-let without the permission of the landlord towards the end of 1947; (4) the tenant having sub-let a part of the premises without the permission of the landlord the ground of eviction under Clause (e) of Section 13 (1) was made out and the landlord was entitled to a decree for possession of all the six shops and (5) there was no waiver of the notice to quit. Accordingly, the High Court allowed the appeal and passed a decree for eviction of the defendant from the six shops. The present appeal has been filed by the defendant after obtaining special leave.

3. Counsel for the appellant conceded that there was no waiver of the notice to quit by acceptance of rent or otherwise. The points arising for determination in this appeal are: (1) was there one integrated tenancy of all the six shops? (2) were the two shops sub-let without the permission of the landlord towards the end of 1947? And (3) is the subletting a ground of ejectment under clause (e) of Section 13 (1) of the Rent Act?

4. As to the first question, we find that four shops were let to the defendant in 1944 and the other two shops on the northern side of the staircase of the temple were let to him in 1945. The rent of the four shops was Rs. 150 per month. The rent of the other two shops was Rs. 65 per month. In paragraph 5 of the plaint it was pleaded that in 1953, the defendant agreed to pay a consolidated rent of Rs. 251/8/- per month for all the six shops and to vacate them by July 31, 1957. In paragraph 5 of the written statement the defendant denied this contract and alleged that in 1953 there was only an enhancement of rent. The first two courts found that in 1953 there was no new contract of tenancy, that there was only an increase of rent and that the other terms and conditions of the tenancy remained unaltered. This finding was not vitiated by any error of law.

5. A mere increase or reduction of rent does not necessarily import the surrender of the existing lease and the grant of a new tenancy. As stated in Hill and Redman's Law of Landlord and Tenant, 14th Ed., Art. 385. p. 493:—

"But a surrender does not follow from a mere agreement made during the tenancy for the reduction or increase of rent, unless there is some special reason to infer a new tenancy, where, for instance, the parties make the change in the rent in the belief that the old tenancy is at an end."

In the present case the first two courts on a review of the entire evidence came to the conclusion that the increase of rent did not import a new demise. This finding of fact was binding on the High Court in second appeal. The High Court was in error in holding that there was one integrated tenancy of the six shops.

6. As to the second question the defendant denied that he sub-let the two shops. The Courts below concurrently found that this denial was false and that he sub-let the two shops to his brother-in-law Ram Gopal. There was no pleading nor any issue that the sub-letting of the two shops was made with the permission of the landlord. It was not the case of the defendant at any stage of the trial that he had obtained the permission of the landlord for sub-letting the two shops. In the absence of any pleading and any issue on this point the first two courts were in error in holding that the two shops were sub-let with the permission of the landlord. The permission of the landlord for the sub-letting is not established from the mere fact that the landlord realised rent after the sub-letting in the absence of proof that the landlord had then clear knowledge of the sub-lease.

7. The date of the sub-letting of the two shops is not mentioned in the plaint. In the absence of any pleading and any issue on this question the High Court was in error in recording the finding that the two shops were sub-let towards the end of 1947 after the Jaipur Rent Control Order 1947 came into force. We can only say that the sub-letting was sometime after 1945.

8. As to the third question: Section 13 (1) of the Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1950 provides:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any law or contract, no Court shall pass any decree, or make any order, in favour of a landlord, whether in execution of a decree or otherwise, evicting the tenant so long as he is ready and willing to pay rent therefor to the full extent allowable by this Act, unless it is satisfied—"

The sub-section then sets out several grounds of ejectment under twelve main heads. Clause (e) mentions the following ground:—

"that the tenant had assigned, sub-let or otherwise parted with the possession of, the whole or any part of the premises without the permission of the landlord." The appellant's contention is that sub-letting before the Act came into force is not within the purview of clause (e). The High Court held that the two shops were sub-let after October 15, 1947 when the Jaipur Rent Control Order, 1947 came into force, that the sub-letting was a ground of ejectment under Paragraph 8 (1) (b) (ii) of that Order and that the tenant's liability for eviction on this ground continued after the promulgation of the Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1950. With regard to this line of reasoning it is sufficient to say that the plaintiffs have not established that the sub-letting was after October 15, 1947. The case must be decided on the footing that on the date of the sub-letting, no Rent Control legislation was in force

9. The question whether a sub-letting before the coming into force of the Act is within the purview of clause (e) of Section 13 (1) depends upon the construction of that clause. The relevant words are "has sub-let". The present perfect tense contemplates a completed event connected in some way with the present time. The words take within their sweep any sub-letting which was made in the past and has continued up to the present time. It does not matter that the sub-letting was either before or after the Act came into force. All such sub-lettings are within the purview of clause (e).

10. Sections 26 and 27 (1) of the Act throw considerable light on the construction of Section 13 (1). They are as follows—

"26 No decree for the eviction of a tenant from any premises in areas to which this Act extends for the time being, passed before the date of commencement of this Act shall in so far as it relates to the eviction of such tenant be executed against him, as long as this Act, remains in force therein, except on any of the grounds mentioned in Section 13 and under the circumstances specified in this Act

27. (1) In all suits for eviction of tenants from any premises in areas to which this Act has been extended under Section 2, pending on the date specified in the notification under that section, no decree for eviction shall be passed except on one or more of the grounds mentioned in Section 13 and under the circumstances specified in this Act"

Section 26 bars the execution of a decree for eviction passed before the commencement of the Act except on any of the grounds mentioned in Section 13 and under the circumstances specified in the Act. Likewise, Section 27 (1) bars the passing of a decree for eviction in a pending suit except on one or more of the grounds under Section 13 and under the circumstances specified in the Act. Sections 26 and 27 (1) clearly contemplate that the grounds of eviction mentioned in Section 13 may have arisen before the Act came into force.

11. The argument that Section 13 (1) (e) takes away vested rights and should not be given a retrospective effect is based on fallacious assumptions. Apart from the Rent Act the landlord is entitled to eject the tenant on the expiry of the period mentioned in the notice to quit. Section 13 (1) protects the tenant from eviction except in certain specified cases. If one of the grounds of ejection is made out the tenant does not qualify for protection from eviction. We find no reason for presuming that Section 13 (1) (e) is not intended to apply to sub-lettings before the Act came into force. If the "tenant" has sub-let the premises without the permission of the landlord either before or after the coming into force of the Act, he is not protected from eviction under Section 13 (1) (e), and it matters not that he had the right to sub-let the premises under Section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act.

12. The plaintiffs have thus established the ground of eviction under Section 13 (1) (e) with regard to the two shops on the northern side of the staircase of the temple. With regard to the four other shops the Courts below concurrently found that they were sub-let with the permission of the landlord. In our opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for ejection of the defendant from the two shops and the claim for eviction from the other four shops should be dismissed.

13. In the result, the appeal is allowed in part. The decree passed by the High Court for eviction of the defendant from the four shops is set aside and the suit in so far as it claims eviction from the four shops is dismissed. The decree passed by the High Court for eviction of the defendant from the other two shops on the northern side of the staircase of the temple mentioned in Paragraph 4 of the plaint is affirmed. Parties will pay and bear their own costs throughout, in this Court and in all the Courts below. The defendant will have one month's time to vacate the two shops. BNP/D V C.

Constitution of India, Article 311 (2) — Domestic enquiry — Report by Enquiry Officer regarding findings and recommending mode of punishment — Supply of report along with show cause notice to delinquent — Part of report relating to punishment cannot be withheld.

The Enquiry Officer is under no obligation or duty to make any recommendations in the matter of punishment to be imposed on the servant against whom the departmental enquiry is held, and his function merely is to conduct the enquiry in accordance with law and to submit the record along with his findings or conclusions on the various charges which have been preferred against the delinquent servant. But if the Enquiry Officer proceeds to recommend that a particular penalty or punishment should be imposed in the light of his findings or conclusions such recommendations form part of the record and constitute appropriate material for consideration of the Government and therefore it is essential that that material should not be withheld from him so that he could, while showing cause against the proposed punishment, make a proper representation. The entire object of supplying a copy of the report of the Enquiry Officer is to enable the delinquent officer to satisfy the punishing authority that he is innocent of the charges framed against him and that even if the charges are held to have been proved the punishment proposed to be inflicted is unduly severe. If the Enquiry Officer has also made recommendations in the matter of punishment that is likely to affect the mind of the punishing authority even with regard to penalty or punishment to be imposed on such officer. The requirement of a reasonable opportunity, therefore, would not be satisfied unless the entire report of the Enquiry Officer including his views in the matter of punishment are disclosed to the delinquent servant. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by special leave against a judgment of the Gujarat High Court. The sole point for determination is whether omission to supply to the first respondent a copy of the recommendations of the Enquiry officer in the matter of punishment, although a copy of his report containing his findings on the various charges was supplied, amounted to a failure to provide reasonable opportunity of making a representation against the penalty proposed within the meaning of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution.

2. The first respondent joined the Baroda State Service in 1937. He was absorbed as a Sales Tax Officer, Class III in the former State of Bombay after merger. In December 1962 (Sic) he was served with a charge-sheet containing allegations of attempt to obtain illegal gratification from certain cloth dealers. A departmental enquiry was held and on March 15, 1964 (Sic) he was dismissed from service. He challenged the order of dismissal by means of a civil suit. In May 1958 the City Civil Court decreed the suit holding that the order of dismissal was illegal. He was reinstated with effect from October 10, 1958. He was, however, suspended with immediate effect as a fresh enquiry was proposed to be held against him under Rule 55 of the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules. A fresh charge-sheet was served on him containing the same allegations as on the previous occasion. In December 1959 a notice was served on him by the Government calling upon him to show cause why punishment of removal should not be imposed on him. Along with the show cause notice the report of the Enquiry Officer containing his findings was sent to him. The Enquiry Officer had also made certain recommendations regarding the punishment which in his opinion should be inflicted on the first respondent. No copy of these recommendations, however, was furnished to him. In March 1960 it was proposed that the first respondent be allocated to the State of Gujarat in view of the bifurcation of the erstwhile State of Bombay. In September 1960 he was removed from service by an order passed by the State Government. The first respondent then filed a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution challenging the order of removal.

3. One of the points which was raised before the High Court was that the failure to send a copy of the report of the Enquiry Officer containing his recommendations in the matter of punishment vitiated the proceedings. The High Court expressed the view that since the recommendations were a part of the appropriate material for the consideration of the Government in the matter of imposition of punishment on the first respondent, he was entitled to a copy of those recommendations at the time when he was called upon to show cause. It was consequently held that the proceedings were vitiated from the stage of the show cause notice relating to punishment. The order of removal was set aside but it was made clear that the Government would be at liberty to issue a fresh show cause notice regarding the proposed punishment and to take appropriate proceedings from that stage onwards if it chose to do so. The State has filed the present appeal.

4. Learned counsel for the State urged that the Enquiry Officer was not required to make any recommendation about the punishment which was to be imposed on the first respondent on the charges against him which had been found to have been proved. It was pointed out that the sole duty of the Enquiry Officer was to give his conclusions or findings on the charges which he was called upon to enquire into and the recommendations which he made in the matter of punishment were wholly redundant and irrelevant. For that reason it was not at all necessary that the first respondent should have been supplied a copy of the recommendations relating to punishment. In this connection reference has been made to the Bombay Civil Services (Conduct, Discipline and Appeal Rules) wherein the procedure has been laid down when an order of dismissal, removal or reduction in rank has to be passed on a member of the service. According to the Rule the proceedings shall contain sufficient record of the evidence and a statement of the findings and the grounds thereof. There are similar provisions in Rule 55 of the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules.

5. In Union of India v. H. C. Goel, 1964-4 SCR 718 = (AIR 1964 SC 364), it has been observed that unless the statutory rules or the specific order under which an officer is appointed to hold an inquiry so requires the Enquiry Officer need not make any recommendations as to the punishment which may be imposed on the delinquent officer in case the charges framed against him are held proved at the enquiry, if however, the Enquiry Officer makes any recommendations the said recommendations, like his findings on the merits, are intended merely to supply appropriate material for the consideration of the Government. Neither the findings, nor the recommendations are binding on the Government. Now it is correct that the Enquiry Officer is under no obligation or duty to make any recommendations in the matter of punishment to be imposed on the servant against whom the departmental enquiry is held, and his function merely is to conduct the enquiry in accordance with law and to submit the record along with his findings or conclusions on the various charges which have been preferred against the delinquent servant. But if the Enquiry Officer proceeds to recommend that a particular penalty or punishment should be imposed in the light of his findings or conclusions the question is whether the officer concerned should be informed about his recommendations. In other words since such recommendations form part of the record and constitute appropriate material for consideration of the Government it would be essential that that material should not be withheld from him so that he could, while showing cause against the proposed punishment, make a proper representation. The entire object of supplying a copy of the report of the Enquiry Officer is to enable the delinquent officer to satisfy the punishing authority that he is innocent of the charges framed against him and that even if the charges are held to have been proved the punishment proposed to be inflicted is unduly severe. If the Enquiry Officer has also made recommendations in the matter of punishment that is likely to affect the mind of the punishing authority even with regard to penalty or punishment to be imposed on such officer. The requirement of a reasonable opportunity, therefore, would not be satisfied unless the entire report of the Enquiry Officer including his views in the matter of punishment are disclosed to the delinquent servant.

6. We have no manner of doubt that the decision of the High Court must be upheld in the above view of the matter. The appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

must act under Section 211. Under Section 65 of the Code if the Collector does not inform the applicant of his decision on the application within a period of three months the permission applied for shall be deemed to have been granted.
This section shows that a period of three months is considered ample for the Collector to make up his mind and beyond that the legislature thinks that the matter is so urgent that permission shall be deemed to have been granted. Reading Sections 211 and 65 together it is clear that the Commissioner must exercise his revi-sional powers within a few months of the order of the Collector. This is reasonable time because after the grant of the permission for building purposes the occupant is likely to spend money on starting building operations at least within a few months from the date of the permission. Further the Commissioner should indicate his reasons, however briefly, so that an aggrieved party may carry the matter further if so advised. The Commissioner in these proceedings cannot decide questions of title against occupant.

The following Judgment of the Court
was delivered by

SIKRI, J.: This appeal by special leave is directed against the judgment of the High Court of Gujarat (Vakil J.) allowing the application filed by Patel Raghav Natha, respondent before us and hereinafter referred to as the petitioner, and quashing the order dated October 12, 1961, passed by the Commissioner, Rajkot Division. The Commissioner by this order had set aside the order of the Collector, dated July 2, 1960, granting permission to the petitioner to use some land in Survey No. 417 for non-agricultural purposes.

2. In order to appreciate the contentions raised before us it is necessary to set out a few facts. The petitioner was a resident of the State of Rajkot and at an auction effected by the State he acquired on or about September 22, 1938, agricultural land bearing survey No. 417 which in all measured about 12 acres and 12 gunthas. After some acquisitions by the State out of this survey number he was left with 2 acres and 10 gunthas of agricultural land. On October 20, 1958, the petitioner applied to the Collector for permission to convert this land to non-agricultural use, under Section 65 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, hereinafter referred to as the Code. This petition was first rejected by the Collector

but the Divisional Commissioner remanded the matter to the Collector. On remand, the then Collector of Rajkot, after holding an enquiry, granted permission to the petitioner to use the land for non-agricultural use by his order dated July 2, 1960. Pursuant to this order a sanad was issued by the Collector to the petitioner on July 27, 1960. It appears that the sanad was amended on November 3, 1960 and December 1, 1960. The sanad was in form M1 and a number of conditions were appended to the sanad. Condition 6 of the main sanad provided that "save as herein provided, the grant shall be subject to the provisions of the said Code." The special conditions originally included a condition that the land shall be used exclusively for constructing residential houses (condition 5) but this condition was altered in November, 1960.

3. It appears that the Municipal Committee of Rajkot had objected to the grant of permission before the Collector when a sketch of the land was sent to the Municipality. The objections as they appear from the order of the Collector granting the sanad were directed against the accuracy of the sketch, showing the northern and the western corners of the Ramkrishna Ashram, and regarding the boundaries and situation of the roads in Survey Nos 417 and 418. The Collector had overruled these objections.

4. The Municipal Committee approached the Commissioner to exercise powers under Section 211 of the Code. The Commissioner noted the objections of the Municipality and after reciting the objections and the arguments of the learned counsel for the petitioner and after inspecting the site, observed

"From this inspection the contentions of the Municipality as to the existence of the various roads as well as the nature of the Kharaba land have been proved beyond doubt.

In light of the above arguments as well as the site inspection and the papers of the case, I set aside the order of the Collector granting N.A. Permission. I consider, on weighing all evidence cited above, that the land does not belong to Shri Raghav Natha." It is this order which has been quashed by the High Court.

5. The following grounds were urged before the learned Judge—

(1) The Commissioner or the State Government had no authority under S. 211 of the Code to revise the order of the Collector so as to affect the agreement or sanad granted to him.

(2) The Commissioner's order is not a speaking order as no reasons are given by him for setting aside the Collector's order and, therefore, it should be quashed.

(3) The question of title to the land was not in controversy at all before the Collector and, therefore, it was not open to the Commissioner to permit the Municipality to agitate that question and the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to decide that question.

(4) In case the above points are not accepted, the order of the Commissioner is bad even on merits as the Commissioner had erred in law in allowing the questions to be agitated before him which were not agitated before the Collector and which involved considerations which were completely foreign to those which were actually before the Collector.

6. While dealing with ground No. 1 the learned Judge held that the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to pass an order which would nullify the sanad, and that the sanad was binding on both the parties till it was set aside in due course of law. On the second ground he held that there was some force in the submission. But he observed

"But at the same time if I had to decide this case on this contention raised, I may not have interfered only on this ground with the decision of the Commissioner."

On the third ground he found that it was true that the question of title was agitated by the Municipal Committee for the first time before the Commissioner, though it was primarily for the petitioner to show that he was an occupant within the meaning of Section 65 of the Code. But then the learned Judge decided not to enter into the merits of the case as he had come to the clear conclusion that the Commissioner had no authority to pass the order that he did under Section 211 of the Code.

7. The learned counsel for the State of Gujarat, Mr. Dhebar, challenges the decision of the High Court that the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to pass the order dated October 12, 1961. The relevant provisions of the Code and the Land Revenue Rules, 1921, hereinafter referred to as the Rules, are as follows:

"The Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879

S. 48 (1) The land revenue leviable on any land under the provisions of this Act shall be assessed, or shall be deemed to have been assessed, as the case may be, with reference to the use of the land—

- (a) for the purpose of agriculture,
- (b) for the purpose of building, and
- (c) for a purpose other than agriculture or building.

(2) Where land assessed for use for any purpose is used for any other purpose, the assessment fixed under the provisions of this Act upon such land shall, notwithstanding that the term for which such assessment may have been fixed has not expired, be liable to be altered and fixed at a different rate by such authority and subject to such rules as the State Government may prescribe in this behalf.

(3) Where land held free of assessment on condition of being used for any purpose is used at any time for any other purpose, it shall be liable to assessment.

(4) The Collector or a survey officer may, subject to any rules made in this behalf under S. 214, prohibit the use for certain purposes of any unalienated land liable to the payment of land revenue, and may summarily evict any holder who uses or attempts to use the same for any such prohibited purpose.

65. An occupant of land assessed or held for the purpose of agriculture is entitled by himself, his servants, tenants, agents, or other legal representatives, to erect farm-buildings, construct wells or tanks, or make any other improvements thereon for the better cultivation of the land, or its more convenient use for the purpose aforesaid.

But if any occupant wishes to use his holding or any part thereof for any other purpose the Collector's permission shall in the first place be applied for by the occupant.

The Collector, on receipt of such application,

(a) shall send to the applicant a written acknowledgment of its receipt, and

(b) may, after due inquiry, either grant or refuse the permission applied for:

Provided that, where the Collector fails to inform the applicant of his decision on the application within a period of three months, the permission applied for shall be deemed to have been granted; such period shall, if the Collector sends a written acknowledgment within seven days from the date of receipt of the application be reckoned from the date of the acknowledgment, but in any other case it shall be reckoned from the date of receipt of the application.

Unless the Collector shall in particular instances otherwise direct, no such application shall be recognized except it be made by the occupant.

When any such land is thus permitted to be used for any purpose unconnected with agriculture it shall be lawful for the Collector, subject to the general order of the State Government to require the payment of a fine in addition to any new assessment which may be leviable under the provisions of Section 48.

66. If any such land be so used without the permission of the Collector being first obtained, or before the expiry of the period prescribed by Section 65, the occupant and any tenant, or other person holding under or through him, shall be liable to be summarily evicted by the Collector from the land so used and from the entire field or survey number of which it may form a part and the occupant shall also be liable to pay, in addition to the new assessment which may be leviable under the provisions of Section 48 for the period during which the said land has been so used, such fine as the Collector may, subject to the general orders of the Provincial Government, direct.

Any tenant of any occupant or any other person holding under or through an occupant, who shall without the occupant's consent use any such land for any such purpose, and thereby render the said occupant liable to the penalties aforesaid shall be responsible to the said occupant in damages.

67. Nothing in the last two preceding sections shall prevent the granting of the permission aforesaid on such terms or conditions as may be prescribed by the Collector, subject to any rules made in this behalf by the Provincial Government." "Land Revenue Rules, 1921:

87. (a) Revision of non-agricultural assessment—

(b) When land is used for non-agricultural purposes is assessed under the provisions of Rules 81 to 85, a sanad shall be granted in the Form M if the land is used for building purposes, in Form NI if the land is used temporarily for N-A purposes other than building, in Form N in all other cases.

Provided that if the land to be used for building purposes is situated within the limits of a municipal corporation constituted under the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act or the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporation Act, 1949 the sanad shall be granted in Form M-1;....."

The relevant extracts from the agreement (sanad) are given below:

"Whereas application has been made to the Collector (hereinafter referred to as 'the Collector' which expression shall include any officer whom the Collector shall appoint to exercise and perform his powers and duties under this grant) under Section 65 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code 1879 (hereinafter referred to as 'the said Code' which expression shall where the context so admits include the rules and orders thereunder) by inhabitant of Madhya Saurashtra being the registered occupant of survey No. 417 in the village of in the Taluka (hereinafter referred to as the 'applicant' which expression shall where the context so admits include his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns) for permission to use for building purposes the plot of land (hereinafter referred to as the 'said plot') described in the first schedule hereto and indicated by the letters on the site plan annexed hereto, forming part of survey No. 417 and measuring acres 2 gunthas 17, be the same a little more or less

When used under Rule 51 for land already occupied for agricultural purposes within certain surveyed cities the period for which the assessment is leviable will be ordered to coincide with the expiry of 99 years' period running in that city.

Now this is to certify that permission to use for building purposes, the said plot is hereby granted subject to the provisions of the said Code, and on the following conditions, namely.—

(1) Assessment.....

(6) Code provisions applicable — Save except as herein provided the grant shall be subject to the provisions of this Code:

In witness whereof the Collector of has set his hand and the seal of his office on behalf of the Governor of Bombay, and the applicant has also hereunto set his hand, this day the of 19 .

Signature of applicant Signatures and designations of witnesses.

We declare that who has signed this notice is, to our personal knowledge, the person he represents himself to be, and that he has affixed his signature hereunto in our presence."

7A. It will be noticed that application is made under Sec. 65 of the Code and it is under Section 65 that the Collector either grants or refuses the permission applied for. It will be further noticed that if the Collector fails to inform the applicant of his decision on the application within a period of three months the permission applied for shall be deemed to have been granted, but if the Collector sends a written acknowledgment within seven days from the date of receipt of the application then the three months' period is reckoned from the date of acknowledgment, and in other cases this period is reckoned from the date of receipt of the application. The Collector having given permission under Section 65 he can prescribe conditions under Section 67 of the Code. Under Section 48 (2) where the land assessed for use, say for agricultural purposes, is used for industrial purposes, the assessment is liable to be altered and fixed at a different rate by such authority and subject to such rules as the State Government may prescribe in this behalf. The rates for non-agricultural assessment are fixed under Rules 81, 82, 82A, 82AA, 84 and 85 of the Rules. Rule 87 (b) provides that where land is assessed under the provisions of Rules 81 to 85, a sanad shall be granted. Under the proviso to Rule 87 (b) it is obligatory for the sanad to be granted in form MI.

8. Relying on Shri Mithoo Shahani v. Union of India, 1964-7 SCR 103=(AIR 1964 SC 1536) the learned counsel contends that there is a distinction between an order granting permission under Section 65 and the agreement contained in the sanad which is issued under R 87 (b). He urges that even if the sanad may not be revisable under Section 211 of the Code, the order granting permission under Section 65 is revisable under Section 211, and if this order is revised the sanad falls along with the order.

9. We need not give our views on this alleged distinction for two reasons, first, that this point was not debated before the High Court in this case or in earlier cases, and secondly, because we have come to the conclusion that the order of the Commissioner must be quashed on other grounds.

10. Section 211 reads thus:

"211. The State Government and any revenue officer, not inferior in rank to an Assistant or Deputy Collector or a Superintendent of Survey, in their respective departments, may call for and examine the record of any inquiry or the proceedings of any subordinate revenue officer, for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself, as the case may be, as to the legality or propriety of any decision or order passed, and as to the regularity of the proceedings of such officer.

The following officers may in the same manner call for and examine the proceedings of any officer subordinate to them in any matter in which neither a formal nor a summary inquiry has been held, namely,..... a Mamlatdar, a Mahalkari, an Assistant Superintendent of Survey and an Assistant Settlement Officer.

If in any case it shall appear to the State Government or to such officer aforesaid that any decision or order or proceedings so called for should be modified, annulled or reversed, it or he may pass such order thereon as it or he deems fit:

Provided that an Assistant or Deputy Collector shall not himself pass such order in any matter in which a formal inquiry has been held, but shall submit the record with his opinion to the Collector, who shall pass such order thereon as he may deem fit."

11. The question arises whether the Commissioner can revise an order made under Section 65 at any time. It is true that there is no period of limitation prescribed under Section 211, but it seems to us plain that this power must be exercised in reasonable time and the length of the reasonable time must be determined by the facts of the case and the nature of the order which is being revised.

12. It seems to us that Section 65 itself indicates the length of the reasonable time within which the Commissioner must act under Section 211. Under Section 65 of the Code if the Collector does not inform the applicant of his decision on the application within a period of three months the permission applied for shall be deemed to have been granted. This section shows that a period of three months is considered ample for the Collector to make up his mind and beyond that the legislature thinks that the matter is so urgent that permission shall be deemed to have been granted. Reading Sections 211 and 65 together it seems to us that the Commissioner must exercise his revisional powers within a few months of the order of the Collector. This is reasonable time because after the grant of the permission for building purposes the occupant is likely to spend money on starting building operations at least within a few months from the date of the permission. In this case the Commissioner set aside the order of the Collector on October 12, 1961, i. e., more than a year after the order, and it seems to us that this order was passed too late.

13. We are also of the opinion that the order of the Commissioner should be quashed on the ground that he did not give any reasons for his conclusions. We have already extracted the passage above which shows that after reciting the various contentions he baldly stated his conclusions without disclosing his reasons. In a matter of this kind the Commissioner should indicate his reasons, however briefly, so that an aggrieved party may carry the matter further if so advised.

14. We are also of the opinion that the Commissioner should not have gone into the question of title. It seems to us that when the title of an occupant is disputed by any party before the Collector or the Commissioner and the dispute is serious the appropriate course for the Collector or the Commissioner would be to refer the parties to a competent court and not to decide the question of title himself against the occupant.

15. In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Appeal No 647 of 1966, D/- 10-3-1969

(A) Constitution of India, Article 311 (2)
— Non-supply of copy of enquiry report amounts to denial of reasonable opportunity.

The failure on the part of the competent authority to provide the plaintiff with a copy of the report of the Enquiry Officer amounts to denial of reasonable opportunity contemplated by Article 311 (2) AIR 1964 SC 364, Foll; (1963) 4 Guj LR 1001, Affirmed

(Para 6)

It is true that the question whether reasonable opportunity has or has not been afforded to the Government servant must depend on the facts of each case, but it would be in very rare cases indeed in which it could be said that the Government servant is not prejudiced by the non-supply of the report of the Enquiry Officer.

(B) Bombay Reorganisation Act (1960), Sections 60 and 61 — Some element of relationship between public servant and Government is based on contract within Section 60 — Decree for arrears of salary more properly falls under S. 60.

Some elements of relationship between a public servant and Government are based on contract within the meaning of Section 60 of the Act. In particular the liability to pay salary, when it has been fixed, arises out of a contract to pay salary. Thus the decree of a Court for payment of arrears of salary is truly a liability in proceedings relating to a contract within Section 60 (2) (a) of the Act. It is true, that the words 'actionable wrong other than breach of contract' in Section 61 in this context are wide words and include something more than torts, but even so where a suit is brought by a Government servant for arrears of salary, the decree more properly falls under Section 60 of the Act rather than under Section 61. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by SIKRI, J.: This appeal by special leave arises out of the suit filed by Bhashankar Avalram Joshi, hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff for a declaration that the order of dismissal, dated February 2/4, 1955, passed by the Inspector General of Prisons, Saurashtra, was illegal and void on the ground that it contravened the provisions of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution. The plaintiff also prayed for a decree for Rs 2,690/- being arrears of his pay from April 1, 1954, to May 7, 1956.

2. The plaintiff failed before the Civil Judge, Rajkot, but on appeal succeeded before the District Judge, Central Saurashtra, inasmuch as he declared the order dated February 2/4, 1955, illegal and void. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court claiming arrears of salary and the State of Bombay filed cross-objections praying that the suit be dismissed. The second appeal was heard by the High Court of Gujarat (Mabhyoj J) who directed that the decree passed by the lower appellate court "be varied so as to show that the appellant (plaintiff) continued to be in Government service till date of the suit only and there will be a decree for Rs. 2,690/- being arrears of pay due to the appellant (plaintiff) upto the date of the suit. There will be a further provision in the decree that the liability arising out of the declaration that the appellant is in Government service is the liability of the State of Gujarat and that the liability for the payment of the arrears of pay is the liability of the State of Maharashtra." The State of Maharashtra filed an application for leave to appeal under the Letters Patent but this was dismissed. The appeal is now before us.

3. The learned counsel for the appellant, the State of Maharashtra, contends, first, that the High Court erred in holding that there had been a breach of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution, as, according to him, there was no duty to supply a copy of the report of the enquiry held against the plaintiff. Secondly he contends that the High Court erred in fastening the liability in respect of the arrears of pay on the State of Maharashtra.

4. Before we deal with the above points we may give a few facts. The plaintiff entered service in the Gondal State in 1927 as a jailor. The Gondal State merged with the United States of Saurashtra. On March 6, 1953, the plaintiff was appointed senior jailor, Surendranagar District Jail. On March 25, 1954, he was suspended, and at that time he was acting as accountant at Rajkot Central Jail. On March 27, 1954, he was served with a charge-sheet. In substance the charges were that while he was serving at Surendranagar he had committed certain acts of misappropriation of food stuffs meant for prisoners, maltreatment of prisoners and acceptance of illegal gratification from them. The plaintiff filed a written statement on September 4, 1954, and an enquiry was held by Mr. Gangopadhyay. The plaintiff appeared before that officer and cross-examined witnesses. He also examined himself and some witnesses. He was also allowed to appear through an Advocate in the enquiry proceedings. The Enquiry Officer made a report and on or about January 7, 1955 the following notice was issued to him calling upon him to show cause why he should not be dismissed from service:

Shri Bhaishanker A. Joshi, Accountant, Rajkot Central Prison

(Under suspension)

Charges framed against you under this office No. C/14 dated 27th March 1954 and in particular the charge of having accepted illegal gratification from prisoner Ratilal Jivan have been established to the satisfaction of Government. You are hereby asked to show cause why the punishment of dismissal from service should not be inflicted upon you.

You should please submit your reply to this office, through the Superintendent, Rajkot Central Prison, within a week from the date of receipt of this letter without fail.

Sd/- M. J. Bhatt.

Inspector General of Prisons, Government of Saurashtra."

The plaintiff filed a written statement. He was dismissed by the Inspector General of Prisons by his order dated February 2/4, 1955. This order was amended on February 9, 1955, in which it was stated that "the aforesaid order should be read so as to show that the plaintiff was dismissed from service on account of charge of accepting illegal gratification from prisoner Ratilal Jivan having been conclusively proved against him in the departmental inquiries conducted against him by the Government."

5. In the plaint the plaintiff alleged that copy of the enquiry report was never supplied to him, and consequently he had not been given reasonable opportunity within the meaning of Article 311 of the Constitution. The State of Bombay admitted that the plaintiff was not supplied with a copy of the report of the Enquiry Officer, but pleaded that the plaintiff had not asked for copy of the report and had not been prejudiced by the non-supply of the copy of the report.

6. The High Court held that the failure on the part of the competent authority to provide the plaintiff with a copy of the report of the Enquiry Officer amounted to denial of reasonable opportunity contemplated by Article 311 (2) of the Constitution.

7. It seems to us that the High Court came to a correct conclusion. The plaintiff was not aware whether the Enquiry Officer reported in his favour or against him. If the report was in his favour, in his representation to the Government he would have utilised its reasoning to dissuade the Inspector General from coming to a contrary conclusion, and if the report was against him he would have put such arguments or material as he could to dissuade the Inspector General from accepting the report of the Enquiry Officer. Moreover, as pointed out by the High Court, the Inspector General of Prisons had the report before him and the tentative conclusions arrived at by the Enquiry Officer were bound to influence him, and in depriving the plaintiff of a copy of the report he was handicapped in not knowing what material was influencing the Inspector General of Prisons.

8 As observed by Gajendragadkar, J., as he then was, in Union of India v. H G Goel, 1964-4 SCR 718 at p 728 = (AIR 1964 SC 364) at p 368, "the enquiry report along with the evidence recorded constitute the material on which the Government has ultimately to act. That is the only purpose of the enquiry held by competent officer and the report he makes as a result of the said enquiry."

9 It is true that the question whether reasonable opportunity has or has not been afforded to the Government servant must depend on the facts of each case, but it would be in very rare cases indeed in which it could be said that the Government servant is not prejudiced by the non-supply of the report of the Enquiry Officer.

10 In the result we must overrule the first contention urged on behalf of the appellant, the State of Maharashtra.

11 The plaintiff is not concerned with the second contention but it is a dispute between the State of Maharashtra and the State of Gujarat. As is well known, the State of Bombay was reorganised into the above two States and the Bombay Reorganisation Act, 1960, contained various provisions for the apportionment of assets and liabilities between the two States. We are here concerned with Ss 60 and 61 of the Bombay Reorganisation Act, 1960, which read thus:

"60 (1) Where, before the appointed day, the State of Bombay has made any contract in the exercise of its executive power for any purposes of the State, that contract shall be deemed to have been made in the exercise of the executive power,—

(a) if such purposes are, as from that day, exclusively purposes of either the State of Maharashtra or the State of Gujarat, of that State, and

(b) in any other case, of the State of Maharashtra;

and all rights and liabilities which have accrued, or may accrue, under any, such contract shall, to the extent to which they would have been rights or liabilities of the State of Bombay, be rights or liabilities of the State of Maharashtra or the State of Gujarat, as the case may be Provided that in any such case as is referred to in Clause (b), the initial allocation of rights and liabilities made by this sub-section shall be subject to such financial adjustment as may be agreed upon between the State of Maharashtra and the State of Gujarat, or, in default of such agreement, as the Central Government may by order direct.

(2) For the purposes of this section there shall be deemed to be included in the liabilities which have accrued or may accrue under any contract—

(a) any liability to satisfy an order or award made by any court or other tribunal in proceedings relating to the contract, and

(b) any liability in respect of expenses incurred in or in connection with any such proceedings.

(3) This section shall have effect subject to the other provisions of this Part relating to the apportionment of liabilities in respect of loans, guarantees and other financial obligations, and bank balances and securities shall, notwithstanding that they partake of the nature of contractual rights, be dealt with under those provisions.

61. Where, immediately before the appointed day, the State of Bombay is subject to any liability in respect of any actionable wrong other than breach of contract, that liability shall,—

(a) if the cause of action arose wholly within the territories which, as from that day, are the territories of the State of Maharashtra or the State of Gujarat, be a liability of that State, and

(b) in any other case, be initially a liability of the State of Maharashtra but subject to such financial adjustment as may be agreed upon between the States of Maharashtra and Gujarat or, in default of such agreement, as the Central Government may by order direct."

12 The learned counsel for the State of Maharashtra contends that the liability to pay arrears of pay was not a liability arising out of a contract but was a liability in respect of an actionable wrong other than a breach of contract.

13. This Court in State of Bihar v. Abdul Majid, 1954 SCR 786 = (AIR 1954 SC 245) held "that the rule of English Law that a civil servant cannot maintain a suit against the Crown for the recovery of arrears of salary does not prevail in India and it has been negated by the provisions of the statute law in India." Mahajan, C. J., speaking for the Court, observed at p. 802 (of SCR)=(at p. 251 of AIR):

"As regards torts of its servants in exercise of sovereign powers, the company was not, and the Crown in India was not liable unless the act has been ordered or ratified by it. Be that as it may, that rule has no application to the case of arrears of salary earned by a public servant for the period that he was actually in office. The present claim is not based on tort but is based on quantum meruit or contract and the Court is entitled to give relief to him."

14. It may be that these observations are not conclusive on the point under consideration. It seems to us, however, that some elements of relationship between a public servant and Government are based on contract within the meaning of Section 60 of the Bombay Reorganisation Act, 1960. In particular, the liability to pay salary, when it has been fixed, arises out of a contract to pay salary. Authority is not lacking even in England where a special relationship exists between the Crown and its public servants. In Owner of S. S. Raphael v. Brandy, 1911 AC 413 (414) the head-note reads:

"A stoker on board a merchant ship, who was entitled to wages from the ship-owners, and also as a stoker in the Royal Naval Reserve to 6£ a year as a retainer, was injured by an accident on the ship which disabled him from continuing to serve in the Royal Naval Reserve:—

Held, that the stoker was entitled under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to compensation from the ship-owners not only in respect of his wages but also of the retainer, which must be taken into account as earnings under a concurrent contract of service." The Lord Chancellor in the course of the speech observed:

"A point was made before your Lordships which does not appear to have been made in the Court below, that there was no contract with the Crown at all here. The authorities cited go no further than to say that when there is an engagement between the Crown and a military or naval officer the Crown is always entitled to determine it at pleasure, and that no obligation contrary to that would be recognized or valid in law.

It was then said that there were not here concurrent contracts. I agree with Fletcher Moulton, L. J. that this is almost a typical case of concurrent contracts, because the workman was being paid wages for his services on board a merchant ship, and at the same time he was earning his 6£ a year by virtue of his engagement with the Crown; and he was giving an equivalent for that, because he was keeping himself fit and doing the work which he stipulated to do." It is true that Lord Goddard, C. J., in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Hambrook, 1956-1 All ER 807, at pp. 811-12 observed:

"If I may be bold enough to express a conclusion on a matter on which the Judicial Committee hesitated in Reilly v. R., 1934 AC 176 (179) it is that an established civil servant is appointed to an office and is a public officer, remunerated by moneys provided by Parliament, so that his employment depends not on a contract with the Crown but on appointment by the Crown, though there may be as indicated in Reilly v. R., 1934 AC 176 (179) exceptional cases, as for instance an engagement for a definite period where there is a contractual element in or collateral to his employment." But in the Court of Appeal nothing was said about these observations.

15. It will be remembered that the Privy Council had said in Reilly v. R., 1934 AC 176 (179), that "their Lordships are not prepared to accede to this view of the contract, if contract there be. If the terms of the appointment definitely prescribe a term and expressly provide for a power to determine "for cause" it appears necessarily to follow that any implication of a power to dismiss at pleasure is excluded."

16. Even Lord Goddard C. J., in Terrell v. Secretary of State for the Colonies, 1953-2 QB 482, (499) observed that "the case (1934) AC 176, shows that there may be contractual rights existing before determination of a contract at will which are not inconsistent with a power to determine," and he stuck to this in Hambrook's case, 1956-1 All ER 807 by stating:

"Although it is clear that no action for wrongful dismissal can be brought by a discharged civil servant, I may be allowed to say that I adhere to the opinion which I expressed in 1953-2 QB 482, 499 that he could recover his salary for the time during which he has served. He would claim on a quantum meruit and I am fortified in this view by 1934 AC 176, by R. v. Dautre, (1884) 9 AC 745, and by Bushe v. R., 29th May, 1869, The Times, referred to in Robertson's book p 338."

17. We are here concerned with a choice between § 60 and § 61, which lay down two broad categories. It seems to us that the decree of the High Court decreeing payment of arrears of salary is truly a liability in proceedings relating to a contract within Section 60 (2) (a) of the Act. It is true, as held by this Court in the State of Tripura v. The Province of East Bengal, 1951 SCR 1 at p 44 = (AIR 1951 SC 23 at p 39) that the words 'actionable wrong other than breach of contract' in this context are wide words and include something more than torts, but even so where a suit is brought by a Government servant for arrears of salary, the decree more properly falls under Section 60 of the Act rather than under Section 61.

18. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs to the respondent, Barshankar Avalram Joshi. The State of Gujarat will bear its own costs in this appeal.

19-2-1969

(A) Constitution of India Art. 226 — Mandamus — There must be legal right to performance of legal duty — Writ cannot issue to company which is not statutory or having any public duty or responsibility imposed by statute to restrain company from enforcing agreement arrived at between Union and Company. ILR (1967) Andh Pra 361, Affirmed — Court cannot also grant declaration about illegality of agreement in favour of petitioners. ILR (1967) Andh Pra 361, Reversed.

IM/IM/B125/69/D

Article 226 provides that every High Court shall have power to issue to any person or authority orders and writs including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, etc. or any of them for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution and for any other purpose. But it is well understood that a mandamus lies to secure the performance of a public or statutory duty in the performance of which the one who applies for it has a sufficient legal interest. Case law discussed. ILR (1967) Andh Pra 361, Affirmed (Para 6)

Therefore, the condition precedent for the issue of mandamus is that there is in one claiming it a legal right to the performance of a legal duty by one against whom it is sought. An order of mandamus is, in form, a command directed to a person, corporation or an inferior tribunal requiring him or them to do a particular thing therein specified which appertains to his or their office and is in the nature of a public duty. It is, however, not necessary that the person or the authority on whom the statutory duty is imposed need be a public official or an official body. (Para 6)

The company being a non-statutory body and one incorporated under the Companies Act there is neither a statutory nor a public duty imposed on it by a statute in respect of which enforcement could be sought by means of a mandamus nor is there in its workmen any corresponding legal right for enforcement of any such statutory or public duty. (Para 7)

Further, if a public authority purports to dismiss an employee otherwise than in accordance with mandatory procedural requirements or on grounds other than those sanctioned by the statute the courts would have jurisdiction to declare its act a nullity. But where it is held that a mandamus or an order in the nature of a mandamus cannot be issued against a company registered under the Companies Act, the court cannot also grant a declaration about the illegality of an agreement, in favour of the petitioners. ILR 1967 Andh Pra 361, Reversed AIR 1962 SC 486 and AIR 1962 SC 922, Dist. (Para 9)

The workmen should be left to have resort to remedy available to them under the Industrial Disputes Act by raising an industrial dispute thereunder. (Para 9)

(B) Companies Act (1956), Sections 2 (18) and 617 — Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (j) — Company — Shares held by Union Government, State Government and private individuals, Union Government being largest shareholder nominating Company's directors — Held, that the Company being registered under the Companies Act and governed by the provisions of that Act, it was a separate legal entity and could not be said to be either a Government Corporation or an industry run by or under the authority of the Union Government. Mr. S. V. Gupte, Senior Advocate (Mr. R. Thiagarajan, Advocate of M/s. Aiyar and Aiyar, with him), for Appellant; Mr. Janardan Sharma, Advocate, for Respondents 1 to 3.

SHELAT, J.:— The Praga Tools Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the company) is a company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. At the material time, however, the Union Government and the Government of Andhra Pradesh between them held 56 per cent and 32 per cent of its shares respectively and the balance of 12 per cent shares were held by private individuals.

Being the largest shareholder, the Union Government had the power to nominate the company's directors. Even so, being registered under the Companies Act and governed by the provisions of that Act, the company is a separate legal entity and cannot be said to be either a Government corporation or an industry run by or under the authority of the Union Government.

2. At the material time there were two rival workmen's unions in the company, the Praga Tools Employees' Union and the Praga Tools Corporation Mazdoor Sabha (hereinafter referred to as the union and the sabha respectively). On July 1, 1961 a settlement was arrived at between the company and the said union under which the workmen inter alia agreed to observe industrial truce for a period of three years and not to resort to strikes, stoppage of work or go-slow tactics. On December 10, 1962 the company and the said union entered into a supplementary settlement under which the company agreed not to retrench or lay-off any of the workmen during the said period of truce on an assurance from the said union of co-operation and willingness of the workmen to carry out alternative tasks assigned to them even if they were in a slightly lower cadre without loss of emoluments. The said two settlements were arrived at and recorded in the presence of the Commissioner of Labour under Sections 2 (p) and 18 (1) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 and were to be in force as aforesaid until July 1, 1964. On December 20, 1963, however, the company entered into an agreement with the said union to which the said sabha was not a party. The agreement recited that there were several disputes between the company and the union and that some of them were the subject-matter of conciliation proceedings and some were pending arbitration or adjudication. Clause (1) provided that the said agreements dated July 1, 1961 and December 10, 1962 to the extent that they were inconsistent with this agreement would stand automatically repealed or modified by this agreement. Clause (6) stated that there was an immediate, unavoidable need for reducing substantially the overhead expenditure of the company and for effecting economy and therefore notwithstanding the agreement dated December 10, 1962 "both the parties have prepared a list of the categories and persons who would be retrenched after careful consideration".

The said list was attached to the agreement as annexure VI. Clause (6) also provided that the agreement dated December 10, 1962 stood modified so as to allow the said retrenchment to take place immediately in accordance with law. The clause further provided that in order to mitigate the consequences of the proposed retrenchment the company had evolved a scheme of voluntary retirement with terminal benefits superior to those provided under the Industrial Disputes Act, but the scheme of voluntary retirement would be available to the workmen only for a period of 10 days from the date of the agreement. It further provided that the company and the said union had agreed that an attempt would be made to rehabilitate the retrenched persons by helping them to obtain alternative employment and the company had for that purpose contacted public sector and other industries and in particular the Heavy Engineering Corporation, Ranchi for absorption as far as possible of the retrenched personnel. The effect of this agreement was to enable the company, notwithstanding the two earlier settlements, to carry out retrenchment of 92 workmen mentioned in annexure VI thereto with effect from January 1, 1964.

3. Respondent 1 and 40 other workmen thereupon filed a writ petition under Article 226 in the High Court of Andhra Pradesh challenging the validity of the said agreement impleading therein the company, the said union and the Regional Assistant Commissioner as respondents. The petition claimed a writ of mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus or any other order or direction restraining the respondents to implement or enforce the said agreement. The writ petition was in the first instance heard by a learned Single Judge of the High Court before whom the workmen raised the following contentions: (1) that the said agreement dated December 20, 1963 was invalid as it was entered into by the union in collusion with the company and was in violation of the said two earlier settlements, (2) that there could be no industrial dispute within the meaning of Section 2 (k) of the Act as the said two earlier settlements, not having been terminated under Section 19 (2), were in force, that therefore there could not be a valid condition under S. 12 and accordingly the fact of the conciliation officer having signed the impugned agreement gave no binding force to it, (3) that the retrenchment of the 92 workmen was illegal and void as it was in breach of Section 25-F inasmuch as no notice thereof was given to the appropriate Government, and (4) that the company being under the management of the Union Government, the appropriate Government in regard to the dispute was the Central Government and not the State Government and consequently the impugned agreement which was signed by the conciliation officer appointed by the State Government was not valid and no retrenchment could validly be effected under the force of such agreement.

4. The learned Single Judge negatively held these contentions holding that the company was neither an industry run by or under the authority of the Union Government nor under its management but being a company registered under the Companies Act the appropriate Government was the State Government. He also held that there was no proof of the said union having entered into the impugned agreement in collusion with the company. He further held that the union by its letter dated April 5, 1963, had raised an industrial dispute and had thereby requested that the question of retrenchment should be settled between the parties, that the said dispute with the consent of the company and the union was brought for conciliation before the conciliation officer and that the impugned agreement, having been brought about in the course of the said conciliation proceedings, was binding on all workmen including the petitioners in the writ petition despite the fact that they were members of the sabha and not of the union. In this view the learned Single Judge held that it was not necessary for him to decide the preliminary objection raised by the company that no writ petition for a mandamus could lie against it. He dismissed the writ petition on merits on the basis of the aforesaid findings given by him. 28 out of the said 41 workmen who had filed the writ petition filed a letters patent appeal against the said judgment. The Division Bench of the High Court which heard the appeal held, (1) that since the dispute relating to the company's right to retrenchment was already settled under Section 18 (1) by the said supplementary settlement of December 10, 1962, no industrial dispute could be said to exist or arise until the said settlement was duly terminated under Sec. 19 (2), that therefore there could be no valid conciliation proceedings in respect of the question of retrenchment and that the impugned agreement permitting the company to retrench, though it bore the signature of the conciliation officer, was not a valid agreement; (2) that so long as the earlier settlements were not terminated they held the field, and (3) that the said letter dated April 5, 1963 relied on by the learned Single Judge as having raised an industrial dispute regarding retrenchment did not in fact contain or raise any such question. The Division Bench held that the said letter raised only the question of revision of wage-structure and other demands but not the question of retrenchment. The letter of July 29, 1963 of the conciliation officer to the company relied on by the company also referred to the demands contained in the said letter of April 5, 1963, namely, the revision of wage-structure, dearness allowance, promotion and other matters, but not the question of the company's right of retrenchment. The Division Bench therefore held that there was nothing on record to show that retrenchment was the subject-matter of any conciliation before the conciliation officer and therefore any agreement conferring on the company the right to retrench so long as the said earlier settlements were not terminated was invalid in spite of the conciliation officer having given his assent to and affixed his signature on it. The learned Judges, however, held that the company being one registered under the Companies Act and not having any statutory duty or function to perform was not one against which a writ petition for a mandamus or any other writ could lie. No such petition could also lie against the conciliation officer as on the facts of the case that officer did not have to implement the impugned agreement. The Division Bench, however, held that though the writ petition was not maintainable it could grant a declaration in favour of three workmen, namely, appellants 6, 16 and 25 before it, that the impugned agreement was illegal and void and dismissed the writ petition subject to the said declaration. The company challenges in this appeal by special leave the validity of this judgment making such a declaration.

5. Thus the only question which arises in this appeal is whether in the view that it took that the writ petition was not maintainable against the company the High Court could still grant the said declaration.

6. In our view the High Court was correct in holding that the writ petition filed under Art. 226 claiming against the company mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus was misconceived and not maintainable. The writ obviously was claimed against the company and not against the conciliation officer in respect of any public or statutory duty imposed on him by the Act as it was not he but the company who sought to implement the impugned agreement. No doubt, Article 226 provides that every High Court shall have power to issue to any person or authority orders and writs including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, etc. or any of them for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution and for any other purpose. But it is well understood that a mandamus lies to secure the performance of a public or statutory duty in the performance of which the one who applies for it has a sufficient legal interest. Thus, an application for mandamus will not lie for an order of restatement to an office which is essentially of a private character nor can such an application be maintained to secure performance of obligations owed by a company towards its workmen or to resolve any private dispute. [See Sohan Lal v. Union of India, 1957 SCR 738 = (AIR 1957 SC 529)]. In Regina v. Industrial Court, 1965-1 QB 377, mandamus was refused against the Industrial Court though set up under the Industrial Courts Act, 1919 on the ground that the reference for arbitration made to it by a minister was not one under the Act but a private reference. "This Court has never exercised a general power" said Bruce, J., in R. v. Lewisham Union, 1897-1 QB 498, 501 "to enforce the performance of their statutory duties by public bodies on the application of any-body who chooses to apply for a mandamus. It has always required that the applicant for a mandamus should have a legal and a specific right to enforce the performance of those duties". Therefore, the condition precedent for the issue of mandamus is that there is in one claiming it a legal right to the performance of a legal duty by one against whom it is sought. An order of mandamus is, in form, a command directed to a person, corporation or an inferior tribunal requiring him or them to do a particular thing therein specified which appertains to his or their office and is in the nature of a public duty. It is, however, not necessary that the person or the authority on whom the statutory duty is imposed need be a public official or an official body. A mandamus can issue, for instance, to an official of a society to compel him to carry out the terms of the statute under or by which the society is constituted or governed and also to companies or corporations to carry out duties placed on them by the statutes authorising their undertakings. A mandamus would also lie against a company constituted by a statute for the purposes of fulfilling public responsibilities [Cf Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd Ed), Vol II, p 52 and onwards].

7 The company being a non-statutory body and one incorporated under the Companies Act there was neither a statutory nor a public duty imposed on it by a statute in respect of which enforcement could be sought by means of a mandamus, nor was there in its workmen any corresponding legal right for enforcement of any such statutory or public duty. The High Court, therefore, was right in holding that no writ petition for a mandamus or an order in the nature of mandamus could lie against the company.

8 The grievance of the company, however, is that though the High Court held rightly that no such petition was maintainable, it nevertheless granted a declaration in favour of three of the said workmen, a declaration which it could not issue once it held that the said writ petition was misconceived. The argument was that such a declaration, if at all, could only issue against public bodies or companies or corporations set up or controlled by statutes in respect of acts done by them contrary to or in breach of the provisions of such statutes. If a public authority purports to dismiss an employee otherwise than in accordance with mandatory procedural requirements or on grounds other than those sanctioned by the statute the courts would have jurisdiction to declare its act a nullity. Thus, where a Hospital Services' Board dismissed a clerk for reasons not authorised by the relevant conditions of service a declaration was granted to the applicant by the House of Lords [Mc Clelland v. Northern Ireland General Health Services Board, 1957-1 WLR 594]. Even where a statutory power of dismissal is not made subject to express procedural requirements or limited to prescribed grounds courts have granted a declaration that it was invalidly exercised if the authority has failed to observe rules of natural justice or has acted capriciously or in bad faith or for impliedly unauthorised purposes.

[See Ridge v. Baldwin, 1964 AC 40 and Short v. Poole Corporation, 1928 Ch 66 at pp. 90 and 91]. Declarations of invalidity have often been founded on successful assertions that a public duty has not been complied with. See Attorney General v. St. Ives R D C, 1961-1 QB 366. It is, therefore, fairly clear that such a declaration can be issued against a person or an authority or a corporation where the impugned act is in violation of or contrary to a statute under which it is set up or governed or a public duty or responsibility imposed on such person, authority or body by such statute.

9 The High Court, however, relied on two decisions of this Court as justifying it to issue the said declaration. The two decisions are Bidi, Bidi Leaves and Tobacco Merchants' Association v. The State of Bombay, 1962 Supp 1 SCR 381 = (AIR 1962 SC 486) and A. B. Abdulkadir v. State of Kerala, 1962 Supp (2) SCR 741 = (AIR 1962 SC 922). But neither of these two decisions is a parallel case which could be relied on. In the first case, the declaration was granted not against a company, as in the present case, but against the State Government and the declaration was as regards the invalidity of certain clauses of a notification issued by the Government in pursuance of power under Section 5 of the Minimum Wages Act, 1918 on the ground that the said clauses were beyond the purview of that section. In the second case also, certain rules made under the Cochin Tobacco Act of 1081 (M E) and the Travancore Tobacco Regulation of 1087 (M E) were declared void ab initio. These cases were therefore not cases where writ petitions were held to be not maintainable as having been filed against a company and despite that fact a declaration of invalidity of an impugned agreement having been granted. In our view once the writ petition was held to be misconceived on the ground that it could not lie against a company which was neither a statutory company nor one having public duties or responsibilities imposed on it by a statute, no relief by way of a declaration as to invalidity of an impugned agreement between it and its employees could be granted. The High Court in these circumstances ought to have left the workmen to resort to the remedy available to them under the Industrial Disputes Act by raising an industrial dispute thereunder. The only course left open to the High Court was therefore to dismiss it. No such declaration against a company registered under the Companies Act and not set up under any statute or having any public duties and responsibilities to perform under such a statute could be issued in writ proceedings in respect of an agreement which was essentially of a private character between it and its workmen. The High Court, therefore, was in error in granting the said declaration.

10. The result is that the appeal must be allowed and the said declaration set aside. In the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs.

(From Kerala: ILR (1965) 2 Ker 141)

J. C. SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Mani Mani and others, Appellants v. Mani Joshua, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 683 of 1966, D/- 21-3-1969.

Succession Act (1925), Section 180 — Doctrine of election — Testator by his last will cancelling previous settlement which was acted upon in favour of his sons J and M and bequeathing some properties including items given to M by settlement — Residue bequeathed to M — A would be put to election, either to take under settlement or will — ILR (1965) 2 Ker 141, Reversed.

In order to raise a case of election under a will it must be clearly shown that the testator intended to dispose of the particular property over which he had no disposing power. This intention must appear on the face of the will either by express words or by necessary conclusion from the circumstances disclosed by the will. The presumption, however, is that a testator intends to dispose of his own property and general words will not usually be construed so as to include other property. In the case of a will one may even gather an intention by the testator to include property belonging to another in a gift of residue for it is necessary to construe a will as a whole. Case law discussed. (1862) 54 ER 1104 and (1886) 54 LT 239, Foll. (Para 9)

By a registered settlement deed in the year 1935 the father of the plaintiff J., settled certain properties in favour of his wife and sons J and M. Mutations were effected of the properties so settled in favour of the donees. Later on he executed three Wills on different dates and deposited them with the office of Registrar. In the third Will which was his last Will and testament he made a mention of the two settlements and the two previous Wills and declared that the last Will would be final and operative. By that Will he left certain items of properties to J. These items included the properties which had been given to M and his mother by the settlement of 1935. The residue was bequeathed to M. There was no specific mention in the last Will to the properties which had been settled on J in 1935. J filed a suit claiming the properties settled on him in the year 1935. He asserted that he had a right under the Will to get the items bequeathed to him therein in addition to the properties settled on him in the year 1935 which could not form the subject matter of any bequest by reason of the said settlement.

Held on construction of the Will that the testator intended to include properties gifted to J, by the settlement of 1935 in the bequest which he made to M of the entire residue. J was thus put to election and could not claim those properties if he wished to take the benefit under the Will. The testator treated the entire properties which had formed the subject-matter of gift or otherwise as his and which could be disposed of by him as he liked. If the testator did not want to make any disposition of those properties which formed the subject-matter of gift in 1935 there was no reason why he should have given to J properties which had been gifted to M and his mother. Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr. Advocate (Mr. A. S. Nambiar, Advocate with him), for Appellants; Mr. Sarjoo Prasad, Sr. Advocate (M/s. P. Kesava Pillai, M. R. K. Pillai and Miss Lily Thomas, Advocates with him), for Respondent.

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Kerala High Court by which the suit instituted by the respondent for recovery of properties described in Schedule A of the plaint and for mesne profits etc was decreed in reversal of the decree of the trial Court, dismissing the suit.

2. Uthupu Mani who died in the year 1943 had three sons. The eldest son Uduppu died sometimes between 1929 and 1935. The second son Joshua is the respondent herein, the appellants being the third son Mani Mani and Mariamma their mother and the widow of Uthupu. Uthupu left some daughters also and appellant No 3 Mani Achamma is one of the daughters. The controversy in the suit out of which the appeal has arisen was confined to a residential house in an area of 10 cents in Kottayam town. This property along with several other properties originally belonged to Uthupu who made certain settlements followed by wills. The first settlement was made in the year 1102 ME corresponding to 1927 AD when Uduppu was alive and Mani Mani was not born. On October 9, 1935 by means of another registered document (Exh. A) called Udampady, Uthupu settled properties thus. Those comprised in A Schedule were given to Mariamma, in B Schedule to Joshua and in C Schedule to Mani. The Schedules contained the following properties—

“To Mariamma (A Schedule)

Building constructed as Hall and the Cart-shed on 2 cents

To Joshua (B Schedule)

Stored building and 30 cents garden land

To Mani Mani (C Schedule)

Four rooms facing West and 30 cents of garden land”

It appears and it has been so found that mutations were effected of the properties so settled in favour of the donees. Later on Uthupu executed a will which he put in an envelope and deposited it in the office of the District Registrar, Kottayam in January 1943. He executed a second will in April 1943 and kept it in custody of the District Registrar. He executed a third will (Exh. 3) on May 31, 1943 which was his last will and testament. In this will he made a mention of the two settlements and the two previous wills and declared that the last will would be final and operative. His other declarations and statements in the will (Exh. 3) will be presently considered as the entire controversy in the present litigation centres on a correct assessment and appraisal of their true scope and effect. It may be mentioned that by this will be left five items of properties to Joshua. These items included the properties in C Schedule which had been given to Mani by the settlement of 1935 and the cart-shed on two cents of land contained in Schedule A which had been given to Mariamma by that settlement. There was no specific mention in the will (Exh. 3) to the B Schedule properties which had been settled on Joshua in 1935.

3. In 1935 Joshua filed a suit laying claim to the B Schedule properties settled on him in the year 1935. His case was founded principally on the allegation that B Schedule properties which had been settled on him in 1935 vested in him by virtue of the settlement and he was the owner thereof and that the five items of properties which were left by the will (Exh. 3) were quite independent of and separate from the aforesaid B Schedule properties. In other words he asserted that he had a right under the will to get the five items bequeathed to him therein in addition to the B Schedule properties which had been settled on him in the year 1935 and which could not form the subject-matter of any bequest by Uthupu by reason of the said settlement. The position taken up on behalf of Mariamma, Mani etc—the defendants—was that the plaintiff had accepted the benefit under the will by taking the five items of properties bequeathed to him thereby which included the properties originally allotted under the settlement of 1935 to Mariamma and Mani. He had thus exercised his right of election to take the properties under the will and was precluded from asserting any right to properties given to him under the settlement of 1935.

4. A number of issues were framed on the pleadings of the parties. The main question for consideration, however, was whether the settlement of 1935 had been given effect to and whether plaintiff's suit merited dismissal on account of the applicability of the doctrine of election embodied in Section 180 of the Indian Succession Act. The trial court held that the settlement of 1935 had been given effect to and mutations had been duly made in the revenue register in accordance with the settlement deed. It was found that the plaintiff had obtained title to and possession of the suit properties comprised in B Schedule in the settlement of 1935. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the will (Exh. 3) clearly showed that the testator purported to cancel the arrangement by the deed of settlement of 1935 and had made bequests under the will to the plaintiff of some of the properties which had been settled on Mariamma and Mani in the year 1935. This attracted the rule contained in Section 180 of the Succession Act and since the plaintiff had elected to accept the benefit under the will he was not entitled to claim any right on the basis of the deed of settlement of 1935.

5. The High Court acceded to the argument pressed on behalf of Joshua who was the appellant before it that on a proper reading of the will it could not be held that the testator professed to dispose of the suit properties which had been gifted to the plaintiff by means of the settlement deed of 1935. The High Court was influenced by the fact that there was no specific mention of these properties in the will and according to it mere general words of disposition could not be taken to contain an intention to deal with the properties belonging to a third party, namely, the plaintiff. The following part of the Judgment may be reproduced:

"Having due regard to these passages in the various text-books based upon judicial decisions and which have been placed before me by Mr. T. S. Krishnamoorthy Iyer and Mr. M. U. Isaac in my view, the decision rendered by the learned Subordinate Judge that Section 180 of the Indian Succession Act applied and that the appellant has elected to take the benefit under the will and therefore he cannot claim any further benefits on the basis of Ex. A, cannot certainly be sustained. So far as I could see, there is no specific disposition of the property already given to the plaintiff under Ex. A, by the father in Ex. 3. No doubt the father has dealt with an item which was given under Ex. A to the first defendant and a part of the item given to the 2nd defendant under Ex. A in Ex. 3. If at all the question of the doctrine of election and the applicability of Section 180 of the Indian Succession Act comes into play, in my view, the election will really have to be made, not, by the plaintiff, but by really defendants one and two." As the applicability of the doctrine of the rule of election will depend on a correct and true reading of the will (Exh. 3) we proceed to notice the main recitals and other prominent features to be found in it. The testator in the very beginning referred to the two settlements made by him in the years 1927 and 1935 and the two wills executed by him in the year 1943 which were deposited with the District Registrar, Kottayam. He said that by the first will which he had executed he had invalidated the two deeds of settlement. He then made the second will as he thought that some changes were necessary. The third will (Exh. 3) was made because he felt pity for Joshua whom he had apparently left no or very little property by his previous wills. This is what the testator said:

"But, since there originated in me an idea, on seeing the desperate look and repentant attitude of my son Joshua, that it is highly necessary to nullify certain historic statements made in the previous will and also to alter the conditions, such as share of my assets will not be given to Joshua and to his children in case he begets any, laid down by me owing to the ill-will I had towards Joshua, the eldest among the male children I have at present and towards the members of his wife's house because of certain reasons which I don't now purport to describe herein, this will is executed again afresh; and this alone will come into force after my life-time."

He further said that he had seven children alive at the time when the will was made namely two sons and five daughters out of whom two were married. He directed that after his death his wife Mariamma would take the entire income from his properties for meeting family expenses and payment of revenue dues etc. Then he made dispositions about payments in cash on the occasion of the marriages of his other daughters, with the exception of Achamma, who was described to be weak in health, and in his opinion, should not contract matrimony. An amount of Rs. 3,000 was to be deposited in her name which she was entitled to withdraw if she was married. During the period she remained unmarried she was entitled to take interest on that deposit for personal expenses. He gave other directions about arrangements for her residence etc. in case she remained unmarried. Then he proceeded to make the provision about bequest in these words:—

"Though I had provided in my previous will that my eldest son Joshua shall have only some right in the nature of a life interest over my assets in respect of some petty items of profits, . . . Therefore I have forgiven him and I hereby allow him to enjoy for ever the immoveable properties described hereunder, and my younger son Mani Mani shall alone be the sole heir of the remaining entire assets belonging to me. But, my two sons shall become entitled to the properties allotted to them only after my two daughters are married and the deposit is made in Achamma's name and all the litigations in which I am a party are ended, and till that time my wife Manamma shall take and conserve all the profits as described above in the status of an undivided family."

The only other declaration or statement in the will which deserves notice is the following —

"This will is executed by resolving as these and totally changing all the deeds registered by me prior to this and the Wills kept in custody, and this Will alone shall, unless I act otherwise, be and ought to be in force in future."

Now it is quite clear that the testator was somehow under the impression that he was competent to cancel and revoke not only the previous wills but also the two settlements including the one made in the year 1935. It appears that although by the registered deed of 1935 he had gifted certain properties to his wife and two sons he thought that he could undo what he had done by making a will by which he left virtually no property to Joshua since he was annoyed with him. That is apparently the reason why he clearly stated in the will (Ex 3) in the very beginning that he had executed a will "on 9th Makarom this year in accordance with law, invalidating the above two deeds".

6 He relented in favour of Joshua and that is the reason why he made the will (Exh 3) but his state of mind continued to be the same, namely, he considered that he was fully competent and entitled to cancel all previous settlements and wills and start, as if it were, on a clean slate. The detailed bequests which he made (Exh 3) indicate that he meant to dispose of the entire estate including the properties which had been the subject-matter of the settlement made in the year 1935. There are two strong indications in the will (Exh 3) of his having dealt with the entire property which he thought he could dispose of or in respect of which he could make bequests and leave legacies on the footing that no title had passed to any of the donees under the settlement of 1935. The first is the recital both in the beginning and towards the concluding part of Exh 3 that he had cancelled the previous settlements and wills and that the only document which would govern the disposition of properties would be Exh 3. Even if it be assumed as has been suggested, by learned counsel for Joshua — respondent — that the declaration about invalidating the two deeds of settlement was confined to the first will executed in January 1943, the statement made towards the conclusion of the will (Exh 3) leaves no doubt that the testator sought to revoke not only the previous wills but also the registered deeds which clearly meant the deeds of settlement executed in 1927 and 1935 respectively. The second significant fact is that the testator purported to give to Joshua five items of property which included certain properties which had been given by the settlement of 1935 to Mariamma and Mani. If the testator did not want to make any disposition of those properties which formed the subject-matter of gift in 1935 there was no reason why he should have given to Joshua properties which had been gifted to Mariamma and Mani. All this could have happened only if the testator was treating the settlement of 1935 as non-existent having been revoked by him. We are satisfied that a correct reading of the will (Exh 3) yields the only result that the testator Uthupu treated the entire properties which had formed the subject-matter of gift or otherwise as his and which could be disposed of by him as he liked. The High Court was in error in disagreeing with the trial court on this matter.

7. The argument of learned counsel for the respondent is that the testator predominantly intended to make better provision for Joshua with whom he had been annoyed for various reasons and whom he had left comparatively less or no property by the wills executed prior to Exh 3. It is suggested that the testator could not have intended to have taken away what had already been gifted to Joshua in the year 1935 of which mutation had taken place and possession had passed. It is further pointed out that the testator did not specifically say that the properties which had been gifted to Joshua in 1935 were now being left by the will (Exh 3) to Mani. A great deal of reliance has been placed on the statement in the text books on which the High Court relied and certain decisions for the view that no case for election can arise where the testator does not dispose of the properties in question specifically and has merely used general words of devise. In such circumstances, it has been stated, the testator should be taken to have disposed of only that property which was his own and which he was entitled to deal with and bequeath in law. It is urged that, in the present case, the testator had already made a valid and legal settlement in 1935 of the suit property. He could not have thus dealt with or bequeathed that property and in the absence of express and specific mention in Exh. 3 that he was doing so the rule of election would not be attracted.

8. The circumstances in which election takes place are set out in Section 180 of the Indian Succession Act. According to its provisions "where a person by his will professes to dispose of something which he has no right to dispose of, the person to whom the thing belongs shall elect either to confirm such disposition or to dissent from it, and, in the latter case, he shall give up any benefits which may have been provided for him by the will". The English law, however, applies the principle of compensation also to election. It means the electing legatee has to compensate the disappointed legatee out of the property given to him. As pointed out in the Indian Succession Act by N. C. Sen Gupta, p. 295, the rule which has been embodied in Section 180 does not recognise the principle of compensation. Under its provisions if the legatee has been given any benefit under the will and his own property has also been disposed of by that very will he must relinquish all his claims under the will if he chooses to retain his property. It is not disputed, in the present case, that if the testator has, by Exh. 3, disposed of the property which had been gifted to Joshua the rule embodied in Section 180 would become applicable and Joshua cannot take the property which had been gifted to him if he has chosen to retain the property bequeathed to him by the will. The question is whether the testator having omitted to state in Exh. 3 that he was giving away the properties which had been gifted to Joshua in the year 1935 to Mani to whom only a residuary bequest of the entire remaining assets had been made the principle of election will become inapplicable.

9. Our attention has been invited on behalf of Joshua to the following observation of the Master of Rolls in Miller v. Thurgood, (1864) 10 LT 255:

"If a testator, having an undivided interest in any particular property, disposes of it specifically, and gives to the co-owner of the property a benefit under his will, the question of election arises. But if he disposes of it, not specifically but only under general words, no question of election arises."

But as pointed out in para 1097, p. 592. Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 14, in order to raise a case of election under a will it must be clearly shown that the testator intended to dispose of the particular property over which he had no disposing power. This intention must appear on the face of the will either by express words or by necessary conclusion from the circumstances disclosed by the will. The presumption, however, is that a testator intends to dispose of his own property and general words will not usually be construed so as to include other property. In Whitley v. Whitley, (1862) 54 ER 1104 the wife of the testator was entitled to a share of the produce of the R. estate, which had been directed to be sold. By his will the testator gave all "his share, estate and interest" in the R. estate to his daughter and benefit out of his own estate to his widow. It was held that the will raised a case for election as against the widow. The Master of the Rolls (Sir John Romilly) said that the testator intended to dispose of the property by will which was not his but belonged to his wife and she having taken and enjoyed the benefit provided for her under his will must be considered as having elected. The property, must, therefore go as if it had been the testator's property. This case illustrates how the rule of election has been applied where, even though, general words had been used but by necessary conclusion from the circumstances disclosed by the will it was inferred that the testator intended to dispose of the property which belonged to his wife and not to him. According to the footnote in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 14 (supra), in the case of a will one may even gather an intention by the testator to include property belonging to another in a gift of residue for it is necessary to construe a will as a whole. Reference has been made to Re Allen's Estate, Prescott v. Allen and Beaumont, 1945-2 All ER 264, where a gift of the "residue of my property" was construed as the residue of the testator's ostensible property. A fairly strict approach in such cases has been indicated by Chitty, J. in Re Booker, Booker v. Booker, (1886) 54 LT 239, 242 in these words:

"A great safeguard in applying that doctrine is this—that you are not merely to strain words to make them include that which does not belong to the testator, but you must be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that it was his intention to include that which was not his own, and that you cannot impute to him after having read his will any other intention." It is thus necessary to look at the will and read it carefully which has been done by us and we have no manner of doubt that Uthupu, the testator, intended to include properties gifted to Joshua by the settlement of 1935 in the bequest which he made to Mani of the entire residue. Joshua was thus put to election and could not claim those properties if he wished to take the benefit under the will.

10. In the result the appeal is allowed and the judgment of the High Court is set aside and that of the trial court restored with costs in this Court.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, Senior Advocate (Mr. S. Shaukat Hussain, Advocate with him), for Appellants (in both the Appeals); M/s. J. P. Goyal and G. Nabi Untoo, Advocates, for Respondent (in both the Appeals).

RAMASWAMI, J.: In the suit which is the subject-matter of these appeals the plaintiff alleged that one Dwarka Prasad took a loan of Rs. 1,700 from Madho Ram father of the defendants, and that on 27th July, 1922, Dwarka Prasad along with one Mst. Kunta, his maternal grandmother, executed a possessory mortgage deed of the disputed house for Rs. 1,700 in favour of Madho Ram. The terms of the mortgage deed were that the mortgagor was to pay interest of Rs. 12-12-0 per month out of which the rent amounting to Rs. 6 which was the agreed usufruct of the house in suit was to be adjusted and the mortgagor was to pay Rs. 6-12-0 per month in cash towards the balance of the interest. The parties agreed that the mortgage would be redeemable within twenty years after paying the principal amount and that portion of interest which was not discharged by the usufruct and other amounts. When Dwarka Prasad was unable to pay amount of Rs. 6-12-0 per month, he delivered possession of the house to Madho Ram who let out the house on a monthly rent of Rs. 25. The mortgagors Dwarka Prasad and Mst. Kunta died leaving Mst. Radha Bai as Dwarka Prasad's heir. Radha Bai sold the house in dispute to the plaintiff on 2nd February, 1953 and executed a sale deed. The plaintiff, therefore, became entitled to redeem the mortgage and asked the defendants to render accounts. The defendants contested the suit on the ground that Madho Ram was not the mortgagor nor were the defendants mortgagees. It was alleged that in the locality where the house was situated there was a custom of paying Haqe-chaharum and to avoid that payment, the original deed dated 27th July, 1922 was drafted and executed in the form of a mortgage though it was actually an outright sale. According to the defendants, the house was actually sold to Madho Ram and was not mortgaged. The defendants also pleaded that if the deed dated 27th July, 1922 was held to be a mortgage, the mortgagees were entitled to get the payment of Rs. 6,442-8-0 as interest, Rs. 2,315 as costs of repairs, etc. The trial Court held that the deed dated 27th July, 1922 was a mortgage deed, that Dwarka Prasad did not sell the house to Madho Ram and that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of Rupees 1,709-14-0. The trial Court accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit for redemption on payment of Rs. 1,709-14-0. Against the judgment of the trial Court the defendants preferred an appeal before the District Judge, Varanasi, who allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff took the matter in second appeal to the High Court which framed an issue and remanded the case back to the lower appellate court for a fresh decision. The issue framed by the High Court was "Have the defendants become the owners of the property in dispute by adverse possession?" The High Court also directed the lower appellate court to decide the question of admissibility of Exts. A-25 and A-26. After remand the lower appellate court held that the deed dated 27th July, 1922 was a mortgage deed and not a sale-deed, and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the mortgage. The lower appellate court further held that the defendants had failed to prove that they had acquired title by adverse possession. The lower appellate court made the following order:—

"The appeal is allowed with half costs in this way that the suit is decreed for the redemption of the mortgage in question if the plaintiff pays within six months Rs. 1,700 as principal, Rs. 9.87 N. P. Prajawat paid before this suit and any Prajawat paid by the defendants during the pendency of this suit till the plaintiff deposits the entire sum due under this decree and the interest at the rate of Rs. 6-12-0 per month from 27th July, 1922 till the plaintiff deposits the entire sum due under this decree. The costs of the trial Court are made easy. Let the preliminary decree under Order 34, Rule 7, Civil P. C. be modified accordingly." Against the judgment and decree of the lower appellate court both the plaintiff and the defendants filed appeals before the High Court. The plaintiff prayed that the decree of the lower appellate court should be set aside and the decree of the trial Court should be restored. The defendants, on the other hand, prayed that the decree of the lower court should be set aside and the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed with costs. By its judgment dated 27th April, 1964 the High Court dismissed the second appeal preferred by the defendants but allowed the plaintiff's appeal and set aside the judgment of the lower appellate court and restored the judgment of the trial Court. The High Court further remanded the case to the lower appellate court with the direction that "the defendants be asked to render accounts before they claim any payment from the plaintiff at the time of redemption of the mortgage". The present appeals are brought by special leave against the judgment of the Allahabad High Court dated 27th April, 1964 in Second Appeals Nos 4940 and 3660 of 1961.

2. In support of these appeals it was contended by Mr Sinha that the deed Ex. 4 dated 27th July, 1922 was a sale deed and not a mortgage deed. It was pointed out that there was a subsequent deed of sale dated 8th October 1922 Ex. A-26 which is named 'Titimma Bainama'. The contention was that the document Ex. 4 dated 27th July, 1922 must be construed along with Ex. A-26 which forms part of the same transaction and so construed the transaction was not a usufructuary mortgage but was an outright sale. We are unable to accept the argument put forward on behalf of the appellant. Exhibit A-26 dated 8th October, 1922 is not a registered document, and is hence not admissible in evidence to prove the nature of the transaction covered by the registered mortgage deed Ex. 4 dated 27th July, 1922. If Ex. 4 is taken by itself there is no doubt that the transaction is one of mortgage. The document Ex. 4 recites that in consideration of money advanced the executants "mortgage the said house 'Bhog Bhandak' bearing No 64/71 situate Mohalla Gola Dina Nath". Clause 2 provides a period of twenty years for redemption of the mortgage. Clause 6 of the document stipulates that the cost of repairs will be borne by the mortgagors. Clause 1 states

"That the said sum of Rupees Seventeen hundred half of which is Rupees Eight hundred and fifty will carry interest at the rate of twelve annas per cent monthly. The sum of Rupees six will be deducted towards rent monthly from the interest which will accrue. The possession of the house has been delivered to the said mortgagee Mahajan (money lender). The mortgagors will pay the balance of Rupees six annas twelve month by month to the said mortgagee after deducting the rent of Rupees six after giving the possession of the said house and shop."

Clause 4 provides:

"That we will go on paying the said Mahajan the sum of Rupees six twelve annas the balance of the interest monthly. If the whole or part of the interest remains unpaid we will pay at the time of redemption. If this amount of interest is not paid the said house shall not be redeemed."

The reading of these terms clearly shows that Ex. 4 was a mortgage deed and not a sale deed. It was contended on behalf of the appellants that in order to avoid the payment of Hage-chaharum, the original deed dated 27th July, 1922 was drafted and executed in the form of a mortgage but it was actually meant to be an outright sale. In support of this argument reference was made to Ex. A-26 dated 8th October, 1922. As we have already said Ex. A-26 was required to be registered under Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the absence of such registration this document cannot be received in evidence of any transaction affecting the property in view of Sec. 49 of the Registration Act. It was, however, urged on behalf of the appellants that the effect of Section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act was not to make Section 49 of the Registration Act applicable to documents which are compulsorily registrable by the provisions of Section 54, paragraph 2 of the Transfer of Property Act. In support of this contention reliance was placed on the decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, ILR 50 All 986 = (AIR 1928 All 726 (FB)).

3. Section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act states

"The chapters and sections of this Act which relate to contracts shall be taken as part of the Indian Contract Act, 1872

And Ss 54, Paragraphs 2 and 3, 59, 107 and 123 shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1908." Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act reads:

"Sale" is a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part-paid and part-promised.

Such transfer, in the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards or in the case of a reversion or other intangible thing, can be made only by a registered instrument.

In the case of tangible immoveable property of a value less than one hundred rupees, such transfer may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property."

Section 17 of the Registration Act states:

"17. (1) The following documents shall be registered if the property to which they relate is situate in a district in which, and if they have been executed on or after the date on which, Act No. XVI of 1864 or the Indian Registration Act, 1866 or the Indian Registration Act, 1871, or the Indian Registration Act, 1877, or this Act came or comes into force, namely:

(a) instruments of gift of immoveable property;

(b) other non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immoveable property.

(c) non-testamentary instruments which acknowledge the receipt or payment of any consideration on account of the creation, declaration, assignment, limitation or extinction of any such right, title or interest; and

(d) leases of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent;

(e) non-testamentary instruments transferring or assigning any decree or order of a Court or any award when such decree or order or award purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immoveable property."

Section 49 of the Registration Act prior to its amendment in 1929 read:

"No document required by Section 17 to be registered shall—

(a) affect any immoveable property comprised therein, or

(b) confer any power to adopt; or

(c) be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property or conferring such power, unless it has been registered."

By section 10 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, Section 49 was amended as follows:—

"No document required by Section 17 or by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 to be registered shall—

(a) affect any immoveable property comprised therein, or

(b) confer any power to adopt, or

Provided that an unregistered document affecting immoveable property and required by this Act or the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, to be registered may be received as evidence of a contract in a suit for specific performance under Chapter II of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, or as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of S. 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, or as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be affected by registered instrument."

The inclusion of the words "by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882" by the Amending Act, 1929 settled the doubt entertained as to whether the documents of which the registration was compulsory under the Transfer of Property Act, but not under Section 17 of the Registration Act were affected by Sec. 49 of the Registration Act. Section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act enacts that "sections 54, paragraphs 2 and 3, 59, 107 and 123 shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1908". It was previously supposed that the effect of this section was merely to add to the list of documents of which the registration was compulsory and not to include them in Section 17 so as to bring them within the scope of Section 49. This was the view taken by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sohan Lal's case, ILR 50 All 986 = (AIR 1928 All 726 (FB)) (supra). The same view was expressed in a Madras Case Rama Sahu v. Gowro Ratho, ILR 44 Mad 55 = (AIR 1921 Mad 337 (FB)) and by MacLeod, C. J. in a Bombay case Dawal v. Dharma, ILR 41 Bom 550 = (AIR 1917 Bom 203). We are however absolved in the present case from examining the correctness of these decisions. For these decisions have been superseded by subsequent legislation i.e., by the enactment of Act 21 of 1929 which by inserting in Section 49 of the Registration Act the words "or by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882" has made it clear that the documents in the supplemental list i.e. the documents of which registration is necessary under the Transfer of Property Act but not under the Registration Act fall within the scope of Section 49 of the Registration Act and if not registered are not admissible as evidence of any transaction affecting any immoveable property comprised therein, and do not affect any such immoveable property. We are accordingly of the opinion that Ex A-26 being unregistered is not admissible in evidence. In our opinion, Mr Sinha is unable to make good his argument on this aspect of the case.

4. Mr Sinha contended that in any event the High Court should not have remanded the case to the lower appellate court with a direction that the defendants should be asked to render accounts before they claim any payment from the plaintiff at the time of redemption of the mortgage. It was pointed out that the plaintiff did not file an appeal against the decree of the trial Court and in the absence of such an appeal the High Court was not legally justified in giving further relief to the plaintiff than that granted by the trial Court. In our opinion, there is justification for this argument. We accordingly set aside that portion of the decree of the High Court remanding the case to the lower appellate Court with a direction that the defendants should be asked to render accounts. Otherwise we affirm the decree of the High Court allowing the plaintiff's appeal with costs and setting aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate court and restoring judgment and decree of the trial Court dated 31st October, 1956.

5. Subject to this modification we dismiss these appeals. There will be no order as to costs in this Court.

SSG/D V C.

Order accordingly.

S. M. SIKRI, R. S. BACHAWAT
AND K. S. HEGDE, JJ.Deccan Merchants Co-operative Bank
Ltd., Appellant v. M/s Dalchand Jugraj
Jam and others, Respondents

Civil Appeal No. 358 of 1967, D/- 29-8-1968.

(A) Co-operative Societies — Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act (32 of 1961), S. 91 (1) — Scope — Dispute touching the business of the Society — Word business is used in narrower sense — It means actual trading or commercial or similar business activity of the Society.

The word "business" in sub-sec (1) of Sec. 91 has been used in narrower sense and it means the actual trading or other similar business activity of the Society which the Society is authorised to enter into under the Act and the Rules and bye-laws. Five kinds of disputes are mentioned in sub-section (1); first, disputes touching the constitution of a society; secondly, disputes touching election of the office-bearers of a society; thirdly, disputes touching the conduct of general meetings of a society, fourthly, disputes touching the management of a society, and fifthly, disputes touching the business of a society. It is clear that the word "business" in this context does not mean affairs of a society because election of office-bearers, conduct of general meetings and management of a society would be treated as affairs of a society. (Para 17)

(B) Co-operative Societies — Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act (32 of 1961), S. 91 (1) — Dispute touching the business of society — Ascertainment — Co-operative Bank acquiring a building — Dispute between the tenant of a member of the Bank in the building is not one touching the business of the Bank — No reference can be made.

Although the nature of business which a society does can be ascertained from the objects of the society, it cannot be said that whatever the society does or is necessarily required to do for the purpose of carrying out its objects is part of its business. The word "touching" is very wide and would include any matter which relates to or concerns the business of a society, but it is doubtful whether the word "affects" should also be used in defining the scope of the word "touching." The question whether a dispute touching the assets of a society would be a dispute touching the business of the Society would depend on the nature of the society and the rules and bye-laws governing it. Ordinarily, if a society owns buildings and lets out parts of buildings which it does not require for its own purpose it cannot be said that letting out of those parts is a part of the business of the society. But it may be that it is the business of a society to construct and buy houses and let them out to its members. In that case letting out property may be part of its business. Where the society is a co-operative Bank it cannot ordinarily be said to be engaged in business when it lets out properties owned by it. Therefore the dispute between a tenant and a member of the bank in a building which has subsequently been acquired by the Bank cannot be said to be a dispute touching the business of the Bank. AIR 1962 Bom 162 (FB), Ref. (Paras 11 and 18)

Further the word "dispute" covers only those disputes which are capable of being resolved by the Registrar or his nominee. It is very doubtful if the word "dispute" would include a dispute between a landlord society and a tenant when the landlord society has not been set up for the purpose of constructing or buying and letting out houses. In the presence of various rent Acts which give special privileges to tenants it would be difficult to state that such disputes were intended to be referred to the Registrar. (1879) 4 AC 182, Rel. on. (Para 23)

(C) Co-operative Societies — Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act (32 of 1961), S. 91 (1) — Dispute between a Society and a member or a person claiming through a member — Claim should arise through a transaction entered into by a member with the Society as a member. AIR 1946 Nag 16 and AIR 1961 Andh Pra 40, Overruled.

Before a person can be said to claim through a member, the claim should arise through a transaction or dealing which the member entered into with the society as a member. If a member entered into a transaction with the society not as a member but as a stranger, then he must be covered, if at all, by the provisions of Sec. 91 (1) (a) or (c). But once it is held that the original transaction was entered into by the member with the society as a member then any person who claims rights or title through that member must come within the provisions of Sec. 91 (1) (b). (Para 25)

(D) Co-operative Societies — Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act (32 of 1961), S. 91 — Provisions do not affect provisions of S. 28 of Bombay Act 57 of 1947.

The Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act was passed, in the main, to shorten litigation, lessen its costs and to provide a summary procedure for the determination of the disputes relating to the internal management of the societies. But under the Rent Act a different social objective is intended to be achieved and for achieving that social objective it is necessary that a dispute between the landlord and the tenant should be dealt with by the Courts set up under the Rent Act and in accordance with the special provisions of the Rent Act. This social objective does not impinge on the objective underlying the Act. The two Acts can be harmonised best by holding that in matters covered by the Rent Act, its provisions, rather than the provisions of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act should apply. In view of these considerations Sec. 91 of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act does not affect the provisions of Section 28 of the Rent Act.

 Senior Advocate, (Mr F. Nariman, Advoca-cate, and M/s K. L. Hathu and Atiqur Rehman, Advocates of M/s. Hathu and Co., with him), for Respondent (No 1),
 M/s P K. Chatterjee and S P Nayar, Advocates, for Respondents (Nos 2 & 3).

The following judgments of the Court were delivered by

SIKRI, J (on behalf of himself and Hegde, J). This appeal by certificate granted by the High Court of Judicature at Bombay is directed against its judgment allowing the writ petition filed by the firm M/s Dalichand Jugraj Jain, first respondent before us — hereinafter referred to as the petitioners — under Article 226 of the Constitution, and setting aside the order of the Assistant Registrar (D), Co-operative Societies, Bombay, referring the dispute between the petitioners and the Deccan Merchants Co-operative Bank Ltd., appellants before us hereinafter referred to as the Bank.

2. We may mention that in the petition filed before the High Court by the Petitioners there were four respondents, the first respondent was the Assistant Registrar (D), Co-operative Societies, Bombay, the second respondent was the Registrar's nominee, the third respondent was the Bank and the fourth respondent was Waman Wasudeo Wagh — heremafter referred to as the original owner. Before us the Bank is the appellant, while the petitioners and the three other respondents before the High Court are the First, second, third and fourth respondents

3. The main point that arises in this appeal is whether the dispute between the petitioners and the Bank can be referred by the Registrar for arbitration under sub-s (1) of Section 91 of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 (Mah. Act XXXII of 1961) hereinafter referred to as the Act.

4. Before we set out the relevant provisions of the Act it is necessary to state the relevant facts out of which the dispute arose. The original owner on June 29, 1961, executed an agreement by which he leased the entire ground-floor of building
 No 195—197 Shaikh Memon Street, Bombay, to the petitioners on a monthly rent of Rs. 250/-. Clause 6 of this agreement mentions that the property had been mortgaged to the Bank. The appellant was established as a Banking company in the year 1917 as a co-operative society under the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912 (Central Act) and they are deemed to be registered under the Act. The original owner was the Chairman of the Bank, and he had taken a loan from the Bank and as security for the due payment of the loan taken by him he had deposited the title deeds of the said property with the Bank, and thus mortgaged the building to the Bank.

5. It appears that certain arbitration proceedings between the Bank and the original owner took place before the Registrar's nominee, Bombay Greater and Bombay, and a consent award was given between the parties on October 26, 1961, under which the original owner was ordered to pay to the Bank a sum of Rs 6,00,000/- by certain instalments as therein provided. Clause 5 of the said consent award mentioned that the said immovable property at 195-197 Shaikh Memon Street, would continue as security for the claims of the Bank till entire satisfaction. It further appears that the original owner committed default in making payment of the amount under the consent award and thereupon, in execution of the said award, an order was made on January 3, 1963, under Sec. 98 of the Act, for the sale of the said property. As the property could not be sold for want of buyers, the Collector of Bombay made an order and issued a certificate of transfer, dated May 13, 1963, under Section 100 of the Act, directing that the right, title and interest of the owner in the said property would be transferred to the Bank subject to the terms and conditions laid down in the schedule to the said certificate of transfer. In accordance with the directions given to the Revenue Inspector, the Revenue Inspector of the Collector of Bombay prepared a list of the tenants of the property on May 15, 1963, and furnished the same to the Bank. Physical possession of the property was also handed over to the Bank.

6. On June 5, 1963, the Bank addressed a letter to the petitioners stating that the Bank had come to know that they were occupying the entire ground floor of the building (situate at 195-197, Shaikh Memon Road, Bombay) transferred to the Bank under Section 100 of the Act, and further stating that their occupation was unauthorised and otherwise illegal and they had neither any right nor title nor interest to continue in occupation of the same. The Bank called upon them to quit, vacate and deliver vacant peaceful possession of the portion of the building in their occupation within 48 hours from the receipt of this notice failing which appropriate legal proceedings would be adopted.

7. The petitioners replied on June 24, 1963, challenging the transfer of the property to the Bank and also denying that they were in unauthorised or illegal occupation. Before this the Bank, on June 11, 1963, had applied to the District Deputy Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Bombay, under Sections 91-96 of the Act, praying that the dispute between the Bank and the petitioners be referred to arbitration. In this application seven parties were made respondents including the original owner and the petitioners. We are not concerned with the other five respondents.

8. It was stated in the application that the Bank, pursuant to the certificate issued by the Collector under Section 100 of the Act, had been put in possession of the building at No. 195-197 Shaikh Memon Street, Bombay, but the original owner, however, retained possession of part of the property in his possession or in the possession of the petitioners and the other five respondents. It was asserted that the seven respondents had no right, title or interest to the suit premises, and, at any rate, they are not tenants or sub-tenants of the suit premises either within the meaning of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, hereinafter referred to as the Rent Act, or the Transfer of Property Act. It was further stated that the other six respondents were claiming through the original owner who was a member of the Bank. It was further alleged that by virtue of the said certificate issued under Sec. 100 of the Act, the Bank was entitled to vacant and peaceful possession of the suit premises by evicting the seven respondents. It was also alleged that the dispute fell within the ambit of Sections 91-96 of the Act and as such the same was capable of being referred for decision under Section 93 of the Act. It was inter alia prayed that the dispute be referred to the Registrar or to his nominee or to his Board of nominees under Sections 91 to 96 of the Act for decision and the respondents be ordered to vacate and deliver possession of the suit premises which was in their possession. Compensation, interest and costs were also claimed. On June 19, 1963, the Assistant Registrar passed the following order:

"After going through the plaint mentioned above, I, Shri G. V. Koimattur, Assistant Registrar C. S. (D) Bombay, am satisfied that a "dispute" within the meaning of Section 91 (1) of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act 1960 exists in this case and the same is therefore referred for decision to Shri K. C. Mandivkar, Registrar's Nominee."

9. On July 2, 1963, the nominee passed an order summoning the parties to appear before him on July 23, 1963. On September 6, 1963 the petitioners filed the petition under Article 226 of the Constitution. After setting out the facts mentioned above and Section 91 of the Act, it was submitted by them in the petition that "the dispute which is alleged in the said application dated 11th June 1963, is not one which falls within the scope and ambit of the said Section 91 of the said Act and/or between the parties therein specified." It was further submitted that the dispute was not one which touches the business of the Bank and that the petitioners were not the persons claiming through a member of the Bank. It was also submitted that in view of Section 28 of the Rent Act, the dispute which had been referred by the Assistant Registrar to his nominee could only be determined by the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, and that the Assistant Registrar had no jurisdiction to refer the said dispute to his nominee for determination. The petitioners accordingly prayed for issue of a writ of certiorari or other appropriate writ against the Assistant Registrar or his nominee and quashing the order dated June 19, 1963. We need not mention the other reliefs claimed in the petition.

10. The answer to the points raised in the petition depends in the main on the proper interpretation of Section 91 of the

11. Section 91 runs

"91. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, any dispute touching the constitution, elections of the office bearers, conduct of general meetings, management or business of a society shall be referred by any of the parties to the dispute, or by a federal society to which the society is affiliated, or by a creditor of the society, to the Registrar, if both the parties thereto are one or other of the following

(a) a Society, its committee, any past committee, any past or present officer, any past or present agent, any past or present servant or nominee, heir or legal representative or any deceased officer, deceased agent or deceased servant of the society, or the liquidator of the society;

(b) a member, past member or a person claiming through a member, past member or a deceased member of a society, or a society which is a member of the society,

(c) a person, other than a member of the society, who has been granted a loan by the society, or with whom the society has or had transactions under the provisions of Section 45, and any person claiming through such a person,

(d) a surety of a member, past member or a deceased member, or a person other than a member who has been granted a loan by the society under Section 45, whether such a surety is or is not a member of the society,

(e) any other society, or the Liquidator of such a society.

(2) When any question arises whether for the purposes of foregoing sub-section, a matter referred to for decision is a dispute or not, the question shall be considered by the Registrar, whose decision shall be final.

(3) Save as otherwise provided under sub-section (3) of Section 93, no court shall have jurisdiction to entertain any suit or other proceedings in respect of any dispute referred to in sub-section (1)

Explanation 1. — A dispute between the Liquidator of a society and the members of the same society shall not be referred to the Registrar under the provisions of sub-section (1).

Explanation 2 — For the purposes of this sub-section a dispute shall include—

(i) a claim for or against a Society for any debt or demand due to it from a member or one from it to a member, past member or the nominee, heir or legal representative of a deceased member or servant or employee, whether such a debt or demand be admitted or not,

(ii) a claim by a surety for any sum or demand due to him from the principal borrower in respect of a loan by a society and recovered from the surety owing to the default of the principal borrower, whether such a sum or demand be admitted or not;

(iii) a claim by a society for any loss caused to it by a member, past member or deceased member, by any officer, past officer or deceased officer, by any agent, past agent or deceased agent, or by any servant, past servant or deceased servant, or by its committee, past or present, whether such loss be admitted or not,

(iv) a refusal or failure by a member, past member or a nominee, heir or legal representative of a deceased member, to deliver possession to a society of land or any other asset resumed by it for breach of conditions of the assignment"

12. Sub-section (1) of Section 93 provides that if the Registrar is satisfied that any matter referred to him or brought to his notice is a dispute within the meaning of Section 91, the Registrar shall, subject to the rules, decide the dispute himself, or refer it for disposal to a nominee, or a board of nominees, appointed by the Registrar. Section 96 provides that when a dispute is referred to arbitration, the Registrar or his nominee or board of nominees may, after giving a reasonable opportunity to the parties to the dispute to be heard, make an award on the dispute

13. This case was heard along with two other cases by the Bombay High Court and various questions were debated before it. The High Court held.

(1) that the Registrar or the Assistant Registrar is bound to hear the petitioners before making the orders referring the dispute to his nominee;

(2) that the petitioners were not heard by the Assistant Registrar before the order of reference was made but it was not necessary to remand the matter to the Assistant Registrar for deciding the question about the existence of a dispute within the meaning of Section 91 after hearing the parties as the questions raised were general questions which arose in many cases and the parties desired that the position in law might be clarified,

(3) that the jurisdiction of the Court would be determined at the time of the institution of the suit when the plaint is filed and the plea of the defendant would not determine or change the forum;

(4) that the question whether a dispute within the meaning of Section 91 existed or not will have to be decided by reference to the averments made in the application for reference made under Rule 75 of the Rules;

(5) that the words "touching the business of the society" in Section 91 were very wide and would include any matter which relates to or concerns or affects the business of the society; in other words, the dispute need not directly arise out of the business of the society but it was enough if it had reference or relation to or concern with its business;

(6) that the dispute in regard to the possession of the premises occupied by the petitioners can be said to touch the business of the Bank;

(7) that the words "claiming through a member" must be given their ordinary meaning, that is, deriving title or rights through a member. At the same time weight must be attached to the word "member", and the title or rights claimed must be those to which a member was entitled or which he could claim by virtue of his being a member. The words "claiming through a member" therefore mean deriving such title or rights through a member as the member possessed or had acquired by reason of his being a member or in his capacity as a member; and

(8) that the petitioners cannot be said to be claiming through a member of the Bank as a member; consequently cl. (b) will not apply and the dispute between them and the Bank cannot be the subject-matter of a reference under sub-section (1) of Section 91.

14. The learned Counsel for the Bank, Dr. B. R. Naik, contends that:

(1) the High Court has acted in excess of jurisdiction and with material irregularity inasmuch as (a) it has entered into disputed questions of fact; (b) it has interfered with an interlocutory order, and (c) it has dealt with the case in spite of an alternative remedy being available to the petitioners under Section 154 of the Act;

(2) assuming, without admitting, the facts, the petitioners would be persons claiming through a member and accordingly the reference is good; and

(3) while making an order under Section 91 (2) of the Act the Registrar is concerned only with the averments in the plaint and not with the pleas of the defendant.

15. The learned Counsel for the petitioners, Mr. S. T. Desai, on the other hand, contends (1) that there is no dispute touching the business of the society; (2) that the petitioners were not claiming through a member as a member; (3) that the Rent Act (Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947) gives exclusive jurisdiction to the Court of Small Causes and accordingly the Registrar had no jurisdiction to refer the dispute to his nominee; and (4) that the petitioners should have been heard before the case was referred to the Registrar's nominee and, therefore, the reference is bad.

16. The principal questions which arise on the interpretation of Section 91 are two: (1) what is the meaning of the expression "touching the business of the society?" and (2) what is the meaning of the expression "a person claiming through a member" which occurs in Section 91 (1) (b)?

17. The answer depends on the words used in the Act. Although number of cases have been cited to us on similar expressions contained in various other Acts, both Indian and English, in the first instance, it is advisable to restrict the enquiry to the terms of the enactment itself, because the legislatures have been changing the words and expanding the scope of references to arbitrators or to the Registrars step by step. The sentence, namely, "notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force" clearly ousts the jurisdiction of Civil Courts if the dispute falls squarely within the ambit of Section 91 (1). Five kinds of disputes are mentioned in sub-sec. (1); first, disputes touching the constitution of a society; secondly, disputes touching election of the office-bearers of a society; thirdly, disputes touching the conduct of general meetings of a society; fourthly, disputes touching the management of a society; and fifthly, disputes touching the business of a society. It is clear that the word "business" in this context does not mean affairs of a society because election of office-bearers, conduct of general meetings and management of a society would be treated as affairs of a society. In this sub-section the word "business" has been used in a narrower sense and it means the actual trading or commercial or other similar business activity of the society which the society is authorised to enter into under the Act and the Rules and its bye-laws.

18 The question arises whether the dispute touching the assets of a society would be a dispute touching the business of a society. This would depend on the nature of the society and the rules and bye-laws governing it. Ordinarily, if a society owns buildings and lets out parts of buildings which it does not require for its own purpose it cannot be said that letting out of those parts is a part of the business of the society. But it may be that it is the business of a society to construct and buy houses and let them out to its members. In that case letting out property may be part of its business. In this case, the society is a co-operative bank and ordinarily a co-operative bank cannot be said to be engaged in business when it lets out properties owned by it. Therefore, it seems to us that the present dispute between a tenant and a member of the bank in a building which has subsequently been acquired by the Bank cannot be said to be a dispute touching the business of the Bank, and the appeal should fail on this short ground.

19 The High Court had followed the observations of the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in Farkhundali v. Potdar, 63 Bom LR 985=(AIR 1962 Bom 162) (FB), wherein it was observed

"The nature of business, which a society does, is to be ascertained from the objects of the society. But whatever the society does or is necessarily required to do for the purpose of carrying out its objects can be said to be part of its business. The word 'touching' is also very wide and would include any matter which relates to, concerns or affects the business of the society."

20. The Full Bench was construing Section 54 of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925 (Bombay Act VII of 1925), which, inter alia, provides

"54(1)(a) If any dispute touching the constitution or business of society arises between members or past members of the society or persons claiming through a member or past member or between members or past members or persons so claiming and any officer, agent or servant of the society past or present or between the society or its committee, and any officer, agent, member or servant of the society past or present, it shall be referred to the Registrar for decision by himself or his nominee"

21. The question before the Full Bench was whether it was open to an employee of a co-operative society to proceed against the society in respect of a

22. While we agree that the nature of business which a society does can be ascertained from the objects of the society, it is difficult to subscribe to the proposition that whatever the society does or is necessarily required to do for the purpose of carrying out its objects can be said to be part of its business. We however, agree that the word "touching" is very wide and would include any matter which relates to or concerns the business of a society, but we are doubtful whether the word "affects" should also be used in defining the scope of the word "touching".

23. One other limitation on the word "dispute" may also be placed and that is that the word "dispute" covers only those disputes which are capable of being resolved by the Registrar or his nominee. It seems to us very doubtful that the word "dispute" would include a dispute between a landlord society and a tenant when the landlord society has not been set up for the purpose of constructing or buying and letting out houses. In the presence of various rent Acts which give special privileges to tenants it would be difficult to say that such disputes were intended to be referred to the Registrar. Of course, this result may also follow from the interpretation of the Rent Act and the Co-operative Societies Act by applying other principles of construction.

24. This was the line of reasoning adopted by the House of Lords in E C Mulkern v. James Lord, (1879) 4 AC 182 in holding that "proceedings in respect of accounts under a mortgage and sale of the property, which might include title to redemption or a judgment of foreclosure, were not such disputes, between the society and a member, as the statutes (Friendly Societies Act (10 Geo 4, S 56) read with Sec 4 of 6 and 7 Will, 4, c. 82) had contemplated.

25 The appeal must also fail on the ground that even if it is a dispute touching the business of the society within the meaning of Section 91 (1) of the Act, it is not a dispute between a society and a member or a person claiming through a member. It seems to us that before a person can be said to claim through a member, the claim should arise through a transaction or dealing which the member entered into with the society as a member. If a member entered into a transaction with the society not as a member but as a stranger, then he must be covered, if at all, by the provisions of Section 91 (1) (a) or (c). But once it is held that the original transaction was entered into by the member with the society as a member then any person who claims rights or title through that member must come within the provisions of Section 91 (1) (b).

26. It has been held in various cases in England that disputes referable under similar Acts are only disputes between a society and a member of a society when he enters into a transaction with the society as a member. (See Morrison v. Clover, (1849) 154 ER 1231; Prentice v. London, (1875) 10 CP 679; Palliser v. Dale, (1897) 1 QB 257; Judson v. Ellesmere Port Ex-servicemen's Club, Ltd., 1948-1 All ER 844.) Similar view was expressed by the Bombay High Court in Shyam Co-operative Housing Society Ltd. v. Ramibai Bhagwansing, 54 Bom LR 517 = (AIR 1952 Bom 445) where Chagla, C. J., observed:

"Now before a case can fall under Section 54 (of the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act VII of 1925), it is not sufficient that there should be a dispute touching the business of the society. What is further required is that the dispute must be between the society and its member, and proper emphasis has got to be laid upon the expression "member" used in this section. The dispute must be between the society and the member as a member or quae a member. It must be a dispute in which the member must be interested as a member. It must relate to a transaction in which the member must be interested as a member."

27. In Krishna Ayyar v. Secy., Urban Bank Ltd., Calicut, ILR 56 Mad 970 = (AIR 1933 Mad 682) it was held that a dispute between a legal practitioner, who was a member, a director and the legal adviser of a co-operative bank, and the co-operative bank arising out of matters relating to the legal practitioner's acts as the Bank's Vakil was not a dispute within the Co-operative Societies Act (II of 1912) or the Madras Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1932). In coming to this conclusion, the learned Chief Justice followed the law as stated in England. He observed:

"I think it is clear that both under the Building Societies Act and the Friendly Societies Act in England which contain somewhat similar provisions as regards the settlement of disputes within the Society by the Registrar that, in order that such a dispute can be dealt with by the Registrar, it must be a dispute between the Society and a member in his capacity as member."

28. In Vegetols Ltd. v. Wholesale Co-op. Stores Ltd., 1956-1 Mad LJ 36 Rajamannar, C. J., observed:

"Reading clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of sub-section (1) of Section 51, we think that by necessary intendment, the dispute should be between the society and member quae member. . . For a claim to fall within Section 51, it should be a claim by the society against a member as a member touching the business of a society. There may be a liability of a member to the society which is not a liability incurred by the member as member. Such a liability will be outside the scope of Section 51."

29. In Mammu Keyi v. Thirurangadi Co-operative Rural Bank Ltd., ILR (1964) 1 Ker 83 it was held that a dispute between a society and the owner of a godown who happens to be a member of the society was not a dispute between the society and a member quae a member within the ambit of Section 51 of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act, 1932. In coming to this conclusion the learned Chief Justice followed 54 Bom LR 517 = (AIR 1952 Bom 445) and dissented from Mishrimal v. District Co-operative Growers' Association Ltd., Balaghat, AIR 1961 Madh Pra 40. In the latter case the Madhya Pradesh High Court had followed the view taken by the Nagpur High Court in Kisanlal v. Co-operative Central Bank Ltd., Seoni, AIR 1946 Nag 16. Srivastava, J., in the Madhya Pradesh case, distinguished the English cases on the ground that there the difficulty was felt on account of the wide sweep of the wording in Section 22 of the Friendly Societies Act inasmuch as any dispute whether connected with the business of the society or not could be brought within its ambit. He observed that if the contention was accepted that the word "member" restricted the scope of the rule to transactions entered into by a member in the capacity of a member, then the words "touching the business of a society" would be rendered wholly superfluous. In the Nagpur case AIR 1946 Nag 16 the plaintiff joint Hindu family were members of the Co-operative Bank and they were also treasurers of the Bank. It does not appear whether the treasurer had to be a member of the Co-operative Bank or not. If

be bad to be a member then the conclusion of the Nagpur High Court in this case that the dispute between the Co-operative Bank and the plaintiffs relating to their liability which arose out of their capacity as treasurers was referable to the Registrar seems to be correct. But if it was not necessary for the treasurer to be a member then we are doubtful whether the case was correctly decided. The Nagpur High Court was construing R. 26 of the Rules framed by the Provincial Government in exercise of the powers conferred on it by Section 43 of the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912. Rule 26 ran as follows:

"Any dispute touching the business of a co-operative society between members or past members of the society or persons claiming through a member or past member, or between a member or past member or persons so claiming and the committee or any officer, shall be referred to the Registrar

The reasoning of the Nagpur High Court does not appeal to us. Even if the expression "business of a co-operative society" occurring in the Rule is treated as not restricted to the dealings with the members of the society only but to include business which the co-operative societies under the law are empowered to transact, this does not mean that whenever a member enters into any transaction whatsoever with the society and a dispute arises out of that transaction then that dispute is a dispute between the society and a member of the society within the meaning of Rule 26. The High Court did not rest its conclusion on the words "or any officer" occurring in R. 26, although it referred to the meaning of the word "Officer". Therefore, we need not consider whether the decision can be sustained on that part of the Rule.

30. In our opinion, the view expressed by the Madras, Bombay and Kerala High Courts is preferable to the view expressed by the Madhya Pradesh and the Nagpur High Courts.

31. If this is the correct view, then was the lease or the tenancy rights obtained by the petitioners a right or title derived from a member as a member? It seems to us that when the original owner executed the lease, he was not acting as a member but as a mortgagor in possession, and, therefore, the Bank's claim does not fall within Section 91 (1) (b) of the Act.

32. This takes us to the point whether the Rent Act applies to the facts of this case and, accordingly, the jurisdiction of the Registrar is ousted, and it is only the Court of Small Causes which has jurisdiction to eject the petitioners.

33. The scheme of the various Rent Acts and the public policy underlying them are clear, the policy is to give protection to the tenants. Various powers have been conferred on the authorities under the Rent Acts to grant protection to the tenants against ejectment and other reliefs claimed by the landlords. Section 28 of the Rent Act inter alia provides

"28 (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any law and notwithstanding that by reason of the amount of the claim or for any other reason, the suit or proceeding would not, but for this provision, be within its jurisdiction,

(a) in Greater Bombay, the Court of Small Causes Bombay shall have jurisdiction to entertain and try any suit or proceeding between a landlord and a tenant relating to the recovery of rent or possession of any premises to which any of the provisions of this Part apply and to decide any application made under this Act and to deal with any claim or question arising out of this Act or any of its provisions, and subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), no other Court shall have jurisdiction to entertain any such suit, proceeding or application or to deal with such claim or question . . . This section expressly bars the jurisdiction of other Courts to entertain any suit, proceeding or application between a landlord and tenant relating to the recovery of possession of any premises and confers jurisdiction on the Courts mentioned in Section 28 to entertain the matter pending before the nominee of the Registrar. But it is said that the Registrar is not a Court within the meaning of Section 28 of the Act. This Court held in Thakur Jugal Kishore Sinha v. Sitamurhi Central Co-operative Bank Ltd., 1967-3 SCR 163 = (AIR 1967 SC 1494) that the Assistant Registrar, Co-operative Societies, acting under Section 48 of the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act, 1935, was functioning as a Court subordinate to the High Court for the purpose of Section 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1952. It was urged before us that the Registrar is also a Court for the purposes of S. 28 of the Rent Act. We need not decide this question because it seems to us that the jurisdiction of the Registrar is ousted on broader considerations.

34. Both Section 91 of the Act and Section 28 of the Rent Act start by excluding "anything contained in any other law". As observed by this Court in Shri Ram Narain v. Simla Banking Industrial Co., Ltd., 1956 SCR 603 at p. 615=(AIR 1956 SC 614 at p. 622), "it is, therefore, desirable to determine the overriding effect of one or the other of the relevant provisions in these two acts, in a given case, on much broader considerations of the purpose and policy underlying the two Acts and the clear intent conveyed by the language of the relevant provisions therein." We may mention that the two Acts which this Court had to deal with in that case were the Banking Companies Act, 1949 (X of 1949) and the Displaced Persons (Debts Adjustment) Act, 1951 (LXX of 1951).

35. The preamble of the Rent Act states:

"Whereas it is expedient to amend and consolidate the law relating to the control of rents and repairs of certain premises, of rates of hotels and lodging houses and evictions."

Section 4 of the Rent Act exempts certain premises from its operation but it does not exempt premises belonging to co-operative societies. It is common ground that the Rent Act applies to the premises in question. Section 11 of the Rent Act deals with the fixing of standard rent and Section 12 provides that "a landlord shall not be entitled to the recovery of possession of any premises so long as the tenant pays, or is ready and willing to pay, the amount of the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and observes and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of this Act", and it lays down procedure for the filing of a suit for the recovery of possession by landlord and for other matters. Section 13 provides that a landlord may recover possession of any premises under certain conditions. Section 28 provides for jurisdiction of the Courts to deal with the suits and proceedings. Section 29 provides for appeals.

36. If the matter is heard by the Registrar, none of these provisions would apply. We can hardly imagine that it was the intention of the legislature to deprive tenants in buildings owned by co-operative societies of the benefits given by the Rent Act. It seems to us that the Act was passed, in the main, to shorten litigation, lessen its costs and to provide a summary procedure for the determination of the disputes relating to the internal management of the societies. But under the Rent Act a different social objective is intended to be achieved and for achieving that social objective it is necessary that a dispute between the landlord and the tenant should be dealt with by the Courts set up under the Rent Act and in accordance with the special provisions of the Rent Act. This social objective does not impinge on the objective underlying the Act. It seems to us that the two acts can be harmonised best by holding that in matters covered by the Rent Act, its provisions, rather than the provisions of the Act, should apply. In view of these considerations we are of the opinion that Section 91 of the Act does not affect the provisions of Section 28 of the Rent Act.

37. We may now refer to the incidental points raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant.

38. In our opinion, the High Court has jurisdiction to go into the disputed questions of fact and to quash an interlocutory order even though some sort of alternative remedy exists under Sec. 154 of the Act. Section 154 of the Act inter alia enables the State Government to call for and examine the record of any inquiry or the proceedings of any other matter of any officer subordinate to them. This remedy can hardly be treated as an alternative remedy for the purposes of deciding the questions raised by the petitioners.

39. It is not necessary to deal with the third point raised by the learned Counsel for the Bank, namely, that the Registrar when making an order under Section 91 (2) of the Act, is concerned only with the averments in the plaint. Even if it is so it does not disable the petitioners from raising the point that on the facts as presented by them the provisions of Sec. 91 of the Act did not apply to the dispute.

40. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs to respondents Nos. 1-2.

41. BACHAWAT, J.: I agree that the dispute concerning the property purchased by the Society from one of its members is not a dispute touching the business of the Society. I also agree that the Court of Small Causes has exclusive jurisdiction under Section 28 of the Rent Act to entertain a proceeding by a landlord for ejectment of a tenant. A dispute concerning the ejectment of a tenant by a landlord is outside the purview of Section 91 of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act. It has also been argued that as the lease under which the contesting respondent is claiming was not executed by the owner in his capacity as a member of the Society, there is no dispute between the Society and a person claiming through a member. On this last question, I express no opinion. Having regard to our findings on the other two points, the appeal must fail. I, therefore, agree to the order proposed by my learned brother.

State Bank of India, Appellant v Chamandu Ram (dead) by his legal representative Gurbux Rai, Respondent

Civil Appeal No 449 of 1966, D/- 13-2-1969

(A) Hindu Law — Joint Hindu family — Coparcenership — Incidents — Joint Hindu family under Hindu law is not an individual but a body of individuals contemplated by Notification dated 15-2-52 issued by Government of Pakistan under S. 45 of Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Ordinance

A coparcenary under the Mitakshara School is a creature of law and cannot arise by act of parties except in so far that on adoption the adopted son becomes a coparcener with his adoptive father as regards ancestral properties of latter. The incidents of co-parcenership under the Mitakshara law are, first, the lineal male descendants of a person up to the third generation, acquire on birth ownership in the ancestral properties of such person, secondly, that such descendants can at any time work out their rights by asking for partition, thirdly, that till partition, each member has got ownership extending over the entire property, conjointly with the rest, fourthly, that as a result of such co-ownership the possession and enjoyment of the properties is common, fifthly, that no alienation of the property is possible unless it be for necessity, without the concurrence of the coparceners, and sixthly, that the interest of a deceased member lapses on his death to the survivors (1902) ILR 25 Mad 149 & (1883) ILR 7 Bom 467, Rel on (Para 7)

Having regard to the juristic nature of the Hindu joint family, according to the doctrine of Mitakshara, a Hindu joint family firm cannot be treated as an individual within the meaning of the notification dated 19th February, 1952, issued by Government of Pakistan under S 45 of the Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Ordinance (15 of 1949) but must be treated as a body of individuals whether incorporated or not within the meaning of that notification (Para 7)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 51 — Private International law — Voluntary assignment of debts — Joint Hindu family having cash deposits in a bank in Pakistan — Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Ordinance (15 of 1949), S 45 — Effect — Liability of the Bank in India in respect of such deposits is extinguished Civil Revision 104-D of 1958, D/- 12-9-63, (Punjab at Delhi), Reversed.

A joint Hindu family firm had, prior to partition, a cash credit account with the then Imperial Bank of India. The firm had pledged goods as security for the repayment of the advances made in the said account. On partition of India, the joint Hindu family and its members became evacuees and the then Imperial Bank of India, sold the pledged goods in the year 1948 for the realisation of its dues in the said cash credit account and credited a certain sum left as surplus balance after the adjustment of the dues of the Imperial Bank of India in the said account. On October 15, 1949, the Pakistan Government promulgated Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Ordinance, 1949 (Ordinance No XV of 1949) whereby all property in Pakistan in which an evacuee had any right or interest vested in the Custodian of Evacuee property with retrospective effect from March 1, 1947. The karta of the firm applied under Section 13 of the Displaced Persons (Debts Adjustment) Act claiming the amount from State Bank of India contending that the said amount had not become evacuee property and that the liability of the Imperial Bank of India had not therefore ceased. On the question whether the liability of the Bank to the firm in India be deemed to be extinguished in view of the operation of the Pakistan Evacuee Property Ordinance and in view of the fact that the amount in dispute had become vested in the Custodian of Evacuee Property, Pakistan with effect from March 1, 1947, by virtue of the provisions of the Ordinance

Held that under Private International law in such a case the question whether a given contractual right e.g., a debt, was transferred under such legislation and whether therefore payment to a custodian or administrator had the effect of discharging the debtor, depended on the situs of that right and not so much on the proper law of the contract from which the right arose. A distinction had to be made between (1) questions of assignability, which are governed by the proper law of the debt, and (2) question of attachment or garnishment (involuntary assignment) governed by the lex situs of the debt. If, for example an involuntary assignment occurred after a voluntary assignment had already been made, the lex situs determined whether the rights of the voluntary assignee had been postponed or defeated. If the voluntary assignment occurred first, the lex situs determined what rights, if any, the voluntary assignee had acquired. Assignment of tangible movables being governed by lex situs, the liability of the Bank ought to be held, to have been extinguished. (1891) 1 Ch 536 & 1954 AC 495, Ref.; Civil Revn. Mr. Niren De, Attorney General for India and Mr. S. V. Gupte Senior Advocate, (Mr. H. L. Anand, Advocate, of M/s. Anand Das Gupta and Sagar and Mr. K. B. Mehta, Advocate with them), for Appellant; M/s. Bishambar Lal, M. R. Garg, H. K. Puri and Radha Kishan Makhija, Advocates, for Respondent.

RAMASWAMI, J.: M/s. Ghamandi Ram Gurbax Rai, a joint Hindu Family firm consisting of Ghamandi Ram, since deceased,

Gurbax Rai, Chaman Lal and Jagan Nath, used to carry on business in Bhawalpur State now forming part of West Pakistan before the partition of India. Shri Ghamandi Ram was the manager and karta of the said joint Hindu family firm during the material period. Before the partition of India, the joint Hindu family firm had a cash credit account in its name in the then Imperial Bank of India, Bhawalpur State now within Pakistan territory. The said firm had pledged goods as security for the repayment of the advances made in the said account. On the partition of India, the joint Hindu family and its members admittedly became evacuees and the then Imperial Bank of India, Bhawalpur State sold the pledged goods in the year 1948 for the realisation of its dues in the said cash credit account and credited a sum of Rs. 2,541/11/- left as surplus balance after the adjustment of the dues of the Imperial Bank of India in the said account. On October 15, 1949, the Pakistan Government promulgated Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Ordinance, 1949 (Ordinance No. XV of 1949) whereby all property in Pakistan in which an evacuee had any right or interest vested in the Custodian of of Evacuee Property with retrospective effect from March 1, 1947. The expression 'evacuee property' was defined by Section 2, sub-section (3) of the Ordinance to include any right or interest in joint Hindu family property. 'Cash deposits in Banks' were however excepted from the definition of the term 'property' by Section 2 (5) of the Ordinance. The Ordinance was amended in 1951 by the Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Amendment Act, 1951 (Act No. VI of 1951) whereby Section 2 (5) of the Ordinance was amended so as to bring cash deposits in Banks within the definition of the term 'property'. By notification dated February 19, 1952, the Pakistan Government exempted from the operation of the provisions of the said Ordinance 'cash deposits made at Banks by persons other than companies or associations or bodies of individuals whether incorporated or not.'

2. On May 9, 1953, Shri Ghamandi Ram (now deceased) as manager and karta of the joint Hindu family firm filed an application under Section 13 of the Displaced Persons (Debts Adjustment) Act, 1951 (Act No. 70 of 1951) before the Tribunal constituted under the said Act at Delhi claiming Rs. 3,165/11/- including

Rs 2,341/11/- on account of the said principal and interest at 6 per cent per annum on the ground that the said amount had not become evacuee property and the liability of the Imperial Bank of India had not therefore ceased. During the pendency of the proceedings before the Tribunal the appellant Bank was constituted under the provisions of the State Bank of India Act, 1955 (Act No. 23 of 1955) and succeeded to the entire rights and liabilities of the Imperial Bank of India. The appellant was accordingly substituted in the said proceedings for the Imperial Bank of India. By its order dated November 1, 1956, the Tribunal dismissed the application of the respondent on the ground that in terms of the law enforced in Pakistan the deposit in the Bank in the account of the firm had become an evacuee property and would be deemed to have vested in the Custodian with effect from March 1, 1947 and by virtue of the said vesting the liability of the Bank had ceased. The Tribunal further held that the only property in the pledged goods, which belonged to the firm, was the equity of redemption and that had vested in the Custodian being a 'property' within the meaning of the said Ordinance. The respondent took the matter in revision before the Punjab High Court being Civil Revision No 104-D of 1958. The application was allowed by Mr Justice D K. Mahajan by his judgment dated 12th September, 1963 on the ground that the amount claimed by the respondent was cash deposit made by an individual in terms of the notification dated February 19, 1952 and was thus beyond the purview of the provisions of the Ordinance. The learned Judge accordingly set aside the order of the Tribunal and granted a decree in favour of the respondent for the amounts claimed. This appeal is brought by special leave from the judgment of the Punjab High Court dated 12th September, 1963 in Civil Revision No 104-D of 1958.

3 Section 2 sub-section (3) of the Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Ordinance, 1949 (Ordinance No 15 of 1949) defines the term 'evacuee property' as meaning any property in which an evacuee has any right or interest, or which is held by or for him in trust, and includes—

"(a) any right or interest in joint Hindu family property which would accrue to the evacuee upon the partition of the same, or

(b) property obtained from an evacuee after the twenty-eighth day of February, 1947, until confirmed by the Custodian, but does not include—

(i) any movable property in the immediate physical possession of any evacuee, or

(ii) any property belonging to a joint stock company the head office of which was situated, before the fifteenth day of August 1947, in any place in the territories now comprising India, and continues to be so situated after the said date."

Section 2 sub-section (5) defines the term 'property' as follows—

'Property' means property of any kind, and includes any right or interest in such property and any debt or actionable claim, but does not include a mere right to sue or a cash deposit in a bank."

Section 2 (5) of the Ordinance was amended by Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Amendment Act, 1951 (Act No. VI of 1951) in the following manner

"2 (b) in clause (5) the words 'or a cash deposit in Bank' shall be omitted".

Section 6 of the Ordinance states

"6 (1) All evacuee property shall vest and shall be deemed always to have vested in the Custodian with effect from the first day of March, 1947."

The notification of February 19, 1952 issued by the Pakistan Government in exercise of the powers conferred by Sec 45 of the Ordinance is in the following terms:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by Section 45 of the Pakistan (Administration of Evacuee Property) Ordinance XV of 1949, the Central Government in supersession of its Ministry's notification F 22 (151-P dated the 9th May, 1951 is pleased to exempt from the operation of the provisions of the said Ordinance cash deposits made at Banks by persons other than companies or associations or bodies of individuals whether incorporated or not."

Section 7 of the Ordinance states

"7. (1) Every person who is, or has at any time after the twenty-eighth day of February, 1947, been in possession, supervision or management of any evacuee property, shall be deemed to hold or to have held, as the case may be, such property on behalf of the Custodian.

(2) Every person who is in possession supervision or management of any evacuee property or property which he knows or has reason to believe is evacuee property shall, as soon as may be but not later than sixty days from the commencement of this Ordinance, intimate to the Custodian in writing his willingness to surrender such property to the Custodian or to any person authorised by the Custodian in this behalf upon receipt of a notice from the Custodian that the property is evacuee property, and shall surrender the same if called upon by the Custodian or any person authorised as aforesaid.

(3) The provisions of sub-section (2) shall not apply to any person who is in possession, supervision or management of any evacuee property by virtue of an allotment made by a Rehabilitation Authority”.

4. Section 7 of the Ordinance was amended in 1951 in the following terms:—

“5. In sub-section (2) of Section 7 of the Ordinance for the words “sixty days from the commencement of this Ordinance” the words “such date as may be notified by the Central Government in the Official Gazette” shall be substituted, and the words “upon receipt of a notice from the Custodian that the property is evacuee property” shall be omitted”.

5. Section 11 of the Ordinance states:

“11. (1) Any amount due to any evacuee, or payable in respect of any evacuee property, shall be paid to the Custodian by the person liable to pay the same.

(2) Any person who makes a payment under sub-section (1) shall be discharged from further liability to pay to the extent of the payment made.

(3) Without prejudice to any penalty to which he may be liable under Section 29, any person who makes or has made any payment otherwise than in accordance with sub-section (1) or any law for the time being in force requiring payment of any such amount as is mentioned in sub-section (1) to be made to the Custodian shall not be discharged from his obligation to pay the amount due, and the right of the Custodian to enforce such obligation against such person shall remain unaffected”.

6. The first question involved in this appeal is whether upon a correct interpretation of the notification of the Pakistan Government dated February 19, 1952, the joint Hindu family firm “Ghamandi Ram Gurbax Rai” was ‘a body of individuals’ within the meaning of the notification and whether the amount in dispute had accordingly become vested in the Custodian of Evacuee Property, Pakistan with effect from March 1, 1947 by virtue of the provisions of the Ordinance thereby divesting the said joint Hindu family firm of its interest therein.

7. According to the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law all the property of a Hindu joint family is held in collective ownership by all the coparceners in a quasi-corporate capacity. The textual authority of the Mitakshara lays down in express terms that the joint family property is held in trust for the joint family members then living and thereafter to be born (See Mitakshara, Chapter I. 1—27). The incidents of co-parcenership under the Mitakshara law are: first, the lineal male descendants of a person up to the third generation, acquire on birth ownership in the ancestral properties of such person; secondly that such descendants can at any time work out their rights by asking for partition; thirdly, that till partition each member has got ownership extending over the entire property conjointly with the rest; fourthly, that as a result of such co-ownership the possession and enjoyment of the properties is common; fifthly that no alienation of the property is possible unless it be for necessity, without the concurrence of the coparceners, and sixthly, that the interest of a deceased member lapses on his death to the survivors. A coparcenery under the Mitakshara School is a creature of law and cannot arise by act of parties except in so far that on adoption the adopted son becomes a co-parcener with his adoptive father as regards the ancestral properties of the latter. In Sundarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri, (1902) ILR 25 Mad 149 at p. 154. Mr. Justice Bhashyam Ayyangar stated the legal position thus:—

“The Mitakshara doctrine of joint family property is founded upon the existence of an undivided family, as a corporate body [Gan Savant Bal Savant v. Narayan Dhond Savant, (1883) ILR 7 Bom 467 and Mayne’s ‘Hindu Law and Usage’, 6th edition, paragraph 270] and the possession of property by such corporate body. The first requisite therefore is the family unit; and the possession by it of property is the second requisite. For the present purpose, female members of the family may be left out of consideration and the conception of a Hindu family is a common male ancestor with his lineal descendants in the male line, and so long as that family is in its normal condition viz., the undivided state—it forms a corporate body. Such corporate body, with its heritage, is purely a creature of law and cannot be created by act of parties, save in so far that, by adoption, a stranger may be affiliated as a member of that corporate family"

Adverting to the nature of the property owned by such a family the learned Judge proceeded to state

"As regards the property of such family the 'unobstructed heritage' devolving on such family, with its accretions, is owned by the family, as a corporate body, and one or more branches of that family, each forming a corporate body within a larger corporate body, may possess separate 'unobstructed heritage' which, with its accretions, may be exclusively owned by such branch as a corporate body"

Having regard to the juristic nature of the Hindu joint family, according to the doctrine of Mitakshara, we are of the opinion that the Hindu joint family firm of Ghamandi Ram Curbax Rai cannot be treated as an 'individual' within the meaning of the notification of the Pakistan Government dated 19th February, 1952, but the said firm must be treated as 'a body of individuals whether incorporated or not' within the meaning of that notification

8 We proceed to consider the next question arising in this appeal viz., whether the liability of the appellant to the respondent in India be deemed to be extinguished in view of the operation of the Pakistan Evacuee Property Ordinance and in view of our finding that the amount in dispute had become vested in the Custodian of Evacuee Property, Pakistan with effect from March 1, 1947 by virtue of the provisions of the Ordinance. It is not disputed that appellant had got garnishable assets in Pakistan out of which the Pakistan Government could realise the amount by attachment of the property of the appellant. The question is what is the rule of Private International Law in such a case of involuntary assignment of debts. The question has arisen in English Courts with regard to the legislation passed during or after a war by which the contractual rights of the enemies vested in the public authorities such as custodians or administrators of enemy property. It was held in English Courts that in such a case the question whether a given contractual right, e.g. a debt, is transferred under such legislation and whether therefore payment to a custodian or administrator has the effect of discharging the debtor, depends on the situs of that right and not so much on the proper law of the contract from which the right arises (See Dicey Conflict of Laws, 8th Ed p 780). For example in Arab Bank Ltd v Barclays Bank (Dominion, Colonial and Overseas), 1954 AC 495, the appellant Bank had a credit balance on the current account with the respondent bank's branch in Jerusalem. The British Mandate over Palestine expired at midnight on May 14, 1948, and thereupon the Provisional Council of State and the Provisional Government of the State of Israel were constituted. War broke out between Israel and the Arab States, which rendered the further performance of the contract of current account impossible. From the date of the termination of the Mandate the appellant Bank's premises were situate in Arab-controlled territory and the respondent Bank's premises were situated in Israel territory. By legislation the State of Israel vested in an official called the 'Custodian of the Property of Absentees', the property in the State of Israel belonging to a class of persons and corporations which included the Arab Bank. The respondents paid the appellants' credit balances, amounting to some £ 583000 to the Custodian. In 1950 the appellant sued the respondents for this sum. It was held that the right to be paid the credit balance survived the outbreak of war, remaining in existence subject to the suspension of the appellant bank's right to recover it. Being locally situate in Israel, it became subject to the legislation of that State and vested in the custodian, and was not recoverable by the appellant bank from the respondent bank. The key to the problem lies in distinguishing between (1) questions of assignability, which are governed by the proper law of the debt, and (2) question of attachment or garnishment (involuntary assignment) governed by the lex situs of the debt. If, for example an involuntary assignment occurs after a voluntary assignment has already been made, the lex situs determines whether the rights of the voluntary assignee have been postponed or defeated. If the voluntary assignment occurs first, the lex situs determines what rights, if any, the voluntary assignee has acquired. A question of priorities arose in the case of Re Queensland Mercantile and Agency Co, 1891-1 Ch 536, the fact of which were as follows

"The Union Bank of Australia held debentures issued by the Queensland Company charging the shares in that company that were not fully paid up. The Bank was domiciled in England and the company in Queensland. After the capital had been called up, but before it was paid by the shareholders, who thus became debtors of the company, the X Company domiciled in Scotland, began an action for negligence in Scotland against the Queensland Company, and immediately issued the Scottish process of arrestment against numerous shareholders who were domiciled in Scotland. The effect of this process according to Scottish law was to prevent the shareholders, pending a decision in the action of negligence, from paying the calls to the company". The question that fell to be decided was whether the Union Bank, as debentureholders, were entitled to be paid first out of the unpaid shares, according to the law of England and of Queensland; or whether the X Company in accordance with the law of Scotland, had a prior right over the shares to the extent of the damages that they might be awarded in the action of negligence. A question of priorities between two assignees was thus raised. The Union Bank contended that the question fell to be decided by the law of Queensland, since the Queensland company was a creditor in respect of the unpaid shares and any assignment by it must be tested by the law of its domicil. North, J., however, applied Scottish law. His reasoning was that since the debtors were resident in Scotland and therefore the unpaid calls which formed the subject-matter of the assignments were situated in that country, the assignments must rank in the order prescribed by Scottish Law. He assimilated choses in action to tangible movables, asserting that an assignment of the latter class of property was governed by the lex situs. In our opinion the same legal position prevails in India and therefore the liability of the appellant in this case to the respondent in India must be deemed to have been extinguished.

9. For these reasons we hold that this appeal should be allowed, the Judgment of the Punjab High Court dated 12th September, 1963 in Civil Revision No. 104-D of 1958 should be set aside and the judgment of the Tribunal under the Displaced Persons (Debts Adjustment) Act in case No. 74/11/13 of 1956/1952 should be restored dismissing the claim of the respondent. There will be no order with regard to costs in the High Court. But as directed by this Court on 30th October, 1964, while granting Special leave, appellant will pay the cost of respondents in this Court.

J. M. SHELAT AND V. BHARGAVA, JJ.
Town Municipal Council, Athani (In all the Appeals), Appellant v. Presiding Officer, Labour Court, Hubli and others etc., Respondents.

Civil Appeals Nos. 170 to 173 of 1968, D/- 20-3-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 136 — New point before Supreme Court — Question of limitation — Plea that application under Section 33C (2), Industrial Disputes Act was barred by limitation — Question raises a plea of want of jurisdiction — Question being a pure question of law which could be decided on the basis of facts on record in the case, the Supreme Court permitted it to be raised before it even though it was not put forward either in the High Court or before the Labour Court. (Para 4)

(B) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 33C (2) — Application claiming computation of benefit for overtime work and work done on weekly off days at certain rates — Rates pleaded in application not disputed by employer — Jurisdiction of Labour Court to entertain application not barred by S. 20 (1), Minimum Wages Act — (Minimum Wages Act (1948), S. 20) — (Payment of Wages Act (1936), S. 15.)

Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act cannot be invoked in respect of an application in which the claim of the workmen is for computation of their benefit at a certain rate for overtime work and work done on weekly off days where the employer contesting the application does not raise a dispute in relation to the rate pleaded by the applicants but merely alleges that no rates at all had been prescribed by the Government. Hence no question of the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to entertain the application under S. 33C (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act being barred because of the provisions of S. 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act can arise at all in such a case. (Para 7)

The language used at all stages of the Minimum Wages Act leads to the clear inference that that Act is primarily concerned with fixing of rates — Rates of minimum wages, overtime rates, rate for payment for work on a day of rest and is not really intended to be an Act for enforcement of payment of wages for which provision is made in other laws, such as the Payment of Wages Act No. 4 of 1936, and the Industrial Disputes Act No 14 of 1947. The language used in Section 20 (1) shows that the Authority appointed under that provision of law is to exercise jurisdiction for deciding claims which relate to rates of wages, rates for payment of work done on days of rest and overtime rates. The purpose of Section 20 (1) seems to be to ensure that the rates prescribed under the Minimum Wages Act are complied with by the employer in making payments and, if any attempt is made to make payments at lower rates, the workmen are given the right to invoke the aid of the Authority appointed under Section 20 (1). In cases where there is no dispute as to rates of wages, and the only question is whether a particular payment at the agreed rate in respect of minimum wages, overtime or work on off-days is due to a workman or not, the appropriate remedy is provided in Section 15 of the Payment of Wages Act. In cases where section 15 of the Payment of Wages Act may not provide adequate remedy, the remedy can be sought either under Section 33C of the Industrial Disputes Act or by raising an industrial dispute under the Act and having it decided under the various provisions of that Act. (Para 6)

JM/JM/B799/69/D

The power to make orders for payment of actual amount due to an employee under Section 20 (3) Minimum Wages Act cannot, be interpreted as indicating that the jurisdiction to the Authority under Section 20 (1) has been given for the purpose of enforcement of payment of amounts and not for the purpose of ensuring compliance by the employer with the various rates fixed under that Act. (Para 6)

(C) Limitation Act (1963), Article 137 — Application under other Acts — Application under Section 33C (2), Industrial Disputes Act — Article does not apply (1968) 70 Bom LR 104, Overruled — (Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 33C (2)).

Article 137 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, 1963 does not apply to applications under Section 33C (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act, so that no limitation is prescribed for such applications (1968) 70 Bom LR 104, Overruled, AIR 1953 SC 98 and AIR 1964 SC 752, Rel on

(Para 12)

In considering the scope of the parallel provision contained in Article 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908 it was held by the Supreme Court that that article had been held by a long catena of decisions to be confined to application under the Civil P C and there was no reason to hold that the subsequent amendment of Articles 158 and 178 of that Act had the effect of altering that long acquired meaning of Article 181 on the sole and simple ground that after the amendment the reason on which the old construction was founded was no longer available. That view expressed by the Court must be held to be applicable, even when considering the scope and applicability of Article 137 in the new Limitation Act of 1963.

(Para 10)

When the Supreme Court held that all the articles in the third division to the schedule, including Article 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 governed applications under the Code of Civil Procedure only, it clearly implied that the applications must be presented to a Court governed by the Code of Civil Procedure. At best, the amendments now made in the Act of 1963 enlarge the scope of the third division of the schedule so as also to include some applications presented to courts governed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. One factor at least remains constant and that is that the applications must be to courts to be governed by the articles in this division. The scope of the various articles in this division cannot be held to have been so enlarged as to include within them applications to bodies other than courts, such as a quasi-judicial tribunal, or even an executive authority. An Industrial Tribunal or a Labour Court dealing with applications or references under the Act are not courts and they are in no way governed either by the Code of Civil Procedure or the Code of Criminal Procedure. Mr. B. Sen, Senior Advocate (M/s. S. N. Prasad and R. B. Datar, Advocates with him), for Appellant (In all the Appeals); Mr. Janardan Sharma, Advocate, for Respondents Nos. 4 to 14 (In C. A. No. 170 of 1968), Respondents Nos. 4 to 24 and 26 to 53 (In C. A. No. 171 of 1968), Respondent No. 4 (In C. A. No. 172 of 1968) and Respondents Nos. 4 to 17 (In C. A. No. 173 of 1968).

BHARGAVA, J.: These four connected appeals have been filed, by special leave, by the Town Municipal Council, Athani, and are directed against a common judgment of the High Court of Mysore in four writ petitions filed by the appellant under Article 226 of the Constitution, dismissing the writ petitions. The circumstances in which these appeals have arisen may be briefly stated.

2. Four different applications under Section 33C (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act No. 14 of 1947 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") were filed in the Labour Court, Hubli, by various workmen of the appellant. Application (LCH) No. 139 of 1965 was filed by eleven workmen on 28th July, 1965, seeking computation of their claim for overtime work for the period between 1st April, 1955 and 31st December, 1957, and for work done on weekly off-days for the period between 1st April, 1955 and 31st December, 1960. The amount claimed by each workman was separately indicated in the application under each head. The total claim of all the workmen was computed at Rs. 62,420.82 P. according to the workmen themselves. The second application (LCH) No. 138 of 1965 was presented by 50 workmen on 23rd July, 1965, putting forward a claim for washing allowance at Rs. 36 each from 1st January, 1964 to 30th June, 1965, and cost of uniform at Rs. 40 each from 1st January, 1964 to 30th June, 1965 in respect of 18 of those 50 workmen. The third application (LCH) No. 101 of 1965 was filed by one workman alone on 19th April 1965, claiming a sum of Rs. 8,910.72 P. in respect of his overtime work and compensation for work done on weekly off-days. The fourth application (LCH) No. 140 of 1965 was filed on 26th July, 1965 by 14 workmen making a total claim of Rs. 17,302.60 P., for work done on weekly off-days during the period from 1st December, 1960 to 30th June, 1965. 13 of the workmen claimed that they were entitled to payment at Rs. 1,190 each, while one workman's claim was to the extent of Rupees 1,832.60 P. The Labour Court at Hubli entertained all these applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act, computed the amounts due to the various workmen who had filed the applications, and directed the appellant to make payment of the amounts found due. Thereupon, the appellant challenged the decision of the Labour Court before the High Court of Mysore by four different writ petitions under Article 226 of the Constitution. The order in Application (LCH) No. 139/1965 was challenged in Writ Petition No. 741 of 1966, that in Application (LCH) No. 138/1965 in Writ Petition No. 973 of 1966; that in Application (LCH) No. 101 of 1965 in Writ Petition No. 974 of 1966; and that in Application (LCH) No. 140/1965 in Writ Petition No. 975/1966. The principal ground for challenging the decision of the Labour Court was that all these amounts could have been claimed by the workmen by filing applications under Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act No. 11 of 1948: and, since that Act was a self-contained Act making provision for relief in such cases, the jurisdiction of the Labour Court under the general Act, viz., the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 was taken away and excluded. It was further pleaded that the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to deal with the claims under Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act had become time-barred and such claims, which had become time-barred, could not be entertained by the Labour Court under Section 33C (2) of the Act. Some other pleas were also taken in the writ petitions which we need not mention as they have not been raised before us. The High Court did not accept the plea put forward on behalf of the appellant and dismissed the writ petitions by a common order dated 25th August, 1967. These four appeals are directed against that common order dismissing the four writ petitions. Civil Appeals Nos. 170, 171, 172 and 173 of 1968 are directed against the order governing Writ Petitions Nos. 741/1966, 973/1966, 974/1966 and 975/1966 respectively.

3. In these appeals in this Court also, the principal point urged by learned counsel for the appellant was the same which was raised before the High Court in the Writ Petitions, viz., that the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to deal with the claims of the workmen under Section 33C (2) of the Act was barred by the fact that the same relief could have been claimed by the workmen under S 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act. In the course of the arguments, however, learned counsel conceded that he could not press this point in Civil Appeal No 171 of 1968 arising out of Writ Petition No 973 of 1966 which was directed against the order of the Labour Court in Application (LCH) No 138 of 1963, because the claim in that application before the Labour Court was confined to washing allowance and cost of uniform which are items not governed by the Minimum Wages Act at all. His submissions have, therefore, been confined before us to the other three appeals in which the claim of the workmen was for computation of their benefit in respect of overtime work and work done on weekly off-days.

4 It may be mentioned that the objection to the jurisdiction of the Labour Court was raised on behalf of the appellant not only in the writ petitions before the High Court but even before the Labour Court itself when that Court took up the hearing of the applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act. However, the ground for challenging the jurisdiction of the Labour Court was confined to the point mentioned by us above. It was not contended either before the Labour Court or in the writ petitions before the High Court that the applications were not covered by the provisions of Sec 33C (2) of the Act. The plea taken was that, even though the applications could be made under Section 33C (2) of the Act, the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to proceed under that provision of law was barred by the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act. Mr. B Sen, appearing on behalf of the appellant, wanted permission to raise the question whether these applications before the Labour Court were at all included within the scope of Section 33C (2) of the Act, but, on the objection of learned counsel for the respondents, the permission sought was refused. As we have mentioned earlier, the jurisdiction of the Labour Court on this ground was not challenged either before the Labour Court itself or before the High Court. No such ground was raised even in the special leave petition, nor was it raised at any earlier stage by any application. It was sought to be raised by Mr. Sen for the first time in the course of the arguments in the appeals at the time of final hearing. We did not consider it correct to allow such a new point to be raised at this late stage. However, another new point, which had not been raised before the Labour Court and in the writ petitions before the High Court, was permitted to be argued, because it was raised by a separate application, presented before the hearing, seeking permission to raise it. The new question sought to be raised is that, even if the applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act were competent and not barred by the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act, they were time-barred when presented under Article 137 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act No 36 of 1963. The question of limitation was incidentally mentioned before the Labour Court as well as the High Court, relying on the circumstance that applications under S. 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act could only have been presented within period of six months from the date when the claims arose. At that stage, reliance was not placed on Article 137 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, but, well before the final hearing, a written application was presented on behalf of the appellant seeking permission to raise this plea of limitation in these appeals. Notice of that application was served on the respondents well in time, so that, by the time the appeals came up for hearing, they knew that this point was sought to be raised by the appellant. A question of limitation raises a plea of want of jurisdiction and, in these cases, this question could be decided on the basis of the facts on the record, being a pure question of law. It is in this background that we have permitted this question also to be raised in these appeals, though it was not put forward either in the High Court or before the Labour Court. Thus, we are concerned in these appeals with the two aspects relating to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to entertain applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act because of the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act, and the plea that the applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act were time-barred or at least part of the claims under the applications were time-barred in view of Article 137 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, 1963.

5 On the first question, both the Labour Court and the High Court held that the contention raised on behalf of the appellant that the jurisdiction of the Labour Court was excluded because of Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act has no force, on the assumption that the claims made in these applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act could have been presented before the Labour Court under Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act. In our view, this assumption was not justified. As we shall indicated hereinafter, the claims made by the workmen in the applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act could not have been made before the Labour Court under Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act, so that it is not necessary for us to decide the general question of law whether an application under Section 33C (2) of the Act can or cannot be competently entertained by a Labour Court if an application for the same relief is entertainable by the Labour Court under Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act.

6. The long title and the preamble to the Minimum Wages Act show that this Act was passed with the object of making provision for fixing minimum rates of Wages in certain employments. The word "wages" has been given a wide meaning in its definition in Section 2 (h) of that Act and, quite clearly, includes payment in respect of overtime and for work done on weekly off-days which are required to be given by any employer to the workmen under the provisions of that Act itself. Section 13 (1), which deals with weekly off-days, and Section 14 (1), which deals with overtime, are as follows:—

"13. (1) In regard to any scheduled employment minimum rates of wages in respect of which have been fixed under this Act, the appropriate Government may—

(a) fix the number of hours of work which shall constitute a normal working day, inclusive of one or more specified intervals;

(b) provide for a day of rest in every period of seven days which shall be allowed to all employees or to any specified class of employees and for the payment of remuneration in respect of such days of rest;

(c) provide for payment for work on a day of rest at a rate not less than the overtime rate."

"14. (1) Where an employee, whose minimum rate of wages is fixed under this Act by the hour, by the day or by such a longer wage-period as may be prescribed, works on any day in excess of the number of hours constituting a normal working day, the employer shall pay him for every hour or for part of an hour so worked in excess at the overtime rate fixed under this Act or under any law of the appropriate Government for the time being in force, whichever is higher."

In order to provide a remedy against breach of orders made under Sections 13 (1) and 14 (1), that Act provides a forum and the manner of seeking the remedy in Section 20 which is as follows:—

"20. (1) The appropriate Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint any Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation or any officer of the Central Government exercising functions as a Labour Commissioner for any region, or any officer of the State Government not below the rank of Labour Commissioner or any other officer with experience as a Judge of a Civil Court or as a stipendiary Magistrate to be the Authority to hear and decide for any specified area all claims arising out of payment of less than the minimum rates of wages or in respect of the payment of remuneration for days of rest or for work done on such days under clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (1) of Sec. 13 or of wages at the overtime rate under Section 14, to employees employed or paid in that area.

(2) Where an employee has any claim of the nature referred to in sub-section (1), the employee himself, or any legal practitioner or any official of a registered trade union authorised in writing to act on his behalf, or any Inspector, or any person acting with the permission of the Authority appointed under sub-section (1), may apply to such Authority for a direction under sub-section (3):

Provided that every such application shall be presented within six months from the date on which the minimum wages or other amount became payable:—

Provided further that any application may be admitted after the said period of six months when the applicant satisfies the Authority that he had sufficient cause for not making the application within such period.

(3) When any application under sub-section (2) is entertained, the Authority shall hear the applicant and the employer, or give them an opportunity of being heard, and after such further inquiry, if any, as it may consider necessary, may, without prejudice to any other penalty to which the employer may be liable under this Act, direct—

(i) in the case of a claim arising out of payment of less than the minimum rates of wages, the payment to the employee of the amount by which the minimum wages payable to him exceed the amount actually paid, together with the payment of such compensation as the Authority may think fit, not exceeding ten times the amount of such excess,

(ii) in any other case, the payment of the amount due to the employee, together with the payment of such compensation as the Authority may think fit, not exceeding ten rupees, and the Authority may direct payment of such compensation in cases where the excess or the amount due is paid by the employer to the employee before the disposal of the application

(4) If the Authority hearing any application under this section is satisfied that it was either malicious or veracious, it may direct that a penalty not exceeding fifty rupees be paid to the employer by the person presenting the application

(5) Any amount directed to be paid under this section may be recovered—

(a) if the Authority is a Magistrate, by the Authority as if it were a fine imposed by the Authority as a Magistrate, or

(b) if the Authority is not a Magistrate, by any Magistrate to whom the Authority makes application in this behalf, as if it were a fine imposed by such Magistrate

(6) Every direction of the Authority under this section shall be final

(7) Every Authority appointed under sub-section (1) shall have all the powers of a Civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the purpose of taking evidence and of enforcing the attendance of witnesses and compelling the production of documents, and every such Authority shall be deemed to be a Civil Court for all the purposes of Section 195 and Chapter XXXV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898"

We have mentioned these provisions of the Minimum Wages Act, because the language used at all stages in that Act leads to the clear inference that that Act is primarily concerned with fixing of rates — rates of minimum wages, overtime rates, rate for payment for work on a day of rest — and is not really intended to be an Act for enforcement of payment of wages for which provision is made in other laws, such as the Payment of Wages Act No 4 of 1936, and the Industrial Disputes Act No 14 of 1947. In Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act also, provision is made for seeking remedy in respect of claims arising out of payment of less than the minimum rates of wages or in respect of payment of remuneration for days of rest or for work done on such days under clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 or of wages at the overtime rate under Section 14. This language used in Section 20 (1) shows that the Authority appointed under that provision of law is to exercise jurisdiction for deciding claims which relate to rates of wages, rates for payment of work done on days of rest and overtime rates. If there be no dispute as to rates between the employer and the employees, Section 20 (1) would not be attracted. The purpose of Section 20 (1) seems to be to ensure that the rates prescribed under the Minimum Wages Act are complied with by the employer in making payments and, if any attempt is made to make payments at lower rates, the workmen are given the right to invoke the aid of the Authority appointed under Section 20 (1). In cases where there is no dispute as to rates of wages, and the only question is whether a particular payment at the agreed rate in respect of minimum wages, overtime or work on off-days is due to a workman or not, the appropriate remedy is provided in the Payment of Wages Act. If the payment is withheld beyond the time permitted by the Payment of Wages Act even on the ground that the amount claimed by the workman is not due, or if the amount claimed by the workman is not paid on the ground that deductions are to be made by the employer, the employee can seek his remedy by an application under Section 15 (1) of the Payment of Wages Act. In cases where S 15 of the Payment of Wages Act may not provide adequate remedy, the remedy can be sought either under Section 33C of the Act or by raising an industrial dispute under the Act and having it decided under the various provisions of that Act. In these circumstances, we are unable to accept the submission made by Mr Sen on behalf of the appellant that Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act should be interpreted as intended to cover all claims in respect of minimum wages or overtime payment or payment for days of rest even though there may be no dispute as to the rates at which those payments are to be claimed. It is true that, under Section 20 (3), power is given to the Authority dealing with an application under Section 20 (1) to direct payment of the actual amount found due, but this, it appears to us, is only an incidental power granted to that Authority, so that the directions made by the Authority under Section 20 (1) may be effectively carried out and there may not be unnecessary multiplicity of proceedings. The power to make orders for payment of actual amount due to an employee under Section 20 (3) cannot, therefore, be interpreted as indicating that the jurisdiction to the Authority under Section 20 (1) has been given for the purpose of enforcement of payment of amounts and not for the purpose of ensuring compliance by the employer with the various rates fixed under that Act. This interpretation, in our opinion, also harmonises the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act with the provisions of the Payment of Wages Act which was already in existence when the Minimum Wages Act was passed. In the present appeals therefore, we have to see whether the claims which were made by the workmen in the various applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act were of such a nature that they could have been brought before the Authority under Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act inasmuch as they raised disputes relating to the rates for payment of overtime and for work done on weekly off-days.

7. We have examined the applications which were presented before the Labour Court under Section 33C (2) of the Act in these appeals and have also taken into account the pleadings which were put forward on behalf of the appellant in contesting those applications and we are unable to find that there was any dispute relating to the rates. It is true that, in their applications, the workmen did plead the rates at which their claims had to be computed; but it was nowhere stated that those rates were being disputed by the appellant. Even in the pleadings put forward on behalf of the appellant as incorporated in the order of the Labour Court, there was no pleading that the claims of the workmen were payable at a rate different from the rates claimed by them. It does appear that, in one case, there was a pleading on behalf of the appellant that no rates at all had been prescribed by the Mysore Government. That pleading did not mean that it became a dispute as to the rates at which the payments were to be made by the appellant. The only question that arose was whether there were any rates at all fixed under the Minimum Wages Act for overtime and for payment for work done on days of rest. Such a question does not relate to a dispute as to the rates enforceable between the parties, so that the remedy under Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act could not have been sought by the applicants in any of these applications. No question can, therefore, arise of the jurisdiction of the Labour Court to entertain these applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act being barred because of the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act. The first point raised on behalf of the appellant thus fails.

8. In dealing with the second question relating to the applicability of Article 137 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, 1963 to applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act, we may first take notice of two decisions of this Court on the scope of the parallel provision contained in Article 181 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act No. 9 of 1908. Article 181 of that Schedule laid down that the period of limitation for an application, for which no period of limitation was provided elsewhere in the schedule or by Section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, would be three years, and the time from which the period would begin to run would be when the right to apply accrued. The scope of this article was considered first by this Court in Sha Mulchand & Co. Ltd. v. Jawahar Mills Ltd., Salem, 1953 SCR 351=(AIR 1953 SC 98) where the Court had to consider the question whether this article would govern an application made by the Official Receiver under Section 38 of the Indian Companies Act for rectification of the register of a limited company. The Court noted the fact that the advocate appearing in the case relied strongly on Art. 181 of the Limitation Act and, thereafter, took notice of the fact that that article had, in a long series of decisions of most, if not all, of the High Courts, been held to govern only applications under the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court also dealt with the argument advanced that the reason for holding that Article 181 was confined to applications under the Code was that the article should be construed eiusdem generis and that, as all the articles in the third division of the schedule to the Limitation Act related to applications under the Code, Article 181, which was the residuary article, must be limited to applications under the Code. That reasoning, it was pointed out, was no longer applicable because of the amendment of the Limitation Act by the introduction of Articles 158 and 178 which governed applications under the Arbitration Act and not thus under the Code. The Court then considered the views expressed by the various High Courts in a number of cases and held —

"It does not appear to us quite convincing, after further argument, that the mere amendment of Articles 158 and 178 can ipso facto alter the meaning which as a result of a long series of judicial decisions of the different High Courts in India, came to be attached to the language used in Article 181. This long catena of decisions may well be said to have, as it were, added the words 'under the Code' in the first column of that article. If those words had actually been used in that column, then a subsequent amendment of Articles 158 and 178 certainly would not have affected the meaning of that article. If, however, as a result of judicial construction, those words have come to be read into the first column as if those words actually occurred there, we are not of opinion, as at present advised, that the subsequent amendment of Articles 158 and 178 must necessarily and automatically have the effect of altering the long acquired meaning of Article 181 on the sole and simple ground that after the amendment the reason on which the old construction was founded is no longer available."

9 This earlier decision was relied upon by this Court in Bombay Gas Co. Ltd v Gopal Bhava, 1964-3 SCR 709 at pp 722-23=(AIR 1964 SC 752 at p 758), where the Court had to deal with the argument that applications under Section 33C of the Act will be governed by three years' limitation provided by Article 181 of the Limitation Act. The Court, in dealing with this argument held,—

"In our opinion, this argument is one of desperation. It is well settled that Article 181 applies only to applications which are made under the Code of Civil Procedure, and so, its extension to applications made under Section 33C (2) of the Act would not be justified. As early as 1880, the Bombay High Court had held in Bar Manekbai v Manekji Kavaji, (1880) ILR 7 Bom 213, that Article 181 only relates to applications under the Code of Civil Procedure in which case no period of limitation has been prescribed for the application, and the consensus of judicial opinion on this point had been noticed by the Privy Council in Hansraj Gupta v Official Liquidators, Dehra Dun Mussorie, Electric Tramway Co., Ltd, 60 IA 13 at p 20=(AIR 1933 PC 63 at p 64). An attempt was no doubt made in the case of 1953 SCR 351=(AIR 1953 SC 98), to suggest that the amendment of Arts 158 and 178 ipso facto altered the meaning which had been attached to the words in Article 181 by judicial decisions, but this attempt failed, because this Court held "that the long catena of decisions under Article 181 may well be said to have, as it were, added the words 'under the Code' in the first column of that Article. Therefore, it is not possible to accede to the argument that the limitation prescribed by Article 181 can be invoked in dealing with applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act."

10. It appears to us that the view expressed by this Court in those cases must be held to be applicable, even when considering the scope and applicability of Article 137 in the new Limitation Act of 1963. The language of Article 137 is only slightly different from that of the earlier Article 181 inasmuch as, when prescribing the three years' period of limitation, the first column giving the description of the application reads as "any other application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this division". In fact, the addition of the word "other" between the words "any" and "application" would indicate that the legislature wanted to make it clear that the principle of interpretation of Article 181 on the basis of eiusdem generis should be applied when interpreting the new Article 137. This word "other" implies a reference to earlier articles, and, consequently, in interpreting this article, regard must be had to the provisions contained in all the earlier articles. The other articles in the third division to the schedule refer to applications under the Code of Civil Procedure, with the exception of applications under the Arbitration Act and also in two cases applications under the Code of Criminal Procedure. The effect of introduction in the third division of the schedule of reference to applications under the Arbitration Act in the old Limitation Act has already been considered by this Court in the case of Sha Mulchand & Co. Ltd, 1953 SCR 709=(AIR 1953 SC 98) (supra). We think that, on the same principle, it must be held that even the further alteration made in the articles contained in the third division of the schedule to the new Limitation Act containing references to applications under the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be held to have materially altered the scope of the residuary Article 137 which deals with other applications. It is not possible to hold that the intention of the legislature was to drastically alter the scope of this article so as to include within it all applications, irrespective of the fact whether they had any reference to the Code of Civil Procedure.

11. This point, in our opinion, may be looked at from another angle also. When this Court earlier held that all the articles in the third division to the schedule, including Article 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 governed applications under the Code of Civil Procedure only, it clearly implied that the applications must be presented to a Court governed by the Code of Civil Procedure. Even the applications under the Arbitration Act that were included within the third division by amendment of Articles 158 and 178 were to be presented to Courts whose proceedings were governed by the Code of Civil Procedure. At best the further amendment now made enlarges the scope of the third division of the schedule so as also to include some applications presented to courts governed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. One factor at least remains constant and that is that the applications must be to courts to be governed by the articles in this division. The scope of the various articles in this division cannot be held to have been so enlarged as to include within them applications to bodies other than Courts, such as a quasi-judicial tribunal, or even an executive authority. An Industrial Tribunal or a Labour Court dealing with applications or references under the Act are not courts and they are in no way governed either by the Code of Civil Procedure or the Code of Criminal Procedure. We cannot, therefore, accept the submission made that this article will apply even to applications made to an Industrial Tribunal or a Labour Court. The alterations made in the article and in the new Act cannot, in our opinion, justify the interpretation that even applications presented to bodies, other than courts, are now to be governed for purposes of limitation by Art. 137.

12. Reliance in this connection was placed by learned Counsel for the appellant primarily on the decision of the Bombay High Court in Manager, M/s. P. K. Porwal v. Labour Court at Nagpur, (1968) 70 Bom LR 104. We are unable to agree with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in that case. The High Court ignored the circumstance that the provisions of Article 137 were sought to be applied to an application which was presented not to a Court but to a Labour Court dealing with an application under Section 33C (2) of the Act and that such a Labour Court is not governed by any procedural code relating to civil or criminal proceedings. That Court appears to have been considerably impressed by the fact that in the new Limitation Act of 1963, an alteration was made in the long title which has been incorrectly described by that Court as preamble. Under the old Limitation Act, no doubt, the long title was "An Act to consolidate and amend the law for the limitation of suits and for other purposes", while, in the new Act of 1963, the long title is "An Act to consolidate and amend the law for the limitation of suits and other proceedings and for purposes connected therewith". In the long title, thus, the words "other proceedings" have been added; but we do not think that this addition necessarily implies that the Limitation Act is intended to govern proceedings before any authority, whether executive or quasi-judicial, when, earlier, the old Act was intended to govern proceedings before civil courts only. It is also true that the preamble which existed in the old Limitation Act of 1908 has been omitted in the new Act of 1963. The omission of the preamble does not, however, indicate that there was any intention of the legislature to change the purposes for which the Limitation Act has been enforced. The Bombay High Court also attached importance to the circumstance that the scope of the new Limitation Act has been enlarged by changing the definition of "applicant" in Section 2 (a) of the new Act so as to include even a petitioner and the word "application" so as to include a petition. The question still remains whether this alteration can be held to be intended to cover petitions by a petitioner to authorities other than Courts. We are unable to find any provision in the new Limitation Act which would justify holding that these changes in definition were intended to make the Limitation Act applicable to proceedings before bodies other than Courts. We have already taken notice of the change introduced in the third division of the schedule by including references to applications under the Code of Criminal Procedure, which was the only other aspect relied upon by the Bombay High Court in support of its view that applications under Section 33C of the Act will also be governed by the new Art. 137. For the reasons we have indicated earlier, we are unable to accept the view expressed by the Bombay High Court; and we hold that Article 137 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, 1963 does not apply to applications under Section 33C (2) of the Act, so that the previous decision of this Court that no limitation is prescribed for such applications remains unaffected questions of law and fact it would have conveyed its intention by appropriate words as has been done under various other statutes A wrong decision on facts by a competent court is also a decision according to law. (Para 6)

At the same time the power conferred under the 1st proviso to Sec 75 (1) of the Act is not co-extensive with that given to the High Court under Sec 100 (1) (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure A decision being "contrary to law" as provided in Sec 100 (1) (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure is not the same thing as a decision being not "according to law" as prescribed in the 1st proviso of Sec 75 (1) of the Act The latter expression is wider in ambit than the former The power given to the High Court under the 1st proviso to Sec 75 (1) of the Act is similar to that given to it under S 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Paras 4 & 7)

Though it may not be possible to give an exhaustive definition of the expression "according to law" instances in which the High Court may interfere under the provision can be given They are cases in which the Court which made the order had no jurisdiction or in which the Court has based its decision on evidence which should not have been admitted, or cases where the unsuccessful party has not been given a proper opportunity of being heard, or the burden of proof has been placed on the wrong shoulders Wherever the Court comes to the conclusion that the unsuccessful party has not had a proper trial according to law, then the Court can interfere But, the Court ought not to interfere merely because it thinks that possibly the Judge who heard the case may have arrived at a conclusion which the High Court would not have arrived at AIR 1938 Bom 223 & AIR 1963 SC 693, Rel on, AIR 1965 SC 920, Explained

The findings of the District Court in an appeal against a decision under Sec 53, that the impugned mortgages were fully supported by consideration and that they were genuine transactions are findings of fact which are not open to review by the High Court acting under the first proviso to Sec. 75 (1) of the Act In so far as the High Court in Civil Revn Petns. Mr. S. V. Gupte, Senior Advocate, (Mr. R. Thiagarajan, Advocate, with him), for Appellants (In both the Appeals); Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, for Respondents Nos. 1 (c) and 17 (In C. A. No. 845 of 1963) and Respondents Nos. 1 (c) and 16 (In C. A. No. 846 of 1963).

HEGDE, J.: These appeals arise from an insolvency proceeding wherein one Ponnayya Konar and his sons were adjudicated as insolvents. In the said proceeding the petitioning creditor sought to get annulled two mortgages one for Rs. 15,000 (Exh. A-1) executed by the insolvents in favour of Ayyappa Naicker, the appellant in Civil Appeal No. 845 of 1963 and the other for Rs. 10,000 (Exh. A-2), the subject-matter of Civil Appeal No. 846 of 1963, in favour of one Srinivasa Naicker, the father-in-law of the aforementioned Ayyappa Naicker. The said Srinivasa Naicker is dead and the appeal is being prosecuted by his legal representatives. Both those mortgages are dated November 4, 1950 and they were registered on November 6, 1950. The Insolvency Court held that those mortgages were not supported by consideration and that they were executed with a view to screen some of the properties of the insolvents from their creditors. It accordingly annulled those mortgages under Section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act). In appeal the learned District Judge reversed the findings of the trial Court. He came to the conclusion that those mortgages were fully supported by consideration and that they were genuine transactions. The High Court acting under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act reversed the judgment of the learned District Judge and restored that of the Insolvency Court. These appeals have been brought against the decision of the High Court after obtaining special leave from this Court.

2. The learned Counsel for the appellants challenged the decision of the High Court primarily on two grounds. According to him the High Court while acting under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act had no power to disturb the findings of fact reached by the appellate Court. Next he contended that the conclusions of the High Court are unsustainable on the evidence on record. The learned Counsel for the contesting respondents supported the decision of the High Court.

3. The two principal questions that arise for decision in these appeals are (1) Was the High Court within its jurisdiction in interfering with the findings of the learned District Judge that the impugned transactions are bona fide transactions and that they were supported by consideration and (2) Are the conclusions reached by the High Court correct on the facts and circumstances of the case? It would be convenient to take up first, the question as to the scope of the powers of the High Court under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act. That section reads:

"The debtor, any creditor, the receiver or any other person aggrieved by a decision come to or an order made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction by a Court subordinate to a District Court may appeal to the District Court, and the order of the District Court upon such appeal shall be final:

Provided that the High Court, for the purpose of satisfying itself that an order made in any appeal decided by the District Court was according to law, may call for the case and pass such order with respect thereto as it thinks fit:

Provided further, that any such person aggrieved by a decision of the District Court on appeal from a decision of a Subordinate Court under Section 4 may appeal to the High Court on any of the grounds mentioned in sub-section (1) of Section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908."

4. According to Shri S. V. Gupte, learned Counsel for the appellants, the jurisdiction of a High Court under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) is a very limited one, the same being not more than that conferred on it by sub-section (1) of Section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In support of his contention he invited our attention to the scheme of Section 75 (1) of the Act. He urged that sub-section (1) of Section 75 prescribes that the decision of the District Court in appeal is final and the finality conferred on the decision of the District Court is subject to a very limited scrutiny by the High Court. We were further told that the power conferred on the High Court under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) is only a revisional power, which power in its very nature is narrower in compass than an appellate power. According to him the power conferred under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act is co-extensive with that given to the High Court under Section 100 (1) (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

5. On the other hand Mr Naunit Lal, learned Counsel for the respondent urged that the High Court under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act has an extensive power and that power is very much wider than the power conferred on it under Section 100 (1) (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the power of the High Court under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act to call for the case to satisfy itself that the order made by the District Court was according to law and pass such other order in respect thereto as it thinks fit includes within itself the right to examine whether the District Court had taken into consideration all the material evidence and whether it had properly assessed that evidence.

6. We are of the opinion that the extreme contentions advanced on either side cannot be accepted. Quite clearly the legislature did not confer on the High Court under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act an appellate power nor did it confer on it a jurisdiction to re-appreciate the evidence on record. While exercising that power the High Court is by and large bound by the findings of fact reached by the District Court. If the legislature intended to confer power on it to re-examine both questions of law and fact it would have conveyed its intention by appropriate words as has been done under various other statutes. A wrong decision on facts by a competent court is also a decision according to law. For these reasons we cannot accept the contention of Mr Naunit Lal that the power conferred under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act enables it to de novo examine the findings of fact reached by the District Court.

7. A decision being "contrary to law" as provided in Section 100 (1) (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure is not the same thing as a decision being not "according to law" as prescribed in the 1st proviso of Section 75 (1) of the Act. The latter expression is wider in ambit than the former. It is neither desirable nor possible to give an exhaustive definition of the expression "according to law." The power given to the High Court under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act is similar to that given to it under Sec 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Explaining the scope of the latter provision, Beaumont, C J (as he then was) in Bell and Co. Ltd v Waman Hemraj, 40 Bom LR 125 = (AIR 1938 Bom 223) observed

"The object of Section 25 is to enable the High Court to see that there has been no miscarriage of justice, that the decision was given according to law. The section does not enumerate the cases in which the Court may interfere in revision, as does Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and I certainly do not propose to attempt any exhaustive definition of the circumstances which may justify such interference, but instances which readily occur to the mind are cases in which the Court which made the order had no jurisdiction or in which the Court has based its decision on evidence which should not have been admitted or cases where the unsuccessful party has not been given a proper opportunity of being heard, or the burden of proof has been placed on the wrong shoulders. Wherever the Court comes to the conclusion that the unsuccessful party has not had a proper trial according to law, then the Court can interfere. But, in my opinion, the Court ought not to interfere merely because it thinks that possibly the Judge who heard the case may have arrived at a conclusion which the High Court would not have arrived at."

8. The said statement of the law was accepted as correct by this Court in Hari Shankar v Rao Girdhari Lal Chowdhury, 1962 Supp 1 SCR 933 = (AIR 1963 SC 698). We think the same applies squarely to the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act.

8A. In support of his contention Mr. Gupte placed considerable reliance on the decision of this Court in Official Receiver Kanpur v Abdul Shakur, 1965-1 SCR 254 = (AIR 1965 SC 920) wherein this Court held that the High Court in exercise of its power under the 1st proviso to Section 75 (1) of the Act is incompetent to disturb the findings of fact reached by the District Court and further the question whether a statutory presumption was rebutted by the rest of the evidence on record was also a question of fact which again was not open to be reviewed by the High Court. Shah, J. who spoke for the Court observed thus at p. 259 (of SCR) = (at p 923 of AIR)

"The District Court inferred from the facts found that the statutory presumption under Section 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act had been weakened and the burden which lay upon the insolvent was discharged and it was not open to the High Court exercising jurisdiction under Section 75 (1) proviso 1, nor even under proviso 2 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to set aside the judgment of the District Court, for it is well settled that the question whether a statutory presumption is rebutted by the rest of the evidence is a question of fact."

9. It may be remembered that Shah, J. was also a party to the decision in Hari Shankar's case, 1962 Supp 1 SCR 933 = (AIR 1963 SC 698) (supra). We see no conflict between the two decisions. The former decision enumerates some of the circumstances under which the High Court can interfere while considering whether the decision under review was made according to law. All that it laid down in Abdul Shakur's case is that the High Court is not competent to disturb a finding of fact reached by the District Court even if in reaching that finding it was required to take into consideration a statutory presumption.

10. We shall now proceed to examine the facts of this case bearing in mind the principles set out above.

11. We shall first set out the undisputed facts. The respondent Ponnayya Konar was a well to do person. He had one rice mill at Kivalur and another at Sirkali. He also had landed properties in Sirkali and Tuticorin. He was having money dealings with the family of Sreenivasa Naicker from about the year 1925. Under the original of Exh. B-1, a registered deed of Othi dated 28th September, 1925, he had borrowed a sum of Rs. 30,000 from Rangappa Naicker, the father of Srinivasa Naicker. On October 5, 1930, the said deed was renewed by the execution of a simple mortgage deed by Ponnayya Konar and his sons in favour of Rangappa Naicker. Under the registered mortgage deed dated 13th January, 1942 (Exh. B-4 is its copy), the insolvents had borrowed from Ayyappa Naicker Rs. 20,000 out of which he discharged some of the debts due to Rangappa Naicker. Ayyappa Naicker was himself a rich man. Under the partition deed entered into in his family on October 30, 1936 (Exh. B-3) he got a cash of Rs. 52,000 and lands measuring 250 acres. The debt due to Ayyappa Naicker under the deed dated 13th January 1942 was discharged by payment of Rs. 5,000 and interest on 3rd April, 1948 and Rs. 15,000 and interest on the 28th March, 1949, as can be seen from Exhs. B-5 and B-6.

12. The case of the mortgagees is that when Exhs. A-1 and A-2 were executed they were unaware of the fact that the insolvent had got into financial difficulties by then. The learned District Judge has accepted this plea and the learned Judge of the High Court has not come to a contrary conclusion.

13. There was no relationship between the insolvents and the mortgagees. In fact they belong to different communities. The insolvents are Hindus and the mortgagees are Christians. They also live at different places. The insolvents were residing at Sirkali and the mortgagees at Tuticorin, a place which is at a considerable distance from Sirkali.

14. According to the mortgagees the circumstances under which Exhs. A-1 and A-2 came to be executed are as follows:—

In about the beginning of 1950 Ponnayya Konar approached Srinivasa Naicker for a loan of Rs. 30,000. Srinivasa Naicker told him that he and his son-in-law Ayyappa Naicker together would lend him a sum of Rs. 25,000 on the mortgage of his properties at Tuticorin. But as they did not have the entire sum of Rs. 25,000 in their hands at that time, a sum of Rs. 10,000 was paid to Ponnayya Konar on April 28, 1950 and a promissory note was taken for that amount (Exh. A-11). In the beginning of September, 1950 Ponnayya Konar sent his son Arulappan with the letter (Exh. B-7) to get some more money. Accordingly another sum of Rs. 5,000 was paid on September 8, 1950 and the pronote (Exh. A-12) was taken from Arulappan. They agreed to pay the balance amount promised to be advanced at the time of the execution of the mortgage deeds. The mortgage deeds were got written up and executed on 4th November, 1950. Therein it was recited that they were executed for cash consideration. It was thought that the mortgagees would be able to pay the balance amount before the registration of the documents on November 6, 1950. But by that time they were not able to get together the entire amount that remained to be paid. On the date of the registration Ayyappa Naicker paid to the mortgagors only a sum of Rs. 4,500, another sum of Rs. 500 was adjusted towards the interest due on the sum of Rs. 15,000 previously advanced in April and September.

The remaining sum of Rs. 5,000 was paid in two instalments, a sum of Rs. 1700 through Amirthan, the 3rd son of Pon-nayya Konar on January 7, 1951 and the remaining sum of Rs. 3,300 again through Amirthan on February 10, 1951.

15. In the insolvency proceedings on the application of the petitioning creditor, a commissioner to search the house of the insolvents and seize their books of account and other relevant records was appointed. After search the commissioner seized from the house of the insolvents several account books (ledgers as well as day books) as well as A-11 and A-12 which were found punched and defaced. Exhibits A-11, A-12 as well as several of the entries in the ledger and day books were marked by consent in the proceedings from which these appeals have arisen. Hence their genuineness is not open to question.

16. It is most unlikely that those documents were got up by the insolvents and kept in their house depending on the off chance of a Court commissioner searching their house and seizing them, so that they may serve as corroborating evidence in support of the impugned mortgages. If Exhs. A-11 and A-12 as well as the entries in the account books were intended to support the claim under Exhs. A-1 and A-2, the most natural course would have been to draw up the mortgage deeds in such a way as to take assistance from them. In that case the mortgage deeds would not have recited that they were executed for cash consideration. Further Exhs. A-11 and A-12 would have been left in the possession of the mortgagees. We are convinced that the version put forward by the mortgagees is substantially true. The original agreement between the parties was to take mortgages of the Tuticorin properties for cash consideration. The intermediate steps taken were necessitated by the fact that mortgagees were not able to get together in one lump the required amount. The promissory notes Exhs. A-11 and A-12 were taken as stop gap arrangements. The recitals in the mortgage deeds accord with the original agreement between the parties. That was likely to be the reason why the promissory notes Exhs. A-11 and A-12 were returned to the parties. The entries in the account books of the insolvents reflect the transactions as they took place. If they were bogus entries made to support Exhs. A-1 and A-2, a receipt of Rs. 25,000 in cash on 4th November 1950 would have been shown therein. The learned District Judge correctly thought that the account entries in question had a great deal of intrinsic value. On the other hand the insolvency court and the High Court unnecessarily allowed themselves to be influenced by the apparent contradiction appearing between the recitals in Exhs. A-1 and A-2 and those in Exhs. A-11, A-12 and the account entries.

17. One other circumstance which had weighed with the High Court in holding that Exhs. A-1 and A-2 do not represent genuine transactions is that in their pleadings the mortgagees have stuck to their case that cash consideration passed under Exhs. A-1 and A-2 and this the Court thought was a deliberately false plea. The learned District Judge had carefully considered this circumstance but was of opinion that the same was of no consequence. We think that the High Court had attached undue importance to that circumstance. The issue before the parties at the time of the pleadings was whether the mortgages in question were supported by consideration or not and not the manner in which that consideration was paid. In their plea the mortgagees were merely adhering to the tenor of the mortgage deeds. From the facts stated earlier, it is clear that the mortgagees at all stages proceeded on the basis that Exhs. A-1 and A-2 were executed for cash consideration, the other steps taken by them being merely incidental.

18. The last and by far the most important circumstance that appears to have influenced the High Court was the failure of the mortgagees to produce their account books. This circumstance was carefully considered by the District Judge. He held that the adverse inference that could be drawn from that circumstance was rebutted by the other evidence available in the case. It was open to him to do so. His finding on this point is also a finding of fact and by no means a wholly unreasonable finding. The High Court could not have interfered with the same.

19. From the above discussion it follows that generally speaking—we shall come to the details of consideration presently—the findings of the District Court as regards the payment of consideration under Exhs. A-1 and A-2 are findings of facts and they were not open to review by the High Court.

20. This takes us to the various items of consideration said to have passed under Exhs. A-1 and A-2 and the proof thereof. The District Court has held that the en-

the consideration mentioned in those documents has passed. We have now to see whether its finding in respect of the various items of consideration is supported by legal evidence. The challenge to the payment of consideration under Exhs. A-1 and A-2 made by the petitioning creditor includes a challenge to the passing of the various items of consideration said to have passed. Ordinarily the burden of proving that a document impeached under Section 53 of the Act is not supported by consideration is on the party who challenges its validity. That is so because the party who stands by the document can take advantage of the admission made by the insolvent in the document in question. But in this case the mortgagees themselves do not stand by the recitals in the documents as regards the manner in which consideration was paid. Therefore it is for them to prove the passing of consideration. Hence we have to see how far they have succeeded in proving the same.

21. We shall first take up Exh. A-2, mortgage deed executed in favour of Srinivasa Naicker. It is said that the consideration payable under that mortgage was paid in the following manner:

Rs. 5,000 under promissory note Exh. A-11;

Rs. 1,700 paid in cash on 7th January, 1951 and

Rs. 3,300 also paid in cash on 10th February, 1951.

The receipt of the aforementioned sums is entered in the day book and ledger of the insolvents. The relevant entries amount to an admission on the part of the insolvents of having received the amounts mentioned therein. We have earlier considered the authenticity of those account books. The evidence of the mortgagees as regards the payment of consideration is strongly corroborated by the entries in the insolvent's account books. It was open to the learned District Judge to rely on them. Hence his finding as regards the validity of the mortgage under Exh. A-2 must be held to be final.

22. So far as the consideration for Exh. A-1 is concerned it is said to have been made up of—

(i) a sum of Rs. 10,000 advanced under Exh. A-11;

(ii) Rs. 500 the interest due under Exhs. A-11 and A-12; and

(iii) Rs. 4,500 paid on 6th November, 1950.

23. The receipts of the various sums mentioned above excepting the sum of

Rs. 4,500 said to have been paid on 6th November 1950, are entered in the day book and the ledger of the insolvents. Hence to that extent the finding of the learned District Judge is unassailable. So far as the payment of Rs. 4,500 said to have been made on November 6, 1950 is concerned no corresponding entry in the day book or the ledger had been proved. This important circumstance was not noticed by the learned District Judge. He proceeded on the basis that the account entries support the payment of that item as well. The evidence of Ayyappa Naicker as regards that payment is necessarily interested. The only other evidence on that point is that of P. W. 2, the Registrar who registered Exhs. A-1 and A-2. He is a relation of the insolvents. He did not endorse that payment in Exh. A-1, though he knew that he was required to do so under the rules. We are also surprised how he could have remembered that fact after several years. Had the learned District Judge's attention been drawn to the fact that there is no documentary evidence in proof of the payment of that item it is highly doubtful whether he would have held in favour of the mortgagees as regards the payment of that item. After going through the evidence bearing on the point we are not satisfied that the payment of that amount is satisfactorily proved.

In the result Civil Appeal No. 846 of 1963 is allowed and the judgment and decree of the High Court is set aside and that of the District Court restored. Civil Appeal No. 845 is allowed in part i. e., the mortgage Exh. A-1 is held to be valid to the extent of Rs. 10,500 and interest thereon. In the circumstances of the case we direct the parties to bear their own costs in all the courts.

(A) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 114 — Covenant of forfeiture of tenancy for non-payment of rent — Nature of — Passing of decree for ejectment of tenant by trial Court — No bar to jurisdiction of appellate Court to grant relief against forfeiture — (Civil P. C. (1908), Section 107)

The covenant of forfeiture of tenancy for non-payment of rent is regarded by the Courts as merely a clause for securing payment of rent, and unless the tenant has by his conduct disentitled himself to equitable relief the Courts grant relief against forfeiture of tenancy on the tenant paying the rent due, interest thereon and costs of the suit. (Para 7)

In terms, Section 114 makes payment of rent at the hearing of the suit in ejectment a condition of the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction but an appeal being a rehearing of the suit, in appropriate cases it is open to the appellate Court at the hearing of the appeal to relieve the tenant in default against forfeiture. Passing of a decree in ejectment against the tenant by the Court of First Instance does not take away the jurisdiction of the appellate Court to grant equitable relief. Case law referred (Para 7)

Failure of the tenants to avail themselves of the opportunity does not operate as a bar to the jurisdiction of the appellate Court. The Appellate Court, may, having regard to the conduct of the tenant decline to exercise its discretion to grant him relief against forfeiture. The question is not one of jurisdiction but of discretion. AIR 1953 SC 228, Rel on

SHAH, J. Under a deed dated October 28, 1949, Virendra Goyal, the first respondent herein, obtained permanent tenancy rights in 28 plots of land of the ownership of Lala Praduman Kumar. The tenant agreed to pay Rs 250 per annum as advance rent on the first day of January of each year, and in default of payment of rent for two consecutive years the tenancy rights were to stand forfeited. Goyal transferred his tenancy rights to Lala Hukam Chand Pursuant to the lease several tenements were raised on the land demised

2. The tenant failed to pay the rent accrued due for two years. The appellant then served a notice on January 4, 1960, terminating the tenancy and instituted an action in the Court of the City Munsiff, Saharanpur, against Virendra Goyal and Lala Hukam Chand for a decree in ejectment and for an order for payment of Rs. 545/11/- as rent and compensation

3. Several contentions were raised in their written statement by the defendants one of which alone is material. The tenants prayed that they should be given relief against forfeiture of their tenancy rights under Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the Trial Court the tenants deposited an amount of Rs 1,099-34. The Trial Judge held that the conditions relating to deposit in Court of rent in arrear, interest thereon, and costs of the suit were not complied with and decreed the plaintiffs claim. In appeal to the District Court the tenant offered to pay the balance of the amount of the rent due together with costs of the suit and appeal and interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum or such other rate as the Court may direct and deposit in Court Rs. 2,082-50 in the aggregate. The learned District Judge was of the view that the amount paid by the tenants was in excess of the amount due by them and observed:

".....the appellants have deposited much more amount than is due to the respondent as arrears of rent, the costs of the suit and of the appeal and the interest. There is no reason why benefit of section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act be not given to the appellants when they are ready and willing to pay much more amount than is actually due to the respondent. The fact is that there are valuable constructions over the plots and defendants' dispossession would put them to a great loss. It is for this reason that they are prepared to pay the amount that may be demanded from them. I, therefore, find that the appellants are entitled to the benefit of Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act and are relieved against the forfeiture."

4. The second appeal against this decision was summarily dismissed by the High Court of Allahabad.

5. In appeal to this Court counsel for the appellant contends:

(1) that jurisdiction under Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act to relieve against forfeiture for non-payment of rent may only be exercised by the Court of First Instance and not by the Court of Appeal;

(2) that the Trial Court gave an opportunity to the tenants to pay the amount of rent due together with interest and costs, but the tenants failed to avail themselves of the opportunity. In the circumstances the appellate Court had no jurisdiction to grant another opportunity to the tenants to make the requisite payment and grant relief against forfeiture of the tenancy.

(3) that in any event discretion was, in the circumstances, not properly exercised by the District Court.

6. In our view, there is no substance in any of the contentions.

7. Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act provides:—

"Where a lease of immovable property has determined by forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and the lessor sues to eject the lessee, if at the hearing of the suit, the lessee pays or tenders to the lessor the rent in arrear, together with interest thereon and his full costs of the suit, or gives such security as the Court thinks sufficient for making such payment within fifteen days, the Court may, in lieu of making a decree for ejectment, pass an order relieving the lessee against the forfeiture; and thereupon the lessee shall hold the property leased as if the forfeiture had not occurred".

The covenant of forfeiture of tenancy for non-payment of rent is regarded by the Courts as merely a clause for securing payment of rent, and unless the tenant has by his conduct disentitled himself to equitable relief the Courts grant relief against forfeiture of tenancy on the tenant paying the rent due, interest thereon and costs of the suit. Jurisdiction to relieve against forfeiture for non-payment of rent may be exercised by the Court if the tenant in a suit in ejectment at the hearing of the suit pays the arrears of rent together with interest thereon and full costs of the suit. In terms Section 114 makes payment of rent at the hearing of the suit in ejectment a condition of the exercise of the Courts' jurisdiction but an appeal being a rehearing of the suit in appropriate cases it is open to the appellate Court at the hearing of the appeal to relieve the tenant in default against forfeiture. Passing of a decree in ejectment against the tenant by the Court of First Instance does not take away the jurisdiction of the appellate Court to grant equitable relief. This is the view taken by the High Courts in India: See Chilukuri Tripura Sundaramma v. Chilukuri Venketeswarlu alias Ramchandram, AIR 1949 Mad 841, Janab Vallathi v. Smt. K. Kederval Thayammal, AIR 1958 Mad 232, Shrikishanlal v. Ramnath Jankiprasad Abir, ILR (1944) Nag 877 = (AIR 1944 Nag 229), Budhi Ballabh v. Jai Kishan Kandpal, 1963 All LJ 132. The High Court of Bombay in cases arising under the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, has also expressed the same opinion in Bhagwan Rambhau Khese v. Ramchandra Kesho Pathak, AIR 1953 Bom 129.

8. We do not think that there is any bar to the exercise of jurisdiction by the appellate court merely because in the Court of First Instance relief against forfeiture was claimed by the tenants and they failed to avail themselves of the opportunity of paying the amount of rent together with interest thereon and costs of the suit. Failure to avail themselves of the opportunity does not operate as a bar to the jurisdiction of the appellate Court. The Appellate Court may, having regard to the conduct of the tenant, decline to exercise its discretion to grant him relief against forfeiture. The question is not one of jurisdiction but of discretion. This Court in Namdeo Lokman Lodhi v. Narmadabai, 1953 SCR 1009 = (AIR 1953 SC 228) has observed at p. 1025 (of SCR) = (at p 234 of AIR).

"in exercising the discretion (under Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act) each case must be judged by itself, the delay, the conduct of the parties and the difficulties to which the landlord has been put should be weighed against the tenant.

It is a maxim of equity that a person who comes in equity must do equity and must come with clean hands if the conduct of the tenant is such that it disentitles him to relief in equity, then the court's hands are not tied to exercise it in his favour"

9 The District Court has observed that valuable constructions had been put upon the land leased and the tenants had deposited an amount very much larger than the amount due to the landlord. Having regard to the circumstances the District Court was of the view that discretion should be exercised in favour of the tenants. The High Court summarily dismissed the appeal. The High Court must be taken to have confirmed the view of the District Court. In the appeal with special leave, this Court will not ordinarily interfere with an order made in exercise of the discretion of the Courts below, specially when there is no evidence that the tenants were guilty of conduct disentitling them to relief against forfeiture for non-payment of rent.

10. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

AIR 1969 SUPREME COURT 1352
(V 50 C 248)

(From Patna (1966) ILR 45 Pat 121)

J C SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ

Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, Appellant v. M/s Kirkend Coal Co., Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2456 of 1966, D/- 12-3-1969

(A) Income-tax Act (1922), Sections 25, 26, 44 — Dissolution of firm — Continuance of its business by newly constituted firm — Case falls under S. 26 and not under Section 44 — Newly constituted firm can be legally assessed to penalty under Section 28 for default of original firm (1966) ILR 45 Pat 121, Reversed.

Section 44 applies only to those cases in which there has been discontinuance of the business of a firm and not to cases in which the business is continued after the reconstitution of the firm or there is succession to the business. Cases of reconstitution of the firm or succession to the business of the firm are covered by Section 28 (1) and (2) (1966) ILR 45 Pat 121, Reversed. (Para 8)

Where there is dissolution of firm but its business is carried on by newly constituted firm, then the newly constituted firm as successor in interest of the original firm, for the default of the original firm, can be legally assessed to penalty under Sec. 28. The expression 'person' in Section 28 for the purpose of that section includes a firm registered and unregistered. And the imposition of penalty being a process of assessment, the Income Tax Officer in imposing penalty can proceed against a firm if there is reconstitution of the firm by virtue of Section 26. If there is discontinuance of the business penalty can be imposed against the partners of the firm. AIR 1941 Mad 255 (SB) and AIR 1964 SC 1095 and AIR 1961 SC 609 and AIR 1962 SC 970, Rel. on. (Para 9)

(B) Income-tax Act (1922), Section 66 — Reference under — Questions not raised and argued before Tribunal cannot be answered in reference.

In reference under Section 66, only the question which was either raised or argued before the Tribunal may be answered, even if the language of the question framed by tribunal may apparently include an inquiry into other matters which could have been but were not raised or argued. Hence where the question, whether under the terms of Sec 26 read with Section 28, penalty may be imposed upon the new partners for the failure of the partners of the firm constituted in the year of account relevant to the assessment year, was never investigated but before the Tribunal and High Court the case was argued on the footing of applicability of Section 44 alone, then in reference, such question cannot be answered. The following Judgment of the Court
was delivered by

SHAH, J.: In determining the taxable income of the respondent firm for the assessment year 1948-49 the Income-tax Officer added to the income returned a sum of Rs. 1,60,000 as 'undisclosed receipts'. The order was confirmed in appeal by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, and by the Tribunal. The Incometax Officer had in the meantime commenced a proceeding for the levy of penalty and in exercise of the power under Section 28 (1) (c) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 he directed the respondent firm to pay Rs. 60,000 as penalty. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner in appeal confirmed the order. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal rejected the contention of the respondent that the order imposing penalty upon the firm after the original firm was dissolved was without jurisdiction

2. The Tribunal referred at the instance of the respondent firm the following question to the High Court of Patna for opinion.

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the imposition of penalty under Section 28 (1) (c) of the Indian Income-tax Act, upon the petitioner firm (respondent) as constituted at the time of levy of penalty was legal and valid?"

3. The High Court called for a supplementary statement of the case and pursuant thereto the Tribunal submitted a statement on the specified points raised by the order of the High Court that:

(1) The firm which carried on the business during the calendar year 1947 was dissolved on July 7, 1951 when Butto Kristo Roy, one of the partners, died.

(2) During the previous year 1947 there was no instrument of partnership in existence, but the terms of the oral partnership were the same as set out in the partnership deed dated October 17, 1949.

(3) The business of the firm was continued with effect from July 8, 1951 by the new firm as successor to the business of the old firm. The terms of the partnership were the same as set out in the deed dated October 17, 1949 and the partners and their shares were also the same except that Baidyanath Roy took the place of Butto Kristo Roy.

(4) With effect from April 28, 1952 the business was carried on by a partnership constituted by Baidyanath Roy and Bijali Kanti Roy under an instrument dated August 27, 1952. There was no dissolution of the firm, which was carrying on the business; there was only a change in the constitution of the old firm from April 28, 1952.

The High Court held that penalty could be legally levied only upon the original firm constituted in the account year relevant to the assessment year 1948-49 and not upon the new firm constituted under the deed dated April 27, 1952.

4. The Tribunal and the High Court approached the problem before them on the assumption that the source of the power of the Income-tax Officer to impose a penalty was in Section 44 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. In so assuming, in our judgment, they were in error. Section 44 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as it stood at the relevant date, in so far as it is material provided:

"Where any business, profession or vocation carried on by a firm . . .
has been discontinued . . . every person who was at the time of such discontinuance . . . a partner of such firm . . . shall in respect of the income, profits and gains of the firm .
. . . be jointly and severally liable to assessment under Chapter IV and for the amount of tax payable and all the provisions of Chapter IV shall, so far as may be, apply to any such assessment."

The section is fairly plain: it applies to cases of discontinuance of the business of a firm and not where there is dissolution of the firm but not discontinuance of its business.

5. In S. M. S. Karuppiiah Pillai v.
Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1941-9 ITR 1=(AIR 1941 Mad 255) (SB), in dealing with the effect of Sec. 44 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, before it was amended by Act 7 of 1939, a Full Bench of the Madras High Court observed:

"This section (S. 44) only applies when there has been discontinuance of the business, * * The sectoo says that if a business is discontinued the partner shall nevertheless be jointly and severally liable for the profits which had been earned."

6 In Shivram Poddar v Income-tax Officer, Central II, Calcutta, 1964-51 ITR 823 = (AIR 1964 SC 1095), this Court examined the scheme of Section 44 (before it was amended by the Finance Act of 1958) and its inter-relation with the provisions of Sections 25 (1), (2), 26 (1), (2) and 28 (1) (c) in some detail. The Court observed

"Section 44 operates in two classes of cases where there is discontinuance of business, profession or vocation carried on by a firm or association, and where, there is dissolution of an association. It follows that mere dissolution of a firm without discontinuance of the business will not attract the application of Section 44 of the Act * * *

The reason for this distinction appears from the scheme of the Income-tax Act in its relation to assessment of the income of a firm. A firm whether registered or unregistered is recognised under the Act as a unit of assessment [Sections 3 and 2 (2)], and its income is computed under Clauses (3) and (4) of Section 23 as the income of any other unit. Section 25 (1) relates to assessment in cases of a discontinued business—whether the business is carried on by a firm or by any other person * * *. Then there is the special provision relating to assessment when at the time of making an assessment it is found that a change has occurred in the constitution of a firm, or a firm has been newly constituted. Section 26 (1). The date on which the change has occurred is immaterial. It may be in the year of account, in the year of assessment or even after the close of the year of assessment. The Income-tax Officer has under Section 26 (1) to assess the firm as constituted at the time of making the assessment, but the income, profits and gains of the previous year have, for the purpose of inclusion in the total income of the partners, to be apportioned between the partners who were entitled to receive the same. Sub-section (2) of Section 26 relates to assessment in the case of succession to a person (which expression includes a firm) carrying on a business by another person in such capacity. * * *. Discontinuance of business has the same connotation in Section 44 as it has in Section 25 of the Act, it does not cover mere change in ownership or in the constitution of the unit of assessment. Section 44 is, therefore, attracted only when the business of a firm is discontinued, i.e., when there is complete cessation of the business and not when there is a change in the ownership of the firm or in its constitution, because by reconstitution of the firm, no change is brought in the personality of the firm, and succession to the business and not discontinuance of the business results * * *. But the Income-tax Act recognises a firm for purposes of assessment as a unit independent of the partners constituting it, it invests the firm with a personality which survives reconstitution. A firm discontinuing its business may be assessed in the manner provided by Section 25 (1) in the year of account in which it discontinues its business, it may also be assessed in the year of assessment. In either case it is the assessment of the income of the firm. Where the firm is dissolved, but the business is not discontinued, there being change in the constitution of the firm, assessment has to be made under S 26 (1) and if there be succession to the business, assessment has to be made under Section 26 (2). The provisions relating to assessment on reconstituted or newly constituted firms, and on succession to the business are obligatory. Therefore, even when there is change in the ownership of the business carried on by a firm on reconstitution or because of a new constitution, assessment must still be made upon the firm. When there is succession the successor and the person succeeded have to be assessed each in respect of his actual share. This scheme of assessment furnishes the reason for omitting reference to dissolution of a firm from Section 44 when such dissolution is not accompanied by discontinuance of the business."

7 Two other cases decided by this Court may be briefly noticed. In C. A. Abraham v Income-tax Officer, Kottayam, 1961-41 ITR 425 = (AIR 1961 SC 609), there was discontinuance of the business of the firm consequent upon dissolution of the firm. Section 44 was held applicable, and it was held that imposition of penalty being a process of assessment the Income-tax Officer was not incompetent to levy penalty after discontinuance of the business. In Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. S. V. Angudi Chettiar, 1962-44 ITR 739 = (AIR 1962 SC 970) this Court held that the Income-tax Officer could exercise under Section 44 read with Section 28 power to impose penalty upon the firm which discontinued its business on dissolution caused by the death of one of the partners.

8. Section 44 therefore only applied to those cases in which there had been discontinuance of the business and not to cases in the business continued after reconstitution of the firm, or there was succession to the business. Cases of reconstitution of the firm or succession to the business of the firm are covered by Sections 26 (1) and (2).

9. "Assessment" in Chapter IV of the Income-tax Act, 1922, includes a proceeding for imposition of penalty. Section 28 of the Act authorises the Income-tax Officer, if satisfied, in the course of any proceeding under the Act that any person has, inter alia, concealed the particulars of his income or deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such income, to direct that such person shall pay by way of penalty, a sum of money not exceeding the amount specified therein in addition to the income-tax and super-tax payable by such person. The expression "person" includes for the purpose of Section 28, a firm registered or unregistered. If there is reconstitution of the firm, by virtue of Section 26, the Income-tax Officer will in imposing the penalty proceed against the firm. If there is discontinuance of the business penalty will be imposed against the partners of the firm.

10. Before the Tribunal and the High Court the case was argued on the footing that Section 44 alone was applicable. Whether under the terms of Section 26 read with Section 28, penalty may be imposed upon the new partners for the failure of the partners of the firm constituted in the year of account relevant to the assessment year 1948-49 was never investigated. The question raised by the Tribunal is in terms sufficiently comprehensive to embrace an enquiry whether partners of the firm in existence on July 30, 1954, were liable to be assessed to penalty as successors in interest of the partners of the original firm in existence in the year of account relating to the assessment year 1948-49. But in a reference under Section 66 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 only the question which was either raised or argued before the Tribunal may be answered, even if the language of the question framed by the Tribunal may apparently include an enquiry into other matters which could have been, but were not, raised or argued.

11. The appeal fails and is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs in this Court.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 136 — Concurrent findings of Courts below that the will was executed when the testator was in sound and disposing state of mind — In appeal with special leave Supreme Court does not ordinarily allow question about due execution of will to be canvassed unless there are exceptional circumstances — Held, that there was no exceptional circumstance which would justify departure from the rule. (B) Succession Act (1925), S. 105 — Will — Legatee dying during lifetime of testator — Express intention to exclude lapse not necessary.

Section 105 enacts that a legacy shall lapse and form part of the residue of the testator's property if the legatee does not survive the testator except where it appears by the will that the testator intended that the legacy shall on the legatee not surviving him go to some other person. It cannot be said that the intention of the testator that a legacy shall not lapse may be given effect to only if the testator expressly directs that if the legatee dies during his lifetime the legacy shall go to some other person, and that intention to exclude lapse cannot be inferred. Section 105 (1) does not say, nor does it imply, that the testator must have expressly envisaged the possibility of lapse in consequence of the legatee dying during his lifetime and must have made a provision for that contingency. Mr M C. Chagla, Senior Advocate, (Mr T Satyanarayana, Advocate, with him), for Appellants, Mr. P. Ram Reddy, Senior Advocate, (Mr. K. Jayaram, Advocate, with him), for Respondents

SHAH, J.: One Appanna died on March 12, 1953, leaving him surviving no wife or lineal descendant. Subha Rao claiming to be the father's sister's son of Appanna instituted suit No 64 of 1953 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Eluru, for partition and separate possession of his half share in the properties described in Schs A, B, C, D & E. The plaintiff claimed that Appanna died intestate, and that he and his brother Venugopala Rao were the nearest heirs entitled to the entire estate of Appanna. To this suit were impleaded Pothana Apparao (husband of the sister of Mangamma wife of Appanna), his children, certain relations of Mangamma and the tenants on the lands in suit. Venugopala Rao was impleaded as the 24th defendant. The suit was defended by Pothana Apparao and others contending, inter alia, that Appanna had made and executed a will on July 14, 1948, devising his property in favour of various legatees and the plaintiff's suit for a share in the property was on that account not maintainable. The Trial Court held that Appanna of his free will and while in a sound state of mind had executed the will on July 14, 1948, whereby he disposed of his properties described in Schs. A, B, C, D & E, but the Court held that the disposition of the property in Schs. C & E lapsed because Mangamma who was a legatee of the properties died before the testator, and that the direction in the will that whatever remained out of the Sch. E property after the lifetime of Mangamma shall pass to Venkataswamy and Seshagunrao defendants Nos. 3 & 2 respectively or their descendants was void and incapable of taking effect. The learned Judge accordingly passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff and the 24th defendant for possession of properties described in Schs C & E.

2. In appeal to the High Court of Andhra Pradesh, Chandrasekhara Sastry, J., allowed the appeal filed by Pothana Apparao and his two sons Venkataswamy and Seshagunrao, and dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs in respect of Schs C & E properties. An appeal under the Letters Patent filed by the plaintiffs against the judgment of Chandrasekhara, J., was dismissed.

3. It has been concurrently found by all the Courts that when he was in a sound and disposing state of mind Appanna executed on July 14, 1948, the will set up by the defendants. In an appeal with special leave this Court will not ordinarily allow a question about due execution to be canvassed, and our attention is not invited to any exceptional circumstances which may justify a departure from the rule.

4. The only question which survives for consideration relates to the true effect of the dispositions made by the will in respect of Sch C and Sch. E properties. The relevant provisions of the will may first be set out.

"I am now about forty years of age I do not have male or female issue. * * * My wife is alive. * * * and with the fear that I may not survive I have made the following provisions in respect of my immovable and movable properties to be given effect to.

I have given power to my wife Mangamma to sell the immovable property mentioned in the C Schedule hereunder and utilise the amount for celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions of Tholeti Narasimha Rao's daughter Seetharatnam mentioned in the B Schedule and for constructing a Ramamandiram in Rajavaram village in my name.

"The immovable property mentioned in the E Schedule hereunder shall be enjoyed by my wife Mangamma with all powers of disposition by way of gift, sale, etc. Whatever remains out of the said E Schedule mentioned immovable property after her lifetime, (the said property) shall pass either to the said Venkataswamy and Seshagiri or their descendants. * * * In the event of my wife taking a boy in adoption the property mentioned in the E Schedule hereunder shall pass to the said adoptee with all powers of disposition by way of gift, sale etc., after her lifetime. * * *

If, for any reason, the properties and rights do not pass to the individuals mentioned in the aforesaid paras, such properties and rights shall be enjoyed by my wife Mangamma with absolute rights."

5. Appanna had directed his wife Mangamma to sell the properties described in Sch. C and to utilise the proceeds for two purposes, "celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions" of Seetharatnam, and "for constructing a Ramamandiram in Rajavaram village" in his name. But the marriage of Seetharatnam was celebrated during the lifetime of Appanna, and expenses in that behalf were defrayed by Appanna and no expenses remained to be incurred after the death of Appanna. Mangamma had no beneficial interest in Sch. C property. She was merely appointed to sell the property and to utilise the proceeds for the purposes specified in the will. The Trial Judge clearly erred in holding that the estate lapsed because Mangamma died during the lifetime of Appanna. In the view of Chandrasekhara Sastry, J., since there was a joint bequest for two purposes, and one of the purposes for which the Sch. C properties were devised was accomplished by Appanna the bequest in its entirety must enure for the remaining purpose i.e., constructing a Ramamandiram, and the plaintiffs' claim for possession of the C. Schedule properties must fail. The learned Judges of the High Court agreed with that view.

6. But there was no "joint bequest" of the properties. In the absence of allocation of the amounts to be utilised for "celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions" of Seetharatnam and for constructing a Ramamandiram, it must be presumed that the fund was to be utilised in equal moieties for the two purposes. Failure of one of the purposes will result in a moiety of the amount devised falling into the residue.

7. In Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chund Dutt, (1896) 23 Ind App 37 at p. 43 (PC) a devise under the will of a Hindu testator who had given a four-anna share of his estate to his daughter and her son for their maintenance with power of making alienation thereof by sale or gift fell to be construed. The Judicial Committee held that on a true construction of the will each took an absolute interest in a two-anna share in the estate. In dealing with the contention that there was a joint estate granted to the daughter and her son the Judicial Committee observed:

"..... Mr. Branson * * * maintained, upon the authority of Vyadinada v. Nagammal, (1888) ILR 11 Mad 258 that, by the terms of the will the Rani and the appellant became, in the sense of English law, joint tenants of the four-annas share of Silda, and not tenants in common; and that her alienation of her share before it was severed and without the consent of the other joint tenant, was ineffectual. The circumstances of that case appear to be on all fours with the circumstances which occur here, and, if well decided, it would be a precedent exactly in point. There are two substantial reasons why it ought not to be followed as an authority. In the first place, it appears to their Lordships that the learned Judges of the High Court of Madras were not justified in importing into the construction of a Hindu will an extremely technical rule of English conveyancing. The principle of joint tenancy appears to be unknown to Hindu law, except in the case of coparcenery between the members of an undivided family."

That principle applies here. The fund was devised for the construction of a Ramamandiram at Rajavaram village and for "celebrating the marriage and other auspicious functions" of Seetharatnam. Since no part of the fund was needed for the benefit of Seetharatnam, the legacy failed pro tanto and fell into the residue. Under the will Mangamma was made the owner of the residue, but by her death during the lifetime of Appanna the residuary bequest lapsed and vested as on intestacy in the plaintiff and the 24th defendant. The devise of a moiety of the fund to be applied for the construction of a Ramamandiram however stands good and the trust must be carried out. Mangamma is dead, but on that account the charitable trust is not extinguished. The Trial Court must give appropriate directions for utilisation of that moiety for constructing a temple according to the direction of Appanna in the will

8 The testator gave to his wife Mangamma an absolute interest in the E Schedule properties, for she was invested with all powers of disposition "by way of gift, sale etc." The will then proceeded to direct that whatever remained out of the E Schedule properties after her death shall pass to Venkataswamy and Seshagunrao. If Mangamma had survived Appanna, probably the devise in favour of Venkataswamy and Seshagunrao may have failed, but that question does not arise for consideration

9 Section 105 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, which applies to the wills of Hindus provides

"(1) If the legatee does not survive the testator, the legacy cannot take effect, but shall lapse and form part of the residue of the testator's property, unless it appears by the will that the testator intended that it should go to some other person."

(2) • • • • •

Mr Chagla for the plaintiffs contends that the estate in the E Schedule properties devised in favour of Mangamma lapsed, for, there was nothing in the will which expressly provided that in the event of Mangamma dying during the testator's lifetime, the devise in favour of Venkataswamy and Seshagunrao shall be accelerated. Counsel relies upon the judgment of Wickens, V C, in Browne v Hope, (1872) 14 Eq 343 and contends that a legacy does not lapse, if the testator does two things — he, in clear words, excludes lapse, and he clearly indicates the person who is to take the legacy in case the legatee should die in his lifetime. In Browne's case, (1872) 14 Eq 343 the testator gave, by his will, the residue of his estate to trustees to pay and transfer the same to seven named legatees in equal shares as tenants in common, and their respective executors, administrators and assigns, and he declared that such shares shall be vested interests in each legatee immediately upon the execution thereof, and that the shares of the married women shall be for their separate use. It was held that the share of one of the legatees — a married woman — who died after the date of the will, but before the testator, did not belong to her husband, who was her legal personal representative, and it lapsed.

10 Counsel says that the rule of interpretation as enunciated by Vice Chancellor Wickens is incorporated in Section 105 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925. He submits that a legacy will not lapse only if the testator by express direction excludes lapse, and indicates clearly the person who shall take the legacy if the legatee dies during his lifetime.

11. We are concerned to construe the provisions of Section 105 of the Indian Succession Act. That section enacts that a legacy shall lapse and form part of the residue of the testator's property if the legatee does not survive the testator except where it appears by the will that the testator intended that the legacy shall on the legatee not surviving him go to some other person. We are unable to agree that the intention of the testator that a legacy shall not lapse may be given effect to only if the testator expressly directs that if the legatee dies during his lifetime the legacy shall go to some other person, and that intention to exclude lapse cannot be inferred. Section 105 (1) does not say, nor does it imply that the testator must have expressly envisaged the possibility of lapse in consequence of the legatee dying during his lifetime and must have made a provision for that contingency.

12 In In re, Lowman, Devenish v. Pester, (1895) 2 Ch 343 a testator, who under a settlement was absolutely entitled to a moiety of the proceeds of a certain real estate under a trust for sale, by his will devised that the real estate by its proper description, together with certain real estate of his own, to trustees, to the use of H, for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve the contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of H successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of his niece E successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of his niece M successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of his niece F successively in tail male, with remainder over. H survived the testator and died a bachelor. M also survived the testator and died unmarried. E was still alive but unmarried and seventy years of age. F had two sons, the eldest of whom died before the testator. It was held that when there are in a will successive limitations of personal estate in favour of several persons absolutely, the first of those persons who survives the testator takes absolutely, although he would have taken nothing if any previous legatee had survived and had taken the effect of the failure of an earlier gift is to accelerate, not to destroy, the later gift.

13. This rule was applied in In re, Dunstan; Dunstan v. Dunstan, (1918) 2 Ch 304. A testatrix by her will gave freeholds absolutely to A, subject to the bequest that whatever out of the freeholds should remain after A's death shall be given to a named charity. It was held that if A had survived the testatrix the gift to the charity would have been repugnant and void, and A would have taken the freeholds absolutely. But since A died in the lifetime of the testatrix, the doctrine of repugnancy did not apply, and the gift to charity was accelerated and took effect.

14. Mangamma died during the lifetime of the testator: thereby the estate in Sch. E properties granted to Venkata-swamy and his brother Seshagirirao was accelerated. The plaintiffs are therefore not entitled to any share in Sch. E properties.

15. The decree of the High Court is modified. It is declared that there is intestacy in respect of a half share in the fund arising by sale of Sch. C properties, and the plaintiff and the 24th defendant are entitled to take that half share in the fund. It is directed that the Trial Court will issue appropriate directions for application of the other half of the fund arising by sale of Sch. C properties for constructing Ramamandiram at Rajavaram village as directed by the testator in his will. Subject to this modification the appeal will be dismissed. The appellant will pay 3/4th of the costs of the contesting respondents in this Court.

Mr. M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate, (Mr. R. Thiagarajan, Advocate for Mr. T. Satyanarayana, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; M/s. M. Suryanarayana-murthy and K. Jayaram, Advocates, for Respondents (Nos. 1, 4 to 6, 9 to 11, 13, 17, 25, 26, 29, 39, 42, 45, 47, 55 to 57, 59, 63 and 64).

BACHAWAT, J.: This disputes relates to the succession to the immoveable properties of late Bhaskara Rao, a Brahmin karnam, who died on November 29, 1903 without issue, but leaving a widow. The suit was instituted on April 15, 1953 by the appellant claiming to be the nearest heir of Bhaskara Rao for recovery of possession of the properties. The case of the contesting defendants is that Bhaskara Rao executed a will on November 29, 1903 authorising his widow Seshamma to adopt a son, that pursuant to such authority she adopted Rajeswararao in or about May, 1904 that Rajeswara died in 1950 and that the first defendant is his adopted son. The courts below concurrently found in favour of the defendants on all the points. They held that (1) Bhaskara Rao duly executed the will dated November 29, 1903; (2) his widow Seshamma in fact adopted Rajeswararao in or about May 1904 and the requisite ceremonies of adoption were performed. These findings of fact are no longer challenged.

2. The trial court held that at the time of adoption Seshamma was about 14 years of age. The High Court held that having regard to the lapse of time there was a strong presumption that Seshamma had attained the usual age of discretion at the time of the adoption, that the presumption had not been rebutted and that the adoption was valid.

3 Mr. M. C. Chagla argued that in May 1904 Seshamma had not attained the age of discretion and was not competent to make the adoption. He relied on the following passage in Mulla's Principles of Hindu law, 13th Ed., Art. 465, page 491 —

"A minor widow may adopt in the same circumstances as an adult widow, provided she has attained the age of discretion and is able to form an independent judgment in selecting the boy to be adopted. According to Bengal writers the age of discretion is reached at the beginning of the sixteenth year, according to Benaras writers, at the end of the sixteenth year. The former view was taken in a recent Madras case."

4. Now there is no clear evidence on the question of Seshamma's age in May 1904. The plaint said that she was then 10 years of age. One of the written statements said that she was about 15 years old. Exhibit A-2 an extract from the register of deaths suggests that she was then aged about 14 years. In Ex. A-7 dated March 25, 1907, Ex. B-5 dated May 2, 1907 Ex. B-110 dated April 23, 1909, Ex. B-7, dated November 1, 1911, Ex. B-22 dated November 15, 1911, Exs. A-11 and A-12 dated November 17, 1911, she was described as a minor. But Ex. B-138 dated August 9, 1910 described her as a major. The evidence of DW 2 suggests that she was about 15 years old at the time of adoption. The evidence of DW 3 fixes her age at about 17 years in or about 1903. Evidence was adduced to show that she married in 1898 when she was 11 or 12 years old. The appellant made no attempt to produce the certified copy of the register of births which would have shown her exact age. The adoption was made in May 1904. It was challenged in 1953 after a lapse of about 50 years. The long delay in filing the suit is not satisfactorily explained. A declaratory suit challenging the adoption could have been filed soon after the adoption. Rajeswararao died in 1950, Seshamma died on October 2, 1952. During his lifetime Rajeswararao was recognised by every member of the family as the adopted son of Bhaskara Rao. He was registered as karnam and acted as such till his death. Under Ex. B-12 dated November 19, 1937 the plaintiff's mother Kamappa purchased a property from Rajeswararao wherein he was described as the adopted son of Bhaskara Rao. Having regard to the long lapse of time and the recognition of Rajeswararao as the adopted son of Bhaskara Rao, the strongest presumption arises in favour of the validity of the adoption. The law on this point is correctly stated in Mulla's Hindu Law, 13th Ed., art. 512 page 519 —

"But when there is a lapse of 55 years between the adoption and its being questioned, every allowance for the absence of evidence to prove such fact must be favourably entertained. It stands to reason that after a very long term of years, and a variety of transactions of open life and conduct upon the footing that the adoption was a valid act the burden must rest heavily upon him who challenges its validity," see also Venkatasectarama Chandra Row v. Kanchu Marthi Raju, AIR 1925 PC 201, 202.

The presumption in this case is very heavy considering that all the parties to the adoption and all those who could have given evidence in favour of its validity have passed away. The appellant has not rebutted this presumption and has not shown that Seshamma did not attain the age of discretion in May 1904 and was not competent to make the adoption. The courts below rightly found in favour of the factum and validity of the adoption. There is no merit in this appeal.

14. In order for the State in the person of school officials to justify prohibition of a particular expression of opinion, it must be able to show that its action was caused by something more than a mere desire to avoid the discomfort and unpleasantness that always accompany an unpopular viewpoint. Certainly where there is no finding and no showing that the exercise of the forbidden right would "materially and substantially interfere with the requirements of appropriate discipline in the operation of the school," the prohibition cannot be sustained. (1966) 363 F 2d 744 at p. 749.

15. In the present case, the District Court made no such finding, and our independent examination of the record fails to yield evidence that the school authorities had reason to anticipate that the wearing of the armbands would substantially interfere with the work of the school or impinge upon the rights of other students. Even an official memorandum prepared after the suspension that listed the reasons for the ban on wearing the armbands made no reference to the anticipation of such disruption.(3)

16. On the contrary, the action of the school authorities appears to have been based upon an urgent wish to avoid the controversy which might result from the expression, even by the silent symbol of armbands, of opposition to this Nation's part in the conflagration in Vietnam.(4) It is revealing, in this respect, that the

3. The only suggestions of fear of disorder in the report are these:

"A former student of one of our high schools was killed in Viet Nam. Some of his friends are still in school and it was felt that if any kind of a demonstration existed, it might evolve into something which would be difficult to control.

"Students at one of the high schools were heard to say they would wear armbands of other colors if the black bands prevailed."

Moreover, the testimony of school authorities at trial indicates that it was not fear of disruption that motivated the regulation prohibiting the armbands; the regulation was directed against "the principle of the demonstration" itself. School authorities simply felt that "the schools are no place for demonstrations," and if the students "didn't like the way our elected officials were handling things, it should be handled with the ballot box and not in the halls of our public schools."

4. The District Court found that the school authorities, in prohibiting black armbands, were influenced by the fact

meeting at which the school principals decided to issue the contested regulation was called in response to a student's statement to the journalism teacher in one of the schools that he wanted to write an article on Vietnam and have it published in the school paper. (The student was dissuaded.)(5)

17. It is also relevant that the school authorities did not purport to prohibit the wearing of all symbols of political or controversial significance. The record shows that students in some of the schools wore buttons relating to national political campaigns, and some even wore the Iron Cross, traditionally a symbol of Nazism. The order prohibiting the wearing of armbands did not extend to these. Instead, a particular symbol—black armbands worn to exhibit opposition to this Nation's involvement in Vietnam—was singled out for prohibition. Clearly, the prohibition of expression of one particular opinion, at least without evidence that it is necessary to avoid material and substantial interference with school work or discipline, is not constitutionally permissible.

18. In our system, state-operated schools may not be enclaves of totalitarianism. School officials do not possess absolute authority over their students. Students in school as well as out of school are "persons" under our Constitution. They are possessed of fundamental rights which the State must respect, just as they themselves must respect their obligations to the State. In our system, students may not be regarded as closed-circuit recipients of only that which the State chooses to communicate. They may that "[t]he Viet Nam war and the involvement of the United States therein has been the subject of a major controversy for some time. When the armband regulation involved herein was promulgated, debate over the Viet Nam war had become vehement in many localities. A protest march against the war had been recently held in Washington, D. C. A wave of draft-card burning incidents protesting the war had swept the country. At that time two publicized draft burning were pending in this Court. Both individuals supporting the war and those opposing it were quite vocal in expressing their views." 258 F Supp, at 972-973.

5. After the principals' meeting, the director of secondary education and the principal of the high school informed the student that the principals were opposed to publication of his article. They reported that "we felt that it was a very friendly conversation, although we did not feel that we had convinced the student that our decision was a just one."

be confined to the expression of those sentiments that are officially approved. In the absence of a specific showing of constitutionally valid reasons to regulate their speech, students are entitled to freedom of expression of their views. As Judge Gevin, speaking for the Fifth Circuit said, school officials cannot suppress "expressions of feelings with which they do not wish to contend" (1966) 363 F 2d 744 at p 749 (supra)

19. In (1923) 262 US 390 at 402, 67 L Ed 1042 at 1046 (supra), Justice McReynolds expressed the Nation's repudiation of the principle that a State might so conduct its schools as to "foster a homogeneous people." He said

"In order to submerge the individual and develop ideal citizens, Sparta assembled the males at seven into barracks and intrusted their subsequent education and training to official guardians. Although such measures have been deliberately approved by men of great genius, their ideas touching the relation between individual and State were wholly different from those upon which our institutions rest, and it hardly will be affirmed that any legislature could impose such restrictions upon the people of a State without doing violence to both letter and spirit of the Constitution."

20. This principle has been repeated by this Court on numerous occasions during the intervening years. In (1967) 385 US 589, 603, 17 L Ed 2d 629, 640 Mr Justice Brennan, speaking for the Court, said.

"The vigilant protection of constitutional freedoms is nowhere more vital than in the community of American schools" (1960) 364 US 479, 487, [5 L Ed 2d 231, 236]. The classroom is peculiarly the "market-place of ideas." The Nation's future depends upon leaders trained through wide exposure to that robust exchange of ideas which discovers truth "out of a multitude of tongues, [rather] than through any kind of authoritative selection" . . . "

21. The principle of these cases is not confined to the supervised and ordained discussion which takes place in the classroom. The principal use to which the schools are dedicated is to accommodate students during prescribed hours for the purpose of certain types of activities. Among those activities is personal intercommunication among the students (6)

6. In Hammond v South Carolina State College, 272 F Supp 947 (DC SC 1967), District Judge Hemphill had before him a case involving a meeting on campus of 300 students to express their views on school practices. He pointed out that a school is not like a hospital or a jail enclosure. Cf. Cox v Louisiana, 379 US

This is not only an inevitable part of the process of attending school. It is also an important part of the educational process. A student's rights therefore, do not embrace merely the classroom hours. When he is in the cafeteria, or on the playing field, or on the campus during the authorized hours, he may express his opinions, even on controversial subjects like the conflict in Vietnam, if he does so "without materially and substantially interfering with appropriate discipline in the operation of the school" and without colliding with the rights of others. (1966) 363 F 2d 744 at p 749 (supra). But conduct by the student, in class or out of it, which for any reason — whether it stems from time, place, or type of behavior — materially disrupts classwork or involves substantial disorder or invasion of the rights of others is, of course, not immunized by the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech. Cf. Blackwell v Issaquena City Bd of Educ. (1966) 363 F 2d 749 (CA 5th Cir, 1966)

22. Under our Constitution, free speech is not a right that is given only to be so circumscribed that it exists in principle but not in fact. Freedom of expression would not truly exist if the right could be exercised only in an area that a benevolent government has provided as a safe haven for crackpots. The Constitution says that Congress (and the States) may not abridge the right to free speech. This provision means what it says. We properly read it to permit reasonable regulation of speech-connected activities in carefully restricted circumstances. But we do not confine the permissible exercise of First Amendment rights to a telephone booth or the four corners of a pamphlet, or to supervised and ordained discussion in a school classroom.

23. If a regulation were adopted by school officials forbidding discussion of the Vietnam conflict, or the expression by any student of opposition to it anywhere on school property except as part of a prescribed classroom exercise, it would be obvious that the regulation would violate the constitutional rights of students, at least if it could not be justified by a showing that the students' activities would materially and substan-

It is a public place, and its dedication to specific uses does not imply that the constitutional rights of persons entitled to be there are to be gauged as if the premises were purely private property. Cf. Edwards v South Carolina, 372 US 229, 9 L Ed 697, 83 S Ct 680 (1963), Brown v Louisiana, 383 US 131, 15 L Ed 2d 637, 87 S Ct 719 (1966).

tially disrupt the work and discipline of the school. Cf. Hammond v. South Carolina State College, (1967) 272 F Supp 947 (DCD SC 1967) (orderly protest meeting on state college campus); Dickey v. Alabama State Board, (1967) 273 F Supp 613 (DCMD Ala 1967) (expulsion of student editor of college newspaper). In the circumstances of the present case, the prohibition of the silent, passive "witness of the armbands", as one of the children called it, is no less offensive to the Constitution's guaranties.

24. As we have discussed, the record does not demonstrate any facts which might reasonably have led school authorities to forecast substantial disruption of or material interference with school activities, and no disturbances or disorders on the school premises in fact occurred. These petitioners merely went about their ordained rounds in school. Their deviation consisted only in wearing on their sleeve a band of black cloth, not more than two inches wide. They wore it to exhibit their disapproval of the Vietnam hostilities and their advocacy of a truce, to make their views known, and by their example, to influence others to adopt them. They neither interrupted school activities nor sought to intrude in the school affairs or the lives of others. They caused discussion outside of the class rooms, but no interference with work and no disorder. In the circumstances, our Constitution does not permit officials of the State to deny their form of expression.

25. We express no opinion as to the form of relief which should be granted, this being a matter for the lower courts to determine. We reverse and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

26. Reversed and remanded.

SEPARATE OPINIONS

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, concurring.

27. Although I agree with much of what is said in the Court's opinion, and with its judgment in this case, I cannot share the Court's uncritical assumption that, school discipline aside, the First Amendment rights of children are co-extensive with those of adults. Indeed, I had thought the Court decided otherwise just last Term in Ginsberg v. New York, (1968) 390 US 629, 20 L Ed 2d 195, I continue to hold the view I expressed in that case: "[A] State may permissibly determine that, at least in some precisely delineated areas, a child-like someone in a captive audience — is not possessed of that full capacity for individual choice which is the presupposition of First Amendment guarantees". Id., (1968) 390 US 629 at 649-650, 20 L Ed 2d 195 at 209, 210 (concurring opinion). Cf.

Prince v. Massachusetts, (1943) 321 US 158, 88 L Ed 645.

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, concurring.

28. While I join the Court's opinion, I deem it appropriate to note, first, that the Court continues to recognize a distinction between communicating by words and communicating by acts or conduct which sufficiently impinge on some valid state interest; and, second, that I do not subscribe to everything the Court of Appeals said about free speech in its opinion in (1966) 363 F 2d 744, 748 (CA 5th Cir 1966), a case relied upon by the Court in the matter now before us.

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, dissenting.

29. The Court's holding in this case ushers in what I deem to be an entirely new era in which the power to control pupils by the elected "officials of state supported public schools. . . ." in the United States is in ultimate effect transferred to the Supreme Court. (1) The Court brought this particular case here on a petition for certiorari urging that the First and Fourteenth Amendments protect the right of school pupils to express their political views all the way "from kindergarten through high school." Here the constitutional right to "political expression" asserted was a right to wear black armbands during school hours and at classes in order to demonstrate to the other students that the petitioners were mourning because of the death of United States' soldiers in Vietnam and to protest that war which they were against. Ordered to refrain from wearing the armbands in school by the elected school officials and the teachers vested with state authority to do so, apparently only seven out of the school system's 18,000 pupils deliberately refused to obey the order. One defying pupil was Paul Tinker, 8 years old, who was in the second grade; another, Hope Tinker was 11 years old in the fifth grade; a third member of the Tinker family was 13, in the eighth grade; and a fourth member of the same family was John Tinker, 15 years old, an 11th grade high school pupil. Their father, a Methodist minister without a church, is paid a salary by the American Friends Service Committee. Another student who defied the school order and insisted on wearing an armband in school was Chris Eckhardt, an 11th grade pupil

1. The petition for certiorari here presented this single question:

"Whether the First and Fourteenth Amendments permit officials of state-supported public schools to prohibit students from wearing symbols of political views within school premises where the symbols are not disruptive of school discipline or decorum."

and a petitioner in this case. His mother is an official in the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

30. As I read the Court's opinion it relies upon the following grounds for holding unconstitutional the judgment of the Des Moines school officials and the two Courts below. First the Court concludes that the wearing of armbands is "symbolic speech" which is "akin to pure speech" and therefore protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. Secondly, the Court decides that the public schools are an appropriate place to exercise "symbolic speech" as long as normal school functions are not "unreasonably" disrupted. Finally, the Court arrogates to itself, rather than to the State's elected officials charged with running the schools, the decisions as to which school disciplinary regulations are "reasonable."

31. Assuming that the Court is correct in holding that the conduct of wearing armbands for the purpose of conveying political ideas is protected by the First Amendment compare, e.g., Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co. (1949) 336 US 490, 93 L Ed 834, the crucial remaining questions are whether students and teachers may use the schools at their whim as a platform for the exercise of free speech — "symbolic" or "pure" — and whether the Courts will allocate to themselves the function of deciding how the pupils school day will be spent. While I have always believed that under the First and Fourteenth Amendments neither the State nor Federal Government has any authority to regulate or censor the content of speech, I have never believed that any person has a right to give speeches or engage in demonstrations where he pleases and when he pleases. This Court has already rejected such a notion. In (1965) 379 US 536, 13 L Ed 2d 471, for example, the Court clearly stated that the rights of free speech and assembly "do not mean that anyone with opinions or beliefs to express may address a group at any public place and at any time." (1965) 379 US 536, 554, 13 L Ed 2d 471, 483.

32. While the record does not show that any of these armband students shouted, used profane language or were violent in any manner, a detailed report by some of them shows their armbands caused comments, warnings by other students, the poking of fun at them, and a warning by an older football player that other, non-protesting students had better let them alone. There is also evidence that the professor of mathematics had his lesson period practically "wrecked" chiefly by disputes with Beth Tinker, who wore her armband for her "demonstration." Even a casual reading of the record shows that this armband did divert students' minds from their regular lessons, and that talk, comments, etc., made John Tinker "self-conscious" in attending school with his armband. While the absence of obscene or boisterous and loud disorder perhaps justifies the Court's statement that the few armband students did not actually "disrupt" the classwork, I think the record overwhelmingly shows that the armbands did exactly what the elected school officials and principals foresaw it would, that is, took the students' minds off their classwork and diverted them to thoughts about the highly emotional subject of the Vietnam war. And I repeat that if the time has come when pupils of state-supported schools, kindergarten, grammar school or high school, can defy and flaunt orders of school officials to keep their minds on their own school work, it is the beginning of a new revolutionary era of permissiveness in this country fostered by the judiciary. The next logical step it appears to me, would be to hold unconstitutional laws that bar pupils under 21 or 18 from voting, or from being elected members of the Boards of Education. (2)

33. The United States District Court refused to hold that the State school orders violated the First and Fourteenth Amendments. 258 F Supp 971. Holding that the protest was akin to speech, which is protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments, that court held that the school orders were "reasonable" and hence constitutional. There was at one time a line of cases holding "reasonableness" as the court saw it to be the test of a "due process" violation. Two cases upon which the Court today heavily relies for striking down these school orders used this test of reasonableness, (1923) 262 US 390, 67 L Ed 1042 and (1923) 262 US 404=67 L Ed 1047. The opinions in both cases were written by Mr. Justice McReynolds, Mr. Justice

2 The following Associated Press article appeared in the Washington Evening Star, January 11, 1969, p A-2, col 1

"Bellingham, Mass (AP) — Todd R. Hennessy, 16, has filed nominating papers to run for town park commissioner in the March election.

"I can see nothing illegal in the youth's seeking the elective office," said Lee Ambler, the town counsel. "But I can't overlook the possibility that if he is elected any legal contract entered into by the park commissioner would be void because he is a juvenile."

"Todd is a junior in Mount St. Charles Academy, where he has a top scholastic record."

Holmes, who opposed this reasonableness test, dissented from the holdings as did Mr. Justice Sutherland. This constitutional test of reasonableness prevailed in this Court for a season. It was this test that brought on President Franklin Roosevelt's well-known Court fight. His proposed legislation did not pass, but the fight left the "reasonable" constitutional test dead on the battlefield, so much so that this Court in Ferguson v. Skrupa, (1963) 372 US 726, 729, 730, 10 L Ed 2d 93, 96, 97, 83 S Ct 1028, 95 ALR 2d 1347 after a thorough review of the old cases, was able to conclude in 1962:

"There was a time when the Due Process Clause was used by this Court to strike down laws which were thought unreasonable, that is, unwise or incompatible with some economic or social philosophy The doctrine that prevailed in Lochner, Coppage, Adkins, Burns, and like cases — that due process authorizes courts to hold laws unconstitutional when they believe the legislature has acted unwisely — has long since been discarded."

The Ferguson case totally repudiated the old reasonableness due process test, the doctrine that judges have the power to hold laws unconstitutional upon the belief of judges that they are "unreasonable," "arbitrary," "shock the conscience," "irrational," "contrary to fundamental 'decency,'" or some other such flexible term without precise boundaries. I have many times expressed my opposition to that concept on the ground that it gives judges power to strike down any law they do not like. If the majority of the Court today, by agreeing to the opinion of my Brother Fortas, is resurrecting that old reasonableness due process test, I think the constitutional change should be plainly, unequivocally, and forthrightly stated for the benefit of the bench and bar. It will be a sad day for the country, I believe, when the present day Court returns to the McReynolds' due process concept. Other cases cited by the Court do not, as implied, follow the McReynolds' reasonableness doctrine. (1943) 319 US 624 = 87 L Ed 1628 clearly rejecting the "reasonableness" test, held that the Fourteenth Amendment made the First applicable to the States, and held that the two forbade a State to compel little school children to salute the United States flag when they had religious scruples against it. (3) Neither (1940) 310 US

88, 84 L Ed 1093, (1931) 283 US 359, 75 L Ed 1117, (1963) 372 US 229, 9 L Ed 2d 697, nor (1966) 383 US 131, 15 L Ed 2d 637, related to school children at all, and none of these cases embraced Mr. Justice McReynolds' reasonableness test; and Thornhill, (1940) 310 US 88 Edwards, & Brown, (1966) 383 US 131 relied on the vagueness of state statutes under scrutiny to hold it unconstitutional, (1965) 379 US 536, 555, 13 L Ed 2d 471, 484, (1966) 385 US 39, 17 L Ed 2d 149, cited by the Court as a "compare," indicating, I suppose, that these two cases are no longer the law, were not rested to the slightest extent on the Meyers and Bartel "reasonableness-due process-McReynolds," constitutional test.

34. I deny, therefore, that it has been the "unmistakable holding of this Court for almost 50 years" that "students" and "teachers" take with them into the "schoolhouse gate" constitutional rights to "freedom of speech or expression." Even Meyer did not hold that. It makes no reference to "symbolic speech" at all; what it did was to strike down as "unreasonable" and therefore unconstitutional a Nebraska law barring the teaching of the German language before the children reached their eighth grade. One can well agree with Justice Holmes and Mr. Justice Sutherland, as I do, that such a law was no more unreasonable than it would be to bar the teaching of Latin and Greek to pupils who have not reached the eighth grade. In fact, I think the majority's reason for invalidating the Nebraska law was that they did not like or in legal jargon that it "shocked the Court's conscience," "offended its sense of justice" was "contrary to fundamental concepts of the English-speaking world," as the Court has sometimes said. See, e. g., Rochin v. California, (1950) 342 US 165, 96 L Ed 183, and Irvine v. California, teenth Amendment has rendered the legislatures of the states as incompetent as Congress to enact such laws. The constitutional inhibition of legislation on the subject of religion has a double aspect. On the one hand, it forestalls compulsion by law of the acceptance of any creed or the practice of any form of worship. Freedom of conscience and freedom to adhere to such religious organization or form of worship as the individual may choose cannot be restricted by law. On the other hand, it safeguards the free exercise of the chosen form of religion. Thus the Amendment embraces two concepts — freedom to believe and freedom to act. The first is absolute but, in the nature of things, the second cannot be. Conduct remains subject to regulation for the protection of society."

3. In Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 US 296, 303-304, 84 L Ed 1213, 1218, 60 S Ct 900, 128 ALR 1352 (1939), this Court said:

"The First Amendment declares that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Four-

(1953) 347 US 128, 98 L Ed 561. The truth is that a teacher of kindergarten, grammar school, or high school pupils no more carries into a school with him a complete right to freedom of speech and expression than an anti-Catholic or anti-Semitic carries with him a complete freedom of speech and religion into a Catholic church or Jewish synagogue. Nor does a person carry with him into the United States Senate or House, or to the Supreme Court, or any other court, a complete constitutional right to go into those places contrary to their rules and speak his mind on any subject he pleases. It is a myth to say that any person has a constitutional right to say what he pleases, where he pleases, and when he pleases. Our Court has decided precisely the opposite. See, e.g., (1965) 379 US 536, 555, 13 L Ed 2d 471, 484, (1966) 385 US 39, 17 L Ed 2d 149.

35 In my view, teachers, in state-controlled public schools are hired to teach there. Although Mr Justice McReynolds may have intimated to the contrary in Meyers v Nebraska, supra, certainly a teacher is not paid to go into school and teach subjects the State does not hire him to teach as a part of its selected curriculum. Nor are public school students sent to the schools at public expense to broadcast political or any other views to educate and inform the public. The original idea of schools, which I do not believe is yet abandoned as worthless or out of date, was that children had not yet reached the point of experience and wisdom which enabled them to teach all of their elders. It may be that the Nation has outgrown the old-fashioned slogan that "children are to be seen not heard," but one may, I hope, be permitted to harbor the thought that taxpayers send children to school on the premise that at their age they need to learn, not teach.

36 The true principles on this whole subject were in my judgment spoken by Mr Justice McKenna for the Court in Waugh v Mississippi University in (1914) 237 US 589, 596-597, 59 L Ed 1131, 1137. The State had there passed a law barring students from peaceably assembling in Greek letter fraternities and providing that students who joined them could be expelled from school. This law would appear on the surface to run afoul of the First Amendment's freedom of assembly clause. The law was attacked as violative of due process and as a deprivation of property, of liberty, and of the privileges and immunities clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. It was argued that the fraternity made its members more moral, taught discipline, and inspired its members to study harder and to obey better the rules of discipline and order. This Court rejected all the "fervid" pleas of the fraternities' advocates decided unanimously against these Fourteenth Amendment arguments. The Court in its closing paragraph made this statement which has complete relevance for us today:

"It is said that the fraternity to which complainant belongs is a moral and of itself a disciplinary force. This need not be denied. But whether such membership makes against discipline was for the State of Mississippi to determine. It is to be remembered that the University was established by the State and is under the control of the State, and the enactment of the statute may have been induced by the opinion that 'membership in the prohibited societies divided the attention of the students and distracted from that singleness of purpose which the State desired to exist in its public educational institutions.' It is not for us to entertain conjectures in opposition to the views of the State and annul its regulations upon disputable considerations of their wisdom or necessity." (Emphasis (here in ' ') supplied)

37. It was on the foregoing argument that this Court sustained the power of Mississippi to curtail the First Amendment's right of peaceable assembly. And the same reasons are equally applicable to curtailing in the States' public schools the right to complete freedom of expression. Iowa's public schools, like Mississippi's University, are operated to give students an opportunity to learn, not to talk politics by actual speech, or by "symbolic" speech. And as I have pointed out before the record amply shows that public protest in the school classes against the Vietnam war "distracted from that singleness of purpose which the State (here Iowa) desired to exist in its public educational institutions." Here the Court should accord Iowa educational institutions the same right to determine for itself what free expression and no more should be allowed in its schools that it accorded Mississippi with reference to freedom of assembly. But even if the record were silent as to protest against the Vietnam war distracting students from their assigned class work, members of this Court, like all other citizens, know, without being told, that the disputes over the wisdom of the Vietnam war have disrupted and divided this country as few other issues ever have. Of course students, like other people, cannot concentrate on lesser issues when black arm-bands are being ostentatiously displayed in their presence to call attention to the wounded and dead of the war, some of the wounded and the dead being their friends and neighbors. It was, of course, to distract the attention of other students that some students insisted up to the very point of their own suspension from school that they were determined to sit in school with their symbolic armbands.

38. Change has been said to be truly the law of life but sometimes the old and the tried and true are worth holding. The schools of this Nation have undoubtedly contributed to giving us tranquillity and to making us a more law-abiding people. Uncontrolled and uncontrollable liberty is an enemy to domestic peace. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that some of the country's greatest problems are crimes committed by the youth, too many of school age. School discipline, like parental discipline, is an integral and important part of training our children to be good citizens—to be better citizens. Here a very small number of students have crisply and summarily refused to obey a school order designed to give pupils who want to learn the opportunity to do so. One does not need to be a prophet or the son of a prophet to know that after the Court's holding today that some students in Iowa schools and indeed in all schools will be ready, able, and willing to defy their teachers on practically all orders. This is the more unfortunate for the schools since groups of students all over the land are already running loose, conducting break-ins, sit-ins, lie-ins, and smash-ins. Many of these student groups, as is all too familiar to all who read the newspapers and watch the television news programs, have already engaged in rioting, property seizures and destruction. They have picketed schools to force students not to cross their picket lines and have too often violently attacked earnest but frightened students who wanted an education that the picketers did not want them to get. Students engaged in such activities are apparently confident that they know far more about how to operate public school systems than do their parents, teachers, and elected school officials. It is no answer to say that the particular students here have not yet reached such high points in their demands to attend classes in order to exercise their political pressures. Turned loose with lawsuits for damages and injunctions against their teachers like they are here, it is nothing but wishful thinking to imagine that young, immature students will not soon believe it is their right to control the schools rather than the right of the States that collect the taxes to hire the teachers for the benefit of the pupils. This case, therefore, wholly without constitutional reasons in my judgment, subjects all the public schools in the country to the whims and caprices of their loudest-mouthed, but may be not their brightest, students. I, for one, am not fully persuaded that school pupils are wise enough, even with this Court's expert help from Washington, to run the 23,390 public school systems (4) in our 50 States. I wish, therefore, wholly to disclaim any purpose on my part, to hold that the Federal Constitution compels the teachers, parents, and elected school officials to surrender control of the American public school system to public school students. I dissent.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, dissenting.

39. I certainly agree that state public school authorities in the discharge of their responsibilities are not wholly exempt from the requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment respecting the freedoms of expression and association. At the same time I am reluctant to believe that there is any disagreement between the majority and myself on the proposition that school officials should be accorded the widest authority in maintaining discipline and good order in their institutions. To translate that proposition into a workable constitutional rule, I would, in cases like this, cast upon those complaining the burden of showing that a particular school measure was motivated by other than legitimate school concerns—for example, a desire to prohibit the expression of an unpopular point of view, while permitting expression of the dominant opinion.

40. Finding nothing in this record which impugns the good faith of respondents in promulgating the armband regulation, I would affirm the judgment below.

A railroad company after exhausting all remedies under Railway Labor Act for resolution of disputes, unilaterally changed the working conditions the rate of pay etc of its working employees. The employees struck work and picketed at various centres where the railroad carried on its operations. In an action for injunctive relief against the picketing unions, the trial court granted an injunction on the ground that picketing was a secondary boycott illegal under state law and would cause serious economic damage to entire state. The Florida court of appeal affirmed. On certiorari the U S Supreme Court reversed.

Held per Harlan (on behalf of himself and three others) that though the State Courts were not pre-empted of the jurisdiction over the cause the issues were governed by the Federal laws and the question of peaceful non-violent picketing in support of peaceful primary strikes were federally protected under Railway Labor Act and were therefore immune from State interference. Case law discussed.

SUMMARY

After exhausting all procedures required by the Railway Labor Act for the resolution of a major dispute, a railroad company unilaterally changed its operating employees' rates of pay, rules, and working conditions, and the unions representing such employees called a strike and thereafter picketed at various locations where the railroad conducted operations. A railroad terminal company, which was jointly owned and controlled by the struck railroad and three other railroads, instituted an action in the Florida Circuit Court for injunctive relief against the unions and their officers to prevent picketing at the terminal, which picketing had secondary effects with regard to the other users of the terminal. The trial court held that the picketing constituted a secondary boycott illegal under state law and would cause serious economic damage to the entire state, and granted an injunction restraining the unions from picketing the terminal except at a gate purportedly reserved for employees of the struck railroad. On appeal the Florida District Court of Appeals affirmed (201 So 2d 253).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Harlan, J., expressing the view of four members of the Court, it was held that (1) although the Florida Courts were not pre-empted of jurisdiction over the cause, the issues were governed by federal rather than state law, (2) the Railway Labor Act permitted railway employees to engage in some forms of self-help, free from state interference, (3) drawing upon labor policies evinced by the Labor Management Relations Act, such protected self-help included peaceful primary strikes and nonviolent picketing in support thereof, (4) the question of which picketing activities were federally protected under the Railway Labor Act and therefore immune from state interference, and which activities were subject to prohibition by the state, was for consideration by Congress rather than the Supreme Court, and (5) until Congress acted, picketing—whether characterized as primary or secondary—was to be deemed conduct protected against state proscription.

DOUGLAS, J., joined by BLACK and STEWART, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that (1) since Congress had not pre-empted the field of picketing a rail carrier for purposes of a secondary boycott, a state's power over secondary boycotts should be held to be paramount to a labor union's, (2) the right to self-help under the Railway Labor Act should not override state law when secondary boycotts threatened to penalize a whole community, and (3) the states should be allowed a free hand in labor controversies unless Congress has adopted a contrary policy.

OPINION OF THE COURT

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

2. This case arises out of the Nation's longest railroad labor dispute, much of the history of which is recorded in the pages of the United States and federal reports. (1) The events most pertinent to

1. See Railway Clerks v. Florida E. C. R. Co. (1966) 384 US 238=16 L Ed 2d 501=86 S Ct 1420; Railroad Trainmen v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. (1962) 362 F 2d 649, aff'd. the present litigation began on April 24, 1966, when the Florida East Coast Railway Company (FEC), having exhausted all procedures required by the Railway Labor Act (2) for the resolution of a "major dispute" (3) unilaterally changed its operating employees' rates of pay, rules, and working conditions. Petitioners, who represent FEC's operating employees, responded by calling a strike and thereafter by picketing the various locations at which FEC carried on its operations, including the premises of the respondent, Jacksonville Railroad Terminal Company (4).

3 On the complaint of respondent and two railroads other than FEC, a United States District Court issued a temporary restraining order several hours after the picketing began, and later enjoined petitioners from picketing respondent's premises except at a "reserved gate" set aside for FEC employees. The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed, holding that the Norris-La-Guardia Act, 47 Stat 70, 29 USC S 101 et seq., prevented issuance of a federal injunction. Railroad Trainmen v Atlantic C L R. Co., (1966) 362 F 2d 649. We affirmed by an equally divided Court (1966) 385 US 20=17 L Ed 2d 20=87 S Ct 226.

4 While that litigation was pending in the federal courts, respondent instituted the present action for injunctive relief in the Florida Circuit Court. Petitioners removed the action to the United States District Court, which promptly remanded to the state court. The Florida court issued a temporary injunction, substantially identical to the earlier federal order, which it made final after a full hearing. On appeal the Florida District Court of Appeals affirmed per curiam. The Supreme Court of Florida denied certiorari and dismissed an appeal. We

4 Petitioners are the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the Order of Railway Conductors and Brakemen, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers and several union officers. Petitioners contend that only the BRT and its officers were responsible for the picketing, and that the injunction was improper as to the others. Because of our disposition of the case we do not reach this question, and we treat petitioners jointly, as did the state courts.

granted certiorari, (1968) 392 US 904, 20 L Ed 2d 1362, 88 S Ct 2060 to determine the extent of state power to regulate the economic combat of parties subject to the Railway Labor Act.

5 Respondent, a Florida corporation, operates a passenger and freight rail terminal facility in Jacksonville, Florida, through which rail traffic passes to and from the Florida peninsula. The corporation is jointly owned and controlled by four railroad carriers, including FEC, which enjoy the common use of the terminal's facilities and services, and share equally in its operation (5).

6 FEC carries on substantial daily operations at the terminal, interchanging freight cars with the other railroads; it accounts for approximately 30% of all interchanges on the premises. Respondent provides various services necessary to FEC's operations, including switching, signalling, track maintenance, and repairs on FEC cars and engines. Without the work and co-operation of employees of respondent (and the other railroads) FEC could not carry on its normal activities at the terminal. In short, "despite the legal separateness of the Terminal Company's entity and operation, it cannot be disputed that the facilities and services provided by the Terminal Company in fact constitute an integral part of the day-to-day operations of the FEC..." (1966) 362 F 2d 649, 651.

7. Respondent maintains a "reserved gate" for the exclusive use of all FEC employees entering the terminal premises on foot to begin their work day. Notices to this effect are posted but compliance is not policed. FEC employees use other entrances as well, and other employees use the FEC reserved entrance. The terminal has a number of other foot, road, and rail entrances, through which pass employees of respondent and the railroads using the premises. No entrances are set aside to separate those employees of respondent and the other railroads who provide services for FEC from those who do not; nor, with one or two possible exceptions, do trains making interchanges with FEC pass through different gates from those which do not. The joint and common use of the premises and facilities would, presumably, render such separations impracticable.

5 The three other roads are the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co., the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Co., and the Southern Railway System. Effective July 1, 1967, Coast Line and Seaboard merged. See Florida E. C R Co v United States, (1966) 259 F Supp 993, affirmed, (1967) 386 US 544=18 L Ed 2d 285 = 87 S Ct 1299.

For a discussion of one aspect of this unusual joint venture agreement see Jacksonville Terminal Co v Florida E. C R Co (1966) 363 F 2d 216.

8. On May 4, 1966, petitioners began to picket almost every entrance to the terminal. The signs stated clearly that the dispute was with FEC alone, and urged "fellow railroad men" not to "cross" and not to "assist FEC." (6) The picketing was entirely peaceful. It lasted only a few hours, until it was curtailed by a federal temporary restraining order, and thereafter by a series of federal and state injunctions.

9. The Florida Circuit Court found that resumption of general picketing "would result in a virtual cessation of activities. . . of the Terminal Company," and would cause serious economic damage to the entire State. Joint App., at 183. The court held that the picketing constituted a secondary boycott illegal under state law, that it unjustifiably interfered with respondent's business relations; that it violated the State's restraint of trade laws, (1967) 16 Fla Stat Ann S. 542.01 et seq. and that it sought to force respondent to violate its duties as a carrier under the Florida Transportation Act. (7) On this basis, the court enjoined petitioners from picketing the terminal except at the FEC reserved gate, and from causing or inducing respondent's employees to cease performing their duties of employment in connection with the FEC dispute.

II.

10. We consider initially petitioners' argument that the jurisdiction of the Florida court was ousted by the primary and exclusive jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board. Cf. Building Trades Council v. Garmon, (1959) 359 US 236, 3 L Ed 2d 775, 79 S Ct 773.

6. The signs read:

"Fellow Railroad Men
Do Not Cross or Assist F. E. C.
B. of R. T.
On Legal Strike

Against F. E. C.

Please Make Common Cause With Us In Major Dispute Against F. E. C."

A union official directing the picketing testified at the state hearing that picket lines at the rail entrances would have been taken down to allow movements unconnected with F. E. C. to pass.

7. (1967) 13A Fla Stat Ann Ss. 351.12, 351.14, 351.15, 351.16, 351.17, 351.19. These are duties, in essence, to transport and transfer freight and freight cars.

11. It is not disputed that petitioners, the respondent and its employees, and the railroads (including FEC) that use the terminal as well as their employees, are subject to the Railway Labor Act. See Ss. 1 First, Fourth, 45 USC Ss. 151 First, Fourth; Interstate Commerce Act, S. 1 (3), 24 Stat 379, 49 USC S. 1 (3). The petitioner organizations "are composed predominantly and overwhelmingly of employees. . . subject to the Railway Labor Act," Joint App., at 93; all pickets were members of local lodges composed solely of such employees, and were employees of the FEC. Id., at 94. However, the organizations' national membership includes a small percentage of employees who are not subject to the Railway Labor Act, (8) and who may be subject to the Labor Management Relations Act, 61 Stat 136, as amended, 29 USC S. 141 et seq. Petitioners contend that this is sufficient to bring the present dispute arguably within the LMRA, and they assert that until the National Labor Relations Board decides otherwise, no court may assume jurisdiction over the controversy. Cf. Marine Engineers v. Interlake Steamship Co. (1962) 370 US 173, 8 L Ed 2d 418, 82 S Ct 1237. (9)

This argument proves too much. For on petitioners' theory, it is hard to conceive of any railway labor dispute that is not "arguably" subject to the NLRB's primary jurisdiction. A serious question would be presented whether the parties to such a dispute were ever obligated to pursue the Railway Labor Act's procedures, and whether the Mediation and Adjustment Boards could ever concern themselves with a dispute — until the matter had first been submitted to the NLRB for a determination that it lacked jurisdiction.

12. This was not meant to be. The LMRA came into being against the back-

8. Seven percent of the BRT, 7% of the BLF & E, and 2% of the ORC & B are "employees of employers who are not subject to the Railroad Labor Act." Joint App 93-94.

9. In Marine Engineers, a state court enjoined picketing by the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, having found that the union represented only "supervisors," who are not "employees" subject to the LMRA. LMRA S. 2 (3). We noted that decisions of the NLRB and lower courts had held the MEBA subject to the Act under some circumstances, and we reversed, holding that in any "doubtful case." (1962) 370 US, 173 at 182 = 8 L Ed 2d 418 at 425, where there existed an "arguable possibility of Labor Board jurisdiction," id., at 184, 8 L Ed 2d at 426, the matter must first be submitted to the NLRB.

ground of pre-existing comprehensive federal legislation regulating railway labor disputes. Sections 2 (2) and (3) of the LMRA, 29 USC Ss 152 (2), (3), expressly exempt from the Act's coverage employees and employers subject to the Railway Labor Act (10). And when the traditional railway labor organizations act on behalf of employees subject to the Railway Labor Act in a dispute with carriers subject to the Railway Labor Act, the organizations must be deemed, pro tanto, exempt from the Labor Management Relations Act. See LMRA S 2 (5), 29 USC S 152 (5). Marine Engineers, supra, is inapposite. For assuming, arguendo, that this is a "doubtful case," (1962) 370 US 173 at 182=8 L Ed 2d 418 at 425, we were not there concerned with a conflict between two independent and mutually exclusive federal labor schemes.

13. Whatever might be said where railway organizations act as agents for, or as joint venturers with, unions subject to the LMRA, see Electrical Workers v. NLRB, (1965) 122 US App DC 8, 350 F 2d 791, or where railway unions are engaged in a dispute on behalf of their nonrail employees, or where a rail carrier seeks a remedy against the conduct of nonrailway employees see Steelworkers v. NLRB, (1964) 376 US 492, 501 = 11 L Ed 2d 863 869=84 S Ct 899, Teamsters Union v. New York, N H & H R Co (1956) 350 US 155, 100 L Ed 166=76 S Ct 227, none of these is this case. This is a railway labor dispute, pure and simple. And although we shall make use of analogies drawn from the LMRA to determine the rights of employees subject to

[3] 10 In the debates preceding enactment of the Taft-Hartley amendments, 61 Stat 140, 29 USC S 158 (b), Senator Taft responded as follows to the criticism that it was inequitable to allow railroad employees to engage in conduct forbidden others by S 8 (b) (4) of the LMRA:

"I want to point out that railway labor has never been covered by the Wagner Act, it has always been covered by the Railway Labor Act, which provides a somewhat different procedure. We saw no reason to change that situation, because there were no abuses which had arisen in connection with the operation of the Railway Labor Act." 93 Cong Rec 6657, II Legislative History of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, at 1571. In 1959, S 8 (b) (4), was amended to expand the class of persons protected against secondary pressures. 73 Stat 542; see Steelworkers v. NLRB, 376 US 492, 500-501, 11 L Ed 2d 863, 869, 84 S Ct 899 (1964). However, the amendment did not expand the scope of "employees" or "labor organizations" whom the Act forbade to engage in such conduct.

the Railway Labor Act, see infra, Parts V-VII, the LMRA has no direct application to the present case.

III

14. The heart of the Railway Labor Act is the duty, imposed by S 2 First upon management and labor, "to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, rules and working conditions, and to settle all disputes . . . in order to avoid any interruption to commerce or to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees thereof."

15. The Act provides a detailed framework to facilitate the voluntary settlement of major disputes. A party desiring to effect a change of rates of pay, rules, or working conditions must give advance written notice. S 6. The parties must confer, S 2 Second, and if conference fails to resolve the dispute, either or both may invoke the services of the National Mediation Board, which may also proffer its services sua sponte if it finds a labor emergency to exist. S 5 First. If mediation fails, the Board must endeavor to induce the parties to submit the controversy to binding arbitration, which can take place, however, only if both consent. Ss 5 First, 7. If arbitration is rejected and the dispute threatens "substantially to interrupt interstate commerce to a degree such as to deprive any section of the country of essential transportation service, the Mediation Board shall notify the President," who may create an emergency board to investigate and report on the dispute, S 10. While the dispute is working its way through these stages, neither party may unilaterally alter the status quo. Ss 2 Seventh, 5 First, 6, 10.

16. Nowhere does the text of the Railway Labor Act specify what is to take place once these procedures have been exhausted without yielding resolution of the dispute. Implicit in the statutory scheme, however, is the ultimate right of the disputants to resort to self-help—"the inevitable alternative in a scheme which deliberately denies the final power to compel arbitration." Florida E C R Co v. Railroad Trainmen, (1964) 336 F 2d 172, 181. We have consistently so held in a long line of decisions. Railway Clerks v. Florida E C R Co, (1966) 384 US 238, 244-16 L Ed 2d 501 506=86 S Ct 1420, Locomotive Engineers v. Baltimore & O R Co (1963) 372 US 234 = 9 L Ed 2d 759=83 S Ct 691, Railroad Telegraphers v. Chicago & N. W R Co (1960) 362 US 330=4 L Ed 2d 774=80 S Ct 761, Elgin, J & E R Co v. Burley, (1945) 325 US 711, 725=89 L Ed 1886, 1895=65 S Ct 1282.

17. Both before and after enactment of the Railway Labor Act, (11) as well as during congressional debates on the Act itself, (12) proposals were advanced for replacing this final resort to economic warfare with compulsory arbitration and antistrike laws. But although Congress and the Executive have taken emergency ad hoc measures to compel the resolution of particular controversies, (13) no such general provisions have ever been enacted. And for the settlement of major disputes, "the statutory scheme relies throughout on the traditional voluntary processes of negotiation, mediation, voluntary arbitration, and conciliation. Every facility for bringing about agreement is provided and pressures for mobilizing public opinion are applied. The parties are required to submit to the successive procedures designed to induce agreement. S. 5 First (b). But the compulsions go only to insure that those procedures are exhausted before resort can be had to self-help. No authority is empowered to decide the dispute and no such power is intended, unless the parties themselves agree to arbitration." (1945) 325 US 711 at 725=89 L Ed 1886 at 1895 supra.

IV.

18. We have not previously had occasion to consider whether the Railway Labor Act circumscribes state power to regulate economic warfare between disputants subject to the Act. Read narrowly, the decisions cited above at p. 9, do no more than negate the "implication" of an independent federal remedy against self-help, (14) but do not foreclose a State

It is what is purports to be — a one-shot solution through legislative means to a situation which imperiled beyond question the economy and security of the entire Nation." S. from bringing its own sanctions to bear on such conduct. On this theory, once the Act's required processes have been exhausted, a State would be free to impose whatever restrictions it wished on the parties' use of self-help.

19. The Act is silent on this question, as is its legislative history. (15) We think it clear, however, that the exercise of plenary state authority to curtail or entirely prohibit self-help would frustrate effective implementation of the Act's processes. The disputants' positions in the course of negotiation and mediation, and their willingness to submit to binding arbitration or abide by the recommendations of a presidential commission, would be seriously affected by the knowledge that after these procedures were exhausted a State would, say, prohibit the employees from striking or prevent the railroad from taking measures necessary to continue operating in the face of a strike. Such interference would be compounded if the disputants were — as they frequently would be — subjected to various and divergent state laws, Railway (and airline) (16) labor disputes typically present problems of national magnitude. A strike in one State often paralyzes transportation in an entire section of the United States, and transportation labor disputes frequently result in simultaneous work stoppages in many States.

20. The Railway Labor Act's entire scheme for the resolution of major disputes would become meaningless if the States could prohibit the parties from engaging in any self-help. And the potentials for conflict, see (1959) 359 US 236, 249, 250 = 3 L Ed 2d 775, 785, 786 = 79 S Ct 773 (concurring opinion), and for the imposition of inconsistent state obligations, cf. Clearfield Trust Co. v. United States, (1943) 318 US 363=87 L Ed 838 =63 S Ct 573, are simply too great to allow each State which happens to gain personal jurisdiction over a party to a railroad labor dispute to decide for itself what economic self-help he may or may not pursue. The determination of the permissible range of self-help "cannot be left to the laws of the many States, for

15. What little relevant legislative history we have found, however, indicates that in opting for the voluntary settlement of railway labor disputes, Congress intended to limit state authority to impose the rejected compulsions. See 67 Cong Rec 4706-4707, 69th Cong, 1st Sess (1926).

16. Air carriers and their employees were made subject to the Railway Labor Act in 1936, 49 Stat 1189, 45 USC Ss. 181, 182.

it would be fatal to the goals of the Act" if conduct were prohibited by state laws "even though in furtherance of the federal scheme. The needs of the subject matter manifestly call for uniformity." Machinists v. Central Airlines, Inc (1963) 372 US 682, 691-692, 10 L Ed 2d 67, 74, 83 S Ct 956.

21 It follows that even though the Florida courts may have jurisdiction over this litigation, the application of state law is limited by paramount federal policies of nationwide import.

V.

22. We are presented, then, with the problem of delineating the area of labor combat protected (17) against infringement by the States. The text and legislative history of the Railway Labor Act, and the decisional law thereunder, provide little guidance. To refer to the "general" labor law, as it existed around the time the Act came into being, would be a historical Lake forays into economic due process, see Ferguson v Skrupa, (1963) 372 US 728=10 L Ed 2d 93 = 83 S Ct 1028, Williamson v Lee Optical Co (1955) 348 US 483, 488=99 L Ed 563 572 = 75 S Ct 461 this judge-made law of the late 19th and early 20th centuries was based on self-mesmerized views of economic and social theory, see F. Frankfurter and N. Green, The Labor Injunction 1-46, 199-205 (1930), A. Cox & D. Bok, Cases on Labor Law 101-105 (5th ed 1962), and on statutory misconstruction. See United States v. Hutcheson, (1941) 312 US 219=85 L Ed 788=61 S Ct 463. We need not hold that the Norris-LaGuardia Act applies directly to this case (18) to find in its enactment a clear disapproval of these free-wheeling judicial exercises. See Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co (1965) 381 US 676, 697, 700-709,

17 In the context of labor relations law, this word is fraught with ambiguity. "Protected conduct" may, for example, refer to employee conduct which the States may not prohibit, see, e. g., Weber v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc (1955) 348 US 468, 474=99 L Ed 548, 574=75 S Ct 480 or to conduct against which the employer may not retaliate. Cf., e.g., NLRB v. Truck Drivers, (1957) 353 US 87, 96=1 L Ed 2d 676, 681=77 S Ct 643. Throughout this opinion we use the word in the former sense only.

18 The question whether the Norris-LaGuardia Act bars state Courts from issuing labor injunctions was argued in a somewhat different context, but not decided, in Avco Corp v Machinists, (1968) 390 US 657=20 L Ed 2d 126=88 S Ct 1235. It is argued here, but again we find no need to reach it, 718, 14 L Ed 2d 640, 653, 655, 661, 666, 85 S Ct 1596 (separate opinion of Mr. Justice Goldberg)

23. To the extent that there exists today any relevant corpus of "national labor policy," it is in the law developed during the more than 30 years of administering our most comprehensive national labor scheme, the Labor Management Relations Act. This Act represents the only existing congressional expression as to the permissible bounds of economic combat it has, moreover, presented problems of federal-state relations analogous to those at bar. The Court has in the past referred to the LMRA for assistance in construing the Railway Labor Act, see, e.g., Steele v Louisville & N R Co (1944) 323 US 192, 200-201 =89 L Ed 173, 181, 182=65 S Ct 226, Railroad Trainmen v. Toledo, P. & W R Co (1944) 321 US 50, 61, n=18, 83 L Ed 534 541=64 S Ct 413, and we do so again here. Indeed, even if we were to revive the "common law" of labor relations, the common law has always been dynamic and adaptable to changing times, and we would today look to these legislatively based principles for guidance. Cf. Textile Workers v. Lincoln Mills, (1957) 353 US 448, 456, 457=1 L Ed 2d 972, 980=77 S Ct 912.

24. It should be emphasized from the outset however, that the Labor Management Relations Act cannot be imported wholesale into the railway labor arena. Even rough analogies must be drawn circumspectly, with due regard for the many differences between the statutory schemes (19) Cf. Railroad Trainmen v. Chicago River & I. R Co (1957) 353 US 30, 31, n 2=1 L Ed 2d 662, 624=77 S Ct 635. We refer to the LMRA's policies not in order to "apply" them to peti-

19 For example, in referring to decisions holding state laws pre-empted by the LMRA, care must be taken to distinguish pre-emption based on federal protection of the conduct in question e.g., Teamsters v. Oliver, (1959) 358 US 283=3 L Ed 2d 312=79 S Ct 297, Street Employees v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, (1951) 340 US 383 = 95 L Ed 364 = 71 S Ct 359, 22 ALR 2d 874 from that based predominantly on the primary jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board, e.g., Building Trades Council v. Garmon, (1959) 359 US 236=3 L Ed 2d 775=79 S Ct 773 al) though the two are often not easily separable. See NLRB v. Insurance Agents, (1960) 361 US 477, 493-494, n 23=4 L Ed 2d 454, 466, 467=80 S Ct 419. There is, of course, no administrative agency equivalent to the NLRB with jurisdiction over railway labor disputes.

tioner's conduct—for we conclude that this would be neither justified nor practicable—but only to determine whether it is within the general penumbra of conduct held protected under the Act or whether it is beyond the pale of any activity thought permissible.

25. In order to gain better perspective for viewing the central issue in this case — petitioners' alleged "secondary" activities—we examine first what we find to be polar examples of protected and unprotected conduct—primary strikes and picketing on the one hand, violence and intimidation on the other.

VI.

26. The Court has indicated, without reference to the Labor Management Relations Act, that employees subject to the Railway Labor Act enjoy the right to engage in primary strikes over major disputes. In (1966) 384 US 238, 244=16 L Ed 2d 501, 506=86 S Ct 1420, we held that:

"The unions, having made their demands and having exhausted all the procedures provided by Congress, were therefore warranted in striking. For the strike has been the ultimate sanction of the union, compulsory arbitration not being provided."

Similarly, in (1964) 336 F 2d 172, 181, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that "when the machinery of industrial peace fails, the policy in all national labor legislation is to let loose the full economic power of each (party). On the side of labor, it is the cherished right to strike." Whether the source of this right be found in a particular provision of the Railway Labor Act(20) or in the scheme

(15, 16) 20 Cf. S. 2 Fourth, 48 Stat 1186: "Employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing." It has been suggested that this provision is "comparable" to S. 7 of the LMRA, which grants employees the right to "self organization" and the right to engage in "concerted activities. . . ." and which, even apart from S. 13, protects the right to strike, see, e.g., Street Employees v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, (1951) 340 US 383, 389, 95 L Ed 364, 372=71 S Ct 359, 22 ALR 2d 874. S. Comm. Print, 73d Cong, 1st Sess (1935), 1 Legislative History of the National Labor Relations Act, 1935, at 1350-1351. However, S. 2 Fourth of the RLA, added in 1934, was designed primarily, if not exclusively, to prohibit coercive employer practices. See HR Rep No. 1944, 73d Cong, 2d Sess (1934), at 2; L. Lecht, Railway Labor Legislation, c. V (1955). The explicit language of S. 7 of the LMRA was probably resas a whole, it is integral to the Act. State courts may not enjoin a peaceful strike by covered railway employees, no matter how economically harmful the consequences may be. Cf. Street Employees v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, (1951) 340 US 383=95 L Ed 364=71 S Ct 359, Automobile Workers v. O'Brien, (1950) 339 US 454=94 L Ed 978=70 S Ct 781.

27. The Court has consistently held peaceful primary picketing incident to a lawful strike to be protected conduct under the Labor Management Relations Act. "Picketing has traditionally been a major weapon to implement the goals of a strike," (1964) 376 US 492, 499=11 L Ed 2d 863, 868=84 S Ct 899 and "it is implicit in the Act that the public interest is served by freedom of labor to use the weapon of picketing." Garner v. Teamsters, (1953) 346 US 485, 500=98 L Ed 228, 244=74 S Ct 161. We see no possible grounds for distinguishing picketing under the Railway Labor Act. Peaceful primary strikes and picketing incident thereto lie within the core of protected self-help under the Railway Labor Act.

28. On the other hand, the Labor Management Relations Act gives no colorable protection to violent and coercive conduct incident to a labor dispute. Electrical Workers v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, (1942) 315 US 740, 750=86 L Ed 1154, 1165=62 S Ct 820. The state interest in preventing "conduct marked by violence and imminent threats to public order" is compelling, (1959) 359 US 236, 247, 3 L Ed 2d 775, 784, 79 S Ct 773, and such conduct may be enjoined by state courts. Youngdahl v. Rainfair, (1957) 355 US 131=2 L Ed 2d 151, 78 S Ct 206; Automobile Workers v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, (1956) 351 US 266, 100 L Ed 1162, 76 S Ct 794. Cf. Automobile Workers v. Russell, (1958) 356 US 634=2 L Ed 2d 1030=78 S Ct 932, Construction Workers v. Laburnum Construction Co. (1954) 347 US 656=98 L Ed 1025=74 S Ct 833. The federal concern for protecting such conduct when engaged in by railway employees is no less tenuous. The States' interest in preventing it is no less compelling.

ponsive to the difference between the "embryo organizations in the industries covered by" the LMRA, and the already "strongly organized" railway unions. S. Comm. Print., supra, 1 Legislative History, supra, at 1329. For an indication of the economic power of railway labor organizations prior to enactment of the Railway Labor Act, see G. Eggert, Railway Labor Disputes (1967).

29. Petitioners committed no acts of violence. But their picketing, albeit peaceful, could not be characterized as purely "primary." Respondent asserts, in essence, that, because the picketing had secondary aspects, it was necessarily unprotected and therefore subject to proscription by the state court. The matter, however, is not so simply resolved.

30. No cosmic principles announce the existence of secondary conduct, condemn it as an evil, or delimit its boundaries. These tasks were first undertaken by judges, intermingling metaphysics with their notions of social and economic policy. And the common law of labor relations has created no concept more elusive than that of "secondary" conduct, it has drawn no lines more arbitrary, tenuous, and shifting than those separating "primary" from "secondary" activities. See F. Frankfurter & N. Green (1930) The Labor Injunction 43-46, 170; I. L. Teller (1940) Labor Disputes and Collective Bargaining, S 145; E. Oakes (1927) Organized Labor and Industrial Conflicts, S 407 et seq; Barnard & Graham, Labor and the Secondary Boycott, (1940) 15 Wash L Rev 137; Hellerstein, Secondary Boycotts in Labor Disputes (1938) 47 Yale LJ 341; Cf. Aaron, Labor Injunctions in the State Courts (1964) Part I, 50 Va L Rev 950, 971-977. For these reasons, as well as those stated above, supra, at—22 L Ed 2d 356 (Para 22) this body of common law offers no guidance for the problem at hand.

31. It was widely assumed that, prior to 1947, the Norris-LaGuardia Act prevented federal courts from enjoining any "secondary boycotts." See (1947) 93 Cong Rec 4198 (remarks of Senator Taft); Bakery Drivers v. Wagshal (1948) 333 US 437, 442=92 L Ed 792, 796 = 83 S Ct 630. Indeed, in an opinion written by Judge Learned Hand, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that secondary conduct was fully protected by the Wagner Act. NLRB v. Peter Cailier Kohler Swiss Chocolates Co (1942) 130 F2d 503. The 1947 Taft-Hartley amendments 61 Stat 140, and the 1959 Landrum-Griffin amendments, 73 Stat 545, explicitly narrowed the scope of protected employee conduct under the Labor Management Relations Act; Ss 8 (b) (4) and 8 (e) of the Act proscribed a variety of secondary activities. (21) But Congress enacted "no...sweeping prohibition" of secondary conduct. Carpenters v. NLRB (1958) 357 US 93, 98=2 L Ed 2d 1186, 1193=78 S Ct 1011. And despite their relative precision of language (22) the experience under these amendments amply demonstrates that—as at common law—bright lines cannot be drawn between "legitimate 'primary activity'" and banned "secondary activity".... Electrical Workers v. NLRB, (1961) 366 US 667, 673=6 L Ed 2d 592, 597=81 S Ct 1285.

32. The fuzziness of this distinction stems from the overlapping characteristics of the two opposing concepts, and from the vagueness of the concepts themselves. The protected primary strike "is aimed at applying economic pressure by halting the day-to-day operations of the struck employer." (1964) 376 US 492, 499, 11 L Ed 2d 863, 868, 84 S Ct 899 and protected primary picketing "has characteristically been aimed at all those approaching the situs whose mission is selling, delivering, or otherwise contributing to the operations which the strike is endeavoring to halt," ibid., including other employers and their employees. "The gravamen of a secondary boycott," on the other hand, "is that its sanctions bear, not upon the employer who alone is a party to the dispute, but upon some third party who has no concern in it. Its aim is to compel him to stop business with the employer in the hope that this will induce the employer to give in to his employees' demands." Electrical Workers v. NLRB, (1950) 181 F2d 34, 37, see also Woodwork Manufacturers v. NLRB, (1967) 386 US 612, 623 = 18 L Ed 2d 357, 366=87 S Ct 1250. These principles often come into conflict, and attempts to harmonize them in the context of S 8 (b) (4) of the Labor Management Relations Act have created ramified sets of rules.

33. The problem of delineating the scope of permissible picketing at a "common situs"—a place, such as respondent's terminal, where both the struck employer and "secondary" or "neutral" employers are carrying on business activities—has been among the most mooted and complex under the Act. See generally, (1961)

under unusual circumstances, the LMRA in its entirety is inapplicable to such persons. Part II, supra. It would be inappropriate to give any weight to these isolated passing remarks about one statutory scheme made in the context of amending an entirely different one.

22 Section 8 (b) (4) "does not speak generally of secondary boycotts...[but] describes and condemns specific union conduct directed to specific objectives." Carpenters v. NLRB, supra, (1958) 357 US 93 at 98=2 L Ed 2d 1186 at 1193.

[23] 21 Petitioners contend that Senator Taft's statement, during the congressional debates, that S 8 (b) (4) did not apply to persons subject to the Railway Labor Act, supra, n. 10, necessarily entails that the Railway Labor Act protects secondary conduct. But, except 366 US 667, 674-679 = 6 L Ed 2d 592, 598, 601=81 S Ct 1285, Moore v. Dry Dock Co. (1950) 92 NLRB 547; Lesnick, The Gravamen of the Secondary Boycott, (1962) 62 Col L Rev 1363; Koretz, Federal Regulation of Secondary Strikes and Boycotts—Another Chapter, (1959) 59 Col L Rev 125. It is difficult to formulate many generalizations governing common situs picketing, but it is clear that secondary employers are not necessarily protected against picketing aimed directly at their employees.

34. In (1961) 366 US 667 = 6 L Ed 2d 592 supra, for example, we noted that striking employees could picket at a gate on the struck employer's premises which was reserved exclusively for employees of the secondary employer, to induce those employees to refuse to perform work for their employer which was connected with the struck employer's normal business operations. The Court affirmed this principle in (1961) 366 US 667 = 6 L Ed 2d 592, supra, where it held that striking employees could picket to induce a neutral railroad's employees to refuse to pick up and deliver cars for the struck employer — even though the picketed gate was owned by the railroad, and the railroad's employees would have to pass by the place of picketing to pick up and deliver cars for other plants that were not struck.

35. If the common situs rules were applied to the facts of this case — considering, for example, FEC's substantial regular business activities on the terminal premises, FEC's relationships with respondent and the other railroads using the premises, (23) the mixed use in fact of the purportedly separate entrances, and the terminal's characteristics which made it impossible for the pickets to single out and address only those secondary employees engaged in work connected with FEC's ordinary operations on the premises—the state injunction might well be found to forbid petitioners from engaging in conduct protected by the Labor Management Relations Act. The fact that respondent, the other roads, or other industries in the State suffered serious economic injury as a consequence of petitioners' activities would not, of course, in itself render the picketing unlawful. (1967) 386 US 612, 627=18 L Ed 2d 357, 368=87 S Ct 1250 see NLRB v. Fruit & Vegetable Packers, (1964) 377 US 58 = 12 L Ed 2d 129=84 S Ct 1063; (1951) 340 US 383=95 L Ed 364=71 S Ct 359.

36. In short, to condemn all of the petitioners' picketing which carries any

"secondary" implications would be to paint with much too broad a brush.

VIII.

37. We have thus far concluded that although the Florida courts are not pre-empted of jurisdiction over this cause, Part II, supra, the issues therein are governed by federal law, Parts III, IV supra, that the Railway Labor Act permits railway employees to engage in some forms of self-help, free from state interference, ibid.; and, drawing upon labor policies evinced by the Labor Management Relations Act, Part V, supra, that such protected self-help includes peaceful "primary" strikes (24) and non-violent picketing in support thereof, Part VI, supra, and that it cannot categorically be said that all picketing carrying "secondary" implications is prohibited, Part VII, supra. Given these conclusions, it remains to be considered whether, under the present framework of congressional legislation, this Court should undertake precisely to mark out which of the petitioners' picketing activities at respondent's premises are federally protected, and therefore immune from state interference, and which of them are subject to prohibition by the State. We believe that such a course would be a wholly inappropriate one for us to take in the absence of a much clearer manifestation of congressional policy than is to be found in existing laws.

37.A Certainly we could not proceed to such a task under the common law of labor relations. For even on the unjustified hypothesis that all secondary conduct is necessarily wrongful, we would lack meaningful standards for separating primary from secondary activities. Nor do the terms of the Railway Labor Act offer assistance. As we have indicated, the Act is wholly inexplicit as to the scope of allowable self-help.

38. Nor can we properly dispose of this case simply by undertaking to determine to what precise extent petitioners' picketing activities would be protected or proscribed under the terms of the Labor Management Relations Act. For although, in the absence of any other viable guidelines, we have resorted to the LMRA for assistance in mapping out very general boundaries of self-help under the Railway Labor Act, there is absolutely no warrant for incorporating into that Act the panoply of detailed law developed by the National Labor Rela-

24. The right to strike finds support not only in analogy to the LMRA, but in the history of, and decisions under, the Railway Labor Act itself. Supra at (Paras 14 to 23) 22 L Ed 2d 354, 355, 357, 358.

tions Board and courts under Section 8 (b) (4). The LMRA, as we have noted exempts employees who are subject to the Railway Labor Act, supra, at —, 22 L Ed 2d 353 (Para 12) and the inapplicability of S 8 (b) to railroad employees was specifically pointed out during the congressional debates on the LMRA Supra, at n 10

39 Even if the task of adapting the LMRA's principles to railway disputes could be managed and implemented by an agency with administrative expertise, but cf NLRB v Insurance Agents, (1960) 361 US 477 497 498—4 L Ed 2d 454, 469—80 S Ct 419, Congress has invested no agency with even colorable authority to perform this function. The very complexity of the distinctions examined in Part VII, supra, if nothing else, plainly demonstrates that we lack the expertise and competence to undertake this task ourselves

40 Moreover, "from the point of view of industrial relations, our railroads are largely a thing apart. 'The railroad world is like a state within a state'" (1945) 325 US 711, 749, 751—89 L Ed 1886, 1908, 1909, — 65 S Ct 1282 (Mr Justice Frankfurter, dissenting). Thus, if Congress should now find that abuses in the nature of secondary activities have arisen in the railroad industry, see n 10 supra it might well decide—as it did when it considered the garment and construction industries, see LMRA S 8 (e)—that this field requires extraordinary treatment of some sort. Cf, e.g., Railroad Trainmen v Florida E C R Co (1966) 362 F 2d 649, 654—655. Certainly, it is for the Congress, and not the courts, to strike "the balance between the uncontrolled power of management and labor to further their respective interests" (1958) 357 US 93 100—2 L Ed 2d 1186, 1194 — 78 S Ct 1011, see (1967) 386 US 612—18 L Ed 2d 357—87 S Ct 1230, id., at 648 650, 18 L Ed 2d at 330 381 (separate memorandum). The Congress has not yet done so

41 In short, we have been furnished by Congress neither usable standards nor access to administrative expertise in a situation where both are required. In these circumstances there is no really satisfactory judicial solution to the problem at hand. However we conclude that the least unsatisfactory one is to allow parties who have unsuccessfully exhausted the Railway Labor Act's procedures for resolution of a major dispute to employ the full range of whatever peaceful economic power they can muster, so long as its use conflicts with no other obligation imposed by federal law. Hence until Congress acts, picketing —

whether characterized as primary or secondary — must be deemed conduct protected against state proscription (25) Cf Electrical Workers v NLRB (1965) 350 F 2d 791, 792-793 (dissenting opinion) (1942) 130 F 2d 503. Any other solution — apart from the rejected one of holding that no conduct is protected — would involve the courts once again in a venture for which they are institutionally unsuited

42 The judgment of the Florida District Court of Appeal is accordingly Reversed

SEPARATE OPINION

44 MR JUSTICE DOUGLAS, with whom MR JUSTICE BLACK and MR JUSTICE STEWART concur, dissenting

45 Respondent provides terminal facilities for four railroads at Jacksonville, Florida. Petitioners have a longstanding labor dispute with one of those carriers, Florida East Coast. They have established a picket line, manned by employees of FEC but established at all entrances and exits to the Terminal and not restricted to the single entrance designated (1) for use by FEC employees. The conceded purpose of the picketing was to cause respondent and the other three carriers not to interchange traffic with FEC

46 Petitioner Brotherhood however, has no labor dispute with any carriers using the Terminal except FEC. The Florida court found that the pattern of picketing being used "would result in a virtual cessation of activities not only of the Terminal Company but also of numerous industries in Duval County and Florida"

25 Our holding is, of course, limited to disputes subject to the Railway Labor Act and in no way detracts from the power of the States to regulate labor conduct not otherwise governed by paratransit federal scheme. Compare Giboney v Empire Storage & Ice Co (1949) 336 US 490—93 L Ed 834—69 S Ct 684

1 When the strike started on January 23, 1963, respondent designated a special gate for the exclusive use of FEC employees who report to work at the Terminal

The strike originally involved only non-operating employees of FEC. But in 1966 the operating unions also went on strike against FEC

47. The order entered (2) barred all picketing by FEC employees except at the designated single entrance. The trial court relied, inter alia, on the ground that "[t]he past and threatened picketing seeks to coerce plaintiff [respondent] into embargoing the FEC in violation of the Restraint of Trade Laws of this State." The laws referred to are 16 Fla Stat Ann S. 542.01 et seq. which set up a broad regulatory scheme banning "a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons" to "create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce." The District Court of Appeal, in affirming the trial court in the present case, said that it "exercised a proper authority in enjoining a violation of a valid state statute". 201 So 2d 253.

48. The question therefore is whether Florida may ban picketing(3) in support of a secondary boycott.

49. Congress could pre-empt this field of picketing any rail carrier for purposes of a secondary boycott as our rail-carriers and their labor problems are conspicuously within reach of the Commerce Clause. Congress in the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, 29 USC S. 141, et seq. did legislate on secondary boycotts.(4) Id., S. 158 (b) (4) (i) (B). But it expressly excluded from that regulatory scheme.(5) "any person subject to the Railway Labor Act," id.,

2. We were asked to review a temporary injunction issued by the trial court. See 385 US 935=17 L Ed 2d 215=87 S Ct 284. The permanent injunction, now here, was affirmed per curiam by the District Court of Appeal. 201 So 2d 253, and the Florida Supreme Court dismissed an appeal and denied certiorari.

3. The picketing was first enjoined by the Federal District Court in a proceeding brought by two carriers (other than FEC) and the Terminal Company. That judgment was reversed by the Court of Appeals which held that the requirements of the Norris-La Guardia Act, 29 USC S. 101 et seq. had not been met. (1966) 362 F 2d 649.

We affirmed the Court of Appeals by an equally divided Court. (1966) 385 US 20=17 L Ed 2d 20=87 S Ct 226.

4. See, e. g., Labor Board v. Rice Milling Co., 341 US 665=95 L Ed 1277=71 S Ct 961; Electrical Workers v. Labor Board (1961) 366 US 667=6 L Ed 2d 592=81 S Ct 1285; Steel Workers v. Labor Board (1964) 376 US 492=11 L Ed 2d 863=84 S Ct 899.

5. See S. Rep. No. 105, 80th Cong. 1st Sess. p 19; Local No. 25 v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 350 US 155, 159-160, 100 L Ed 166, 171-172, 76 S Ct 227.

S. 152 (2) and any individual employed by such person. Id., S. 152 (3).

50. We are therefore in an area where Congress has not legislated and, as I see it, the case is controlled by Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 US 490 =93 L Ed 834=69 S Ct 684.

51. In Giboney, Missouri applied its anti-trade-restraint law to enjoin a union from picketing employers to enforce a secondary boycott. We stated that the basic issue was "whether Missouri or a labor union has paramount constitutional power to regulate and govern the manner in which certain trade practices shall be carried on" in Missouri. 336 US, 490 at 504=93 L Ed 834 at 844. A State's power over secondary boycotts was held to be paramount; and that is what we should hold today, since Congress has not pre-empted the subject.

52. It is suggested that there is an hiatus which this Court should fill. To do so, we would have to fill out large gaps between the Railway Labor Act, 45 USC S. 151 and many other specialized Acts of Congress that touch on pieces of the problems of labor in the railroad field. Once the remedies provided in the Railway Labor Act, 45 USC S. 149 et seq., are exhausted, federal administrative remedies are at an end. No authority is empowered to settle the dispute; no compulsory arbitration is provided. The conditions of work may be as bad as the employees suffer them to be and made as good as they can agree upon through bargaining. "When the various procedures established by the Act are exhausted, both parties. . . are relegated to self-help in adjusting" the dispute. (1963) 372 US 284, 291=9 L Ed 2d 759, 764=83 S Ct 691.

53. Legislating interstitially is one thing; judicial insertion into our federal railway labor law of rules governing secondary boycotts is formulation of national policy in the raw. Whether it should be done and if so, how, are matters for the Senate and the House.

54. The effort of the Court to find support for this secondary boycott in federal law is a masterful endeavor. The opinion is indeed a brilliant brief for a federal law to support the struggle of the Trainmen to end the ugly struggle. The difficulty is that no matter how carefully federal law is examined no express sanction for what the Trainmen can do can be found. Federal authority for what they do rests on the thinnest of inferences and yet that inference is brought under the Supremacy Clause.

55. Article VI of the Constitution states that "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof shall be the Supreme Law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby "But one looks in vain for any federal "law" that collides with state law or that can be said to preempt state law Federal law says that when the parties exhaust their remedies under the Railway Labor Act they may resort to "self-help" — not a congressional phrase but a judicial gloss put on the Act, (1945) 325 US 711, 725=89 L Ed 1886 1895=65 S Ct 1282 But it is strong medicine to say that their right to "self-help" overrides state law Certainly it does not when violence is used to injure people and destroy property Allen Bradley Local v Board, 315 US 740, 86 L Ed 1154, 62 S Ct 820 For then the States have an arsenal of authority to deal with the situation Why is that power greater than the power to protect the economy of the area? We have a finding that if the conduct which the Court authorizes continues there will be serious injury to "numerous industries in Duval County" — industries that have no responsibility for the labor dispute

56 The question, says the Court, is whether "the States could prohibit the parties from engaging in any self-help" If that is true then the Act's scheme would be impaired But that is not the issue It is whether the State can prevent a secondary boycott which threatens to paralyze a whole community If a State cannot fill that hiatus in a federal scheme then much law will have to be unlearned

57 States' rights are often used as a cloak to cover unconstitutional encroachments such as the maintenance of second class citizenship for Negroes or Americans of Mexican ancestry But a state policy to confine an industrial dispute to the parties and, if possible, not to let it paralyze the entire community cannot be put in that category

58 Congress in adopting a federal regulation can make it exclusive of all state regulation in which event one may not be required "by a State to do more or additional things or conform to added regulations even though they in no way conflicted with what was demanded of him under the Federal Act" Rice v Sante Fe Elevator Corp 331 US 218 236 =91 L Ed 1447, 1462=67 S Ct 1146 And see Campbell v Hussey, 368 US 297, 300-301=7 L Ed 2d 299 301-302=82 S Ct 327 But that principle although uniformly recognized has provoked much dissent in its application as the dissents in the Rice and Campbell cases illustrate

59 As Mr Justice Brandeis said in Napier v Atlantic Coast Line 272 US

605, 611=71 L Ed 432, 438=47 S Ct 207, "The intention of Congress to exclude States from exerting their police power must be clearly manifested" And the Court mindful of the force of the Tenth Amendment and the place of the States in our constitutional system, has resolved close cases in favour of a continuing power on the part of the States to legislate in their customary fields and thus has permitted state regulations to mesh with federal controls See Federal Compress v McLean, 291 US 17, 78 L Ed 622 54 S Ct 267 Townsend v Yeoman, 301 US 441 454 81 L Ed 1210, 1220 57 S Ct 842 Penn Davies v Milk Control Commission 318 US 261=87 L Ed 748 =63 S Ct 617

60 Even here there have been dissents when it came to particular applications of the principle to the facts of a case But I venture that in no case prior to today's decision has a State been barred from legislating in a field which is not specifically touched by the federal regulation and which remains after the federal remedies have spent themselves and proved to be of no avail

61 The States should be allowed a free hand in labor controversies except and unless Congress has adopted a contrary policy We search in vain for any such federal law in this context

62 I would affirm the judgment terest in dealing with such matter, extent of—Right to receive information and ideas is fundamental to free society — (Constitution of United States of America, First Amendment and Fourteenth Amendment.)

The First and the Fourteenth Amendments prohibit making mere private possession of obscene material a crime.

(Para 2)

Where a state obscenity statute, imposes criminal sanctions upon the mere private possession of obscene matter, the statute is to that extent unconstitutional as violating the First Amendment as made applicable to the States, by the Fourteenth Amendment.

(Para 2)

But these Amendments recognise a valid governmental interest in dealing with the problem of obscenity. But assertion of such an interest cannot in every context be insulated from all constitutional protection. This cannot foreclose an examination of the constitutional implication of a statute forbidding mere private possession of such material.

(Para 5)

Ceaseless vigilance is the watchword to prevent erosion of the First Amendment rights by Congress or by the States. The door barring Federal and State intrusion into this area cannot be left ajar. It must be kept tightly closed and opened only the slightest crack necessary to prevent encroachment upon more important interests. (1957) 354 US 476=1 L Ed 2d 1498 = 77 S Ct 1304 Ref.

(Para 5)

The United States Constitution protects the right to receive information and ideas. The freedom (of speech and press) necessarily protects this right, regardless of their social worth. This right is fundamental to American free society.

(Para 6)

Moreover, in the context of a prosecution for mere possession of printed or filmed matter in the privacy of a person's own home, that right takes on an thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

Amendment 14.—Section 1.—"All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws".

added dimension. For also fundamental is the right to be free, except in very limited circumstances, from unwanted governmental intrusions into one's privacy. Mere categorization of these films as "obscene" is insufficient justification for such a drastic invasion of personal liberties guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. If the First Amendment means anything, it means that a State has no business telling a man, sitting alone in his own house, what books he may read or what films he may watch. The whole constitutional heritage of Americans rebels at the thought of giving government the power to control men's minds.

(Paras 6, 7)

It is irrelevant that obscenity in general, or the particular films before the Court, are arguably devoid of any ideological content. The line between the transmission of ideas and mere entertainment is much too elusive for the Court to draw, if indeed such a line can be drawn at all.

(Para 8)

Under the First Amendment, the State may no more prohibit mere possession of obscenity on the ground that it may lead to anti-social conduct than it may prohibit possession of chemistry books on the ground that they may lead to the manufacture of homemade spirits.

(Para 9)

The difficulties of proving an intent to distribute obscene matter or in producing evidence of actual distribution under statutory schemes prohibiting the distribution of obscene matter, which difficulties might exist if a statutory prohibition of mere possession of obscene matter is not upheld, do not justify infringement of the individual's right to read or observe what he pleases. Because that right is so fundamental to the American scheme of individual liberty, its restriction may not be justified by the need to ease the administration of otherwise valid criminal laws.

(Para 11)

The States retain broad power to regulate obscenity; that power simply does not extend to mere possession by the individual in the privacy of his own home.

SUMMARY

The defendant was tried and convicted in the Superior Court of Fulton County, Georgia, of knowingly having possession of obscene matter in violation of a Georgia statute. The obscene matter in question consisted of films which a state officer seized after federal and state agents had found them in a desk drawer in a bedroom of the defendant's home as they searched it pursuant to a search warrant issued following an investigation of the defendant's alleged book making activities. The Supreme Court of Georgia affirmed the conviction (224 Ga 259, 161 SE 2d 309).

On appeal the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Marshall, J., expressing the view of six members of the court, it was held that the Georgia statute, insofar as it made mere private possession of obscene matter a crime, was unconstitutional under the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

BLACK, J., concurred, saying that he agreed with the court that the mere possession of reading matter or movie films, whether labeled obscene or not, cannot be made a crime by a state without violating the First Amendment, made applicable to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment.

STEWART, J., joined by Brennan and White, JJ., concurred in the result, but would reverse the conviction on the ground, disregarded by the court, that the films were seized in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments, and hence were inadmissible in evidence at the defendant's trial.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the Court.

An investigation of appellant's alleged bookmaking activities led to the issuance of a search warrant for appellant's home. Under authority of this warrant, federal and state agents secured entrance. They found very little evidence of bookmaking activity, but while looking through a desk drawer in an upstairs bedroom one of the federal agents accompanied by a state officer, found three reels of eight-millimeter film. Using a projector and screen found in an upstairs living room, they viewed the films. The state officer concluded that they were obscene and seized them. Since a further examination of the bedroom indicated that appellant occupied it, he was charged with possession of obscene matter and placed under arrest. He was later indicted for "knowingly hav[ing] possession of obscene matter" in violation of Georgia law (1) Appellant was tried before a jury and convicted. The Supreme Court of Georgia affirmed. Stanley v. State, (1963) 224 Ga 259, 161 SE 2d 309. We noted probable jurisdiction of an appeal brought under 28 USC S 1257 (2) (1968) 393 US 819=21 L Ed 2d 90=89 S Ct 124.

1 "Any person who shall knowingly bring or cause to be brought into this State for sale or exhibition, or who shall knowingly sell or offer to sell, or who shall knowingly lend or give away or offer to lend or give away, or who shall knowingly have possession of or who shall knowingly exhibit or transmit to another, any obscene matter, or who shall knowingly advertise for sale by any form of notice printed, written, or verbal, any obscene matter, or who shall knowingly manufacture, draw, duplicate or print any obscene matter with intent to sell

2. Appellant raises several challenges to the validity of his conviction. (2) We find it necessary to consider only one. Appellant argues here, and argued below, that the Georgia obscenity statute, insofar as it punishes mere private possession of obscene matter, violates the First Amendment, as made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment. For reasons set forth below, we agree that the mere private possession of obscene matter cannot constitutionally be made a crime.

3. The court below saw no valid constitutional objection to the Georgia statute, even though it extends further than the typical statute forbidding commercial sales of obscene material. It held that "[i]t is not essential to an indictment charging one with possession of obscene matter that it be alleged that such possession was 'with intent to sell, expose or circulate the same.'" (1968) 224 Ga. 259 at 261=161 SE 2d, 309 at 311 supra. The State and appellant both agree that the question here before us is whether "a statute imposing criminal sanctions upon the mere [knowing] possession of obscene matter" is constitutional. In this context, Georgia concedes that the present case appears to be one of "first impression. . . on this exact point." (3) but contends that since "obscenity is not expose or circulate the same, shall, if such person has knowledge or reasonably should know of the obscene nature of such matter, be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary for not less than one year nor more than five years; Provided, however, in the event the jury so recommends, such person may be punished as for a misdemeanor. As used herein, a matter is obscene if, considered as a whole, applying contemporary community standards, its predominant appeal is to prurient interest, i. e., a shameful or morbid interest in nudity, sex or excretion." Ga Code Ann S. 26-6301. (Supp 1968).

2. Appellant does not argue that the films are not obscene. For the purpose of this opinion, we assume that they are obscene under any of the tests advanced by members of this Court. See Redrup v. New York, (1967) 386 US 767=18 L Ed 2d 515=87 S Ct 1414.

3. The issue was before the Court in Mapp v. Ohio, (1961) 367 US 643=6 L Ed 2d 1081=81 S Ct 1684=84 ALR 2d 933, but that case was decided on other grounds. Mr. Justice Stewart, although disagreeing with the majority opinion in Mapp, would have reversed the judgment in that case on the ground that the Ohio statute proscribing mere possession of within the area of constitutionally protected speech or press," Roth v. United States, (1957) 354 US 476, 485=1 L Ed 2d 1498, 1507=77 S Ct 1304 the States are free, subject to the limits of other provisions of the Constitution, see, e.g., Ginsberg v. New York, (1968) 390 US 629, 637-645=20 L Ed 2d 195, 202-207=88 S Ct 1274 to deal with it any way deemed necessary, just as they may deal with possession of other things thought to be detrimental to the welfare of their citizens. If the State can protect the body of a citizen, may it not, argues Georgia, protect his mind?

4. It is true that Roth does declare, seemingly without qualification, that obscenity is not protected by the First Amendment. That statement has been repeated in various forms in subsequent cases. See, e.g., Smith v. California, (1959) 361 US 147, 152=4 L Ed 2d 205, 210=80 S Ct 215; Jacobellis v. Ohio, (1964) 378 US 184, 186-187=12 L Ed 2d 793, 796, 797=84 S Ct 1676 (opinion of Brennan, J.); supra, (1968) 390 US 629 at 635=20 L Ed 2d 195 at 201. However, neither Roth nor any subsequent decision of this Court dealt with the precise problem involved in the present case. Roth was convicted of mailing obscene circulars and advertising, and an obscene book, in violation of a federal obscenity statute. (4) The defendant in a companion case, (1957) 354 US 476=1 L Ed 2d 1498=77 S Ct 1304, was convicted of "lewdly keeping for sale obscene and indecent books, and [of] writing, composing and publishing an obscene advertisement of them. . . ." (1968) 354 US 476 at 481=1 L Ed 2d 1498 at 1505. None of the statements cited by the Court in Roth for the proposition that "this Court has always assumed that obscenity is not protected by the freedoms of speech and press" were made in the context of a statute punishing mere private possession of obscene material; the cases cited deal for the most part with use of the mails to distribute objectionable material or with some form of public distribution or dissemination. (5) Moreover, none of this obscene material was "not 'consistent with the rights of free thought and expression assured against state action by the Fourteenth Amendment'" (1961) 367 US, 643 at 672=6 L Ed 2d 1081 at 1108=84 ALR 2d 933.

Court's decisions subsequent to Roth involved prosecution for private possession of obscene materials. Those cases dealt with the power of the State and Federal Governments to prohibit or regulate certain public actions taken or intended to be taken with respect to obscene matter (6). Indeed with one exception we have been unable to discover any case in

497, 508=48 L Ed 1092, 1093=24 S Ct 789 (use of the mails), Hoke v United States, (1913) 227 US 308, 322=57 L Ed 523, 527=33 S Ct 281=43 LRA NS 906 (use of interstate facilities), Near v Minnesota, (1931) 283 US 697, 716=75 L Ed 1357, 1367=51 S Ct 625, (publication), Chaplinsky v New Hampshire, (1942) 315 US 568, 571-572=86 L Ed 1031, 1034, 1035=62 S Ct 766 (utterances), Hannegan v Esquire, Inc (1946) 327 US 1.3, 158=90 L Ed 588, 593=66 S Ct 456 (use of the mails), Winters v New York (1948) 333 US 507, 510=92 L Ed 840, 847=68 S Ct 665 (possession with intent to sell), Beauharnais v Illinois, (1952) 343 US 250, 266=96 L Ed 919 932=72 S Ct 725 (libel)

8 Many of the cases involved prosecutions for sale or distribution of obscene materials or possession with intent to sell or distribute. See Redrup v New York, (1967) 388 US 767=18 L Ed 2d 515=87 S Ct 1414, Mishkin v New York (1966), 383 US 502=18 L Ed 2d 56=88 S Ct 958 Ginzburg v United States (1968) 383 US 463=16 L Ed 2d 31=86 S Ct 942 Jacobellis v Ohio (1964) 378 US 184=12 L Ed 2d 793=84 S Ct 1676, Smith v California, (1959) 361 US 147=4 L Ed 2d 205, 80 S Ct 215. Our most recent decision involved a prosecution for sale of obscene material to children Ginsberg v New York, (1968) 390 US 629=20 L Ed 2d 195=88 S Ct 1274; cf Interstate Circuit, Inc v City of Dallas, (1966) 390 US 676=20 L Ed 2d 225=83 S Ct 1290. Other cases involved federal or state statutory procedures for preventing the distribution or mailing of obscene material, or procedures for predistribution approval. See Freedman v Maryland, (1965) 380 US 51=13 L Ed 2d 649=85 S Ct 734, Bantam Books, Inc v Sullivan, (1963) 372 US 58=9 L Ed 2d 584=83 S Ct 631 Manual Enterprises, Inc v Day, (1962) 370 US 478=8 L Ed 2d 639=82 S Ct 1432, Kingsley Books Inc v Brown, (1957) 354 US 436=1 L Ed 2d 1469=77 S Ct 1325. Still another case dealt with an attempt to seize obscene material "kept for the purpose of being sold published, exhibited or otherwise distributed or circulated." Marcus v Search Warrant, (1961) 367 US 717, 719=6 L Ed 2d 1127, 1129=81 S Ct 1708 see also A Quantity of Books v Kansas (1964) 378 US 205=12 L Ed 2d 809=84 S Ct 1723 Memoirs v Massachusetts (1966) 383 US 413=16 which the issue in the present case has been fully considered (7)

5 In this context, we do not believe that this case can be decided simply by citing Roth. Roth and its progeny certainly do mean that the First and Fourteenth Amendments recognize a valid governmental interest in dealing with the problem of obscenity. But the assertion of that interest cannot, in every context, be insulated from all constitutional protections. Neither Roth nor any other decision of this Court reaches that far. As the Court said in Roth itself, "[c]easeless vigilance is the watchword to

L Ed 2d 1=86 S Ct 975 was a proceeding in equity against a book. However, possession of a book determined to be obscene in such a proceeding was made criminal only when "for the purpose of sale, loan or distribution." (1966) 383 US, 413 at 422=18 L Ed 2d 1 at 7

7 The Supreme Court of Ohio considered the issue in State v Mapp, (1960) 170 Ohio St 427=166 NE 2d 387. Four of the seven judges of that court felt that criminal prosecution for mere private possession of obscene materials was prohibited by the constitution. However, Ohio law required the concurrence of "all but one of the judges" to declare a state law unconstitutional. The view of the "dissenting" judges was expressed by Judge Herbert

"I cannot agree that mere private possession of [obscene] literature by an adult should constitute a crime. The right of the individual to read, to believe or disbelieve, and to think without governmental supervision is one of our basic liberties, but to dictate to the mature adult what books he may have in his own private library seems to the writer to be a clear infringement of his rights as an individual." (1960) 170 Ohio St 427 at 437=166 NE 2d, 387 at 393

Shortly thereafter, the Supreme Court of Ohio interpreted the Ohio statute to require proof of "possession and control for the purpose of circulation or exhibition." State v Jacobellis, (1962) 173 Ohio St 22, 27-28=179 NE 2d 777, 781, rev'd on other grounds, (1964) 378 US 184=12 L Ed 2d 793=84 S Ct 1676. The interpretation was designed to avoid the constitutional problem posed by the "dissenters" in Mapp. See State v Ross, (1967) 12 Ohio St 2d 37=231 NE 2d 299

Other cases dealing with non public distribution of obscenity or with legitimate uses of obscenity have expressed similar reluctance to make such activity criminal, albeit largely on statutory grounds. In United States v Chase, (1890) 135 US 255=34 L Ed 117=10 S Ct 756, the Court

Amendment rights] by Congress or by the States. The door barring federal and state intrusion into this area cannot be left ajar; it must be kept tightly closed and opened only the slightest crack necessary to prevent encroachment upon more important interests." (1957) 354 US, 476 at 488, = 1 L Ed 2d 1498 at 1509. Roth and the cases following it discerned such an "important interest" in the regulation of commercial distribution of obscene material. That holding cannot foreclose an examination of the constitutional implications of a statute forbidding mere private possession of such material.

6. It is now well established that the Constitution protects the right to receive information and ideas. "This freedom [of speech and press] . . . necessarily protects the right to receive. . . ." Martin v. City of Struthers, (1943) 319 US 141, 143=87 L Ed 1313, 1316=63 S Ct held that federal law did not make criminal the mailing of a private sealed obscene letter on the ground that the law's purpose was to purge the mails of obscene matter "as far as was consistent with the rights reserved to the people, and with a due regard to the security of private correspondence. . . ." (1890) 135 US, 255 at 261=34 L Ed 117 at 120. The law was later amended to include letters and was sustained in that form. Andrews v. United States, (1896) 162 US 420 = 40 L Ed 1023=16 S Ct 798. In United States v. 31 Photographs, 156 F Supp 350 (DC SD NY 1957), the court denied an attempt by the Government to confiscate certain materials sought to be imported into the United States by the Institute for Sex Research, Inc., at Indiana University. The court found, applying the Roth formulation, that the materials would not appeal to the "prurient interest" of those seeking to import and utilize the materials. Thus, the statute permitting seizure of "obscene" materials was not applicable. The court found it unnecessary to reach the constitutional questions presented by the claimant, but did note its belief that "the statement. . . [in Roth] concerning the rejection of obscenity must be interpreted in the light of the widespread distribution of the material in Roth." 156 F Supp, 350 at 360, n40. See also Redmond v. United States, (1966) 384 US 264, 16 L Ed 2d 521, 86 S Ct 1415 where this Court granted the Solicitor-General's motion to vacate and remand with instructions to dismiss an information charging a violation of a federal obscenity statute in a case where a husband and wife mailed undeveloped films of each other posing in the nude to an out-of-state firm for developing. But see Ackerman v. United States, 293 F 2d 449 (CA 9th Cir 1961).

Postmaster General*, (1965) 381 US 301, 307-308=14 L Ed 2d 398, 402, 403=85 S Ct 1493 (Brennan, J., concurring); cf. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, (1925) 268 US 510=69 L Ed 1070 =45 S Ct 571. This right to receive information and ideas, regardless of their social worth, see Winters v. New York, (1948) 333 US 507, 510=92 L Ed 840, 847=68 S Ct 665, is fundamental to our free society. Moreover, in the context of this case—a prosecution for mere possession of printed or filmed matter in the privacy of a person's own home—that right takes on an added dimension. For also fundamental is the right to be free, except in very limited circumstances, from unwanted governmental intrusions into one's privacy.

"The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure conditions favorable to the pursuit of happiness. They recognized the significance of man's spiritual nature, of his feelings and of his intellect. They knew that only a part of the pain, pleasure and satisfactions of life are to be found in material things. They sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their thoughts, their emotions and their sensations. They conferred, as against the Government, the right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized man." Olmstead v. United States, (1928) 277 US 438, 478=72 L Ed 944, 956=48 S Ct 564, (Brandeis, J., dissenting). See (1965) 381 US 479=14 L Ed 2d 510 supra; cf. NAACP v. Alabama, (1958) 357 US 449, 462=2 L Ed 2d 1488, 1499=78 S Ct 1163.

7. These are the rights that appellant is asserting in the case before us. He is asserting the right to read or observe what he pleases—the right to satisfy his intellectual and emotional needs in the privacy of his own home. He is asserting the right to be free from state inquiry into the contents of his library. Georgia contends that appellant does not have these rights, that there are certain types of materials that the individual may not read or even possess. Georgia justifies this assertion by arguing that the films in the present case are obscene. But we think that mere categorization of these films as "obscene" is insufficient justification for such a drastic invasion of personal liberties guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. Whatever may be the justifications for other statutes regulating obscenity, we do not think they reach into the privacy of one's own home. If the First Amendment means anything, it means that a State has no business telling a man, sitting alone in his own house, what books he may read or what films he may watch. Our whole constitutional heritage rebels at the thought of giving government the power to control men's minds.

8 And yet, in the face of these traditional notions of individual liberty, Georgia asserts the right to protect the individual's mind from the effects of obscenity. We are not certain that this argument amounts to anything more than the assertion that the State has the right to control the moral content of a person's thoughts (8). To some, this may be a noble purpose, but it is wholly inconsistent with the philosophy of the First Amendment. As the Court said in Kingsey International Pictures Corp. v. Regents, (1959) 360 US 684, 688-689: "3 L Ed 2d 1512, 1516-79 S Ct 1362 '[t]his argument misconceives what it is that the Constitution protects. Its guarantee is not confined to the expression of ideas that are conventional or shared by a majority. And in the realm of ideas it protects expression which is eloquent no less than that which is unconvincing.' Cf. Joseph Burstyn, Inc. v. Wilson (1952) 343 US 495-96 L Ed 1098-72 S Ct 777. Nor is it relevant that obscenity in general, or the particular films before the Court are arguably devoid of any ideological content. The line between the transmission of ideas and mere entertainment is much too elusive for this Court to draw, if indeed such a line can be drawn at all. See (1948) 333 US 507 at 510-92 L Ed 840 at 847, supra. What ever the power of the state to control public dissemination of ideas inimical to the public morality, it cannot constitutionally premise legislation on the desirability of controlling a person's private thoughts."

9 Perhaps recognizing this, Georgia asserts that exposure to obscenity may lead to deviant sexual behavior or crimes of sexual violence. There appears to be little empirical basis for that assertion (9). But more importantly, if the

8 Communities believe and act on the belief, that obscenity is immoral, is wrong for the individual and has no place in a decent society. They believe, too, that adults as well as children are corruptible in morals and character, and that obscenity is a source of corruption that should be eliminated. Obscenity is not suppressed primarily for the protection of others. Much of it is suppressed for the purity of the community and for the salvation and welfare of the 'consumer.' Obscenity at bottom is not crime. Obscenity is sin." Henken, Morals and the Constitution: The Sin of Obscenity, (1963) 63 Col L Rev 391, 395.

9 See, e.g., Cairns, Paul & Wishner, Sex Censorship: The Assumptions of Anti Obscenity Laws and the Empirical Evi-

State is only concerned about literature inducing anti-social conduct, we believe that in the context of private consumption of ideas and information we should adhere to the view that "[a]mong free men, the deterrents ordinarily to be applied to prevent crime are education and punishment for violations of the law."

"Whitney v. California (1927) 274 US 357, 378 71 L Ed 1095, 1107, 47 S Ct 641 (Brandeis, J., concurring). See Emerson, Toward a General Theory of the First Amendment, (1963) 72 Yale LJ 877-938. Given the present state of knowledge the State may no more prohibit mere possession of obscenity on the ground that it may lead to anti-social conduct than it may prohibit possession of chemistry books on the ground that they may lead to the manufacture of homemade spirits."

10 It is true that in Roth this Court rejected the necessity of proving that exposure to obscene material would create a clear and present danger of anti-social conduct or would probably induce its recipients to such conduct. (1957) 354 US, 176 at 486-487-1 L Ed 2d 1498 at 1507, 1508. But that case dealt with public distribution of obscene materials and such distribution is subject to different objections. For example, there is always the danger that obscene material might fall into the hands of children see Ginsberg v. New York, supra, or that it might intrude upon the sensibilities or privacy of the general public (10). See Redrup v. New York (1967) 386 US 767, 769, 18 L Ed 2d 515, 517, 87 S Ct 1414. No such dangers are present in this case.

11 Finally, we are faced with the argument that prohibition of possession of obscenity is a necessary incident to statutory schemes prohibiting distribution. That argument is based on alleged difficulties of proving an intent to distribute or in producing evidence of actual distribution. We are not convinced that dence (1962) 46 Minn L Rev 1009 see also Jahoda, The Impact of Literature: A Psychological Discussion of Some Assumptions in the Censorship Debate (1954), summarized in the concurring opinion of Judge Frank in United States v. Roth, 237 F 2d 795, 814-816 (CA 2d Cir 1956).

10 The Model Penal Code provision dealing with obscenity are limited to case of commercial dissemination. Model Penal Code S 251.4 (Prop Official Draft 1962) see also Model Penal Code S 207.10 and comment 4 (Tent Draft No 6, 1957) H. Packer, The Limits of the Criminal Sanction 316-328 (1968). such difficulties exist, but even if they did we do not think that they would justify infringement of the individual's right to read or observe what he pleases. Because that right is so fundamental to our scheme of individual liberty, its restriction may not be justified by the need to ease the administration of otherwise valid criminal laws. See Smith v. California, supra.

12. We hold that the First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit making mere private possession of obscene material a crime. (11) Roth and the cases following that decision are not impaired by today's holding. As we have said, the States retain broad power to regulate obscenity; that power simply does not extend to mere possession by the individual in the privacy of his own home. Accordingly, the judgment of the court below is reversed and the case is remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

13. It is so ordered.

SEPARATE OPINIONS

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, concurring.

14. I agree with the Court that the mere possession of reading matter or movie films, whether labeled obscene or not, cannot be made a crime by a State without violating the First Amendment, made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth. My reasons for this belief have been set out in many of my prior opinions, as for example, (1959) 361 US 147, 155=4 L Ed 2d 205, 212=80 S Ct 215 (concurring opinion), and Ginzburg v. New York, (1966) 383 US 463, 476=16 L Ed 2d 31, 41=86 S Ct 932 (dissenting opinion).

11. What we have said in no way infringes upon the power of the State or Federal Government to make possession of other items, such as narcotics, firearms, or stolen goods, a crime. Our holding in the present case turns upon the Georgia statute's infringement of fundamental liberties protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. No First Amendment rights are involved in most statutes making mere possession criminal.

Nor do we mean to express any opinion on statutes making criminal possession of other types of printed, filmed, or recorded materials. See, e.g., 18 USC S. 793 (d), which makes criminal the otherwise lawful possession of materials which "the possessor has reason to believe could be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of any foreign nation. . . ." In such cases, compelling reasons may exist for overriding the right of the individual to possess those materials.

16. Before the commencement of the trial in this case, the appellant filed a motion to suppress the films as evidence upon the ground that they had been seized in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments. The motion was denied, and the films were admitted in evidence at the trial. In affirming the appellant's conviction, the Georgia Supreme Court specifically determined that the films had been lawfully seized. The appellant correctly contends that this determination was clearly wrong under established principles of constitutional law. But the Court today disregards this preliminary issue in its hurry to move on to newer constitutional frontiers. I cannot so readily overlook the serious inroads upon Fourth Amendment guarantees countenanced in this case by the Georgia courts.

17. The Fourth Amendment provides that "no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." The purpose of these clear and precise words was to guarantee to the people of this Nation that they should forever be secure from the general searches and unrestrained seizures that had been a hated hallmark of colonial rule under the notorious writs of assistance of the British Crown. See Stanford v. Texas, (1965) 379 US 476, 481=13 L Ed 2d 431, 434=85 S Ct 506. This most basic of Fourth Amendment guarantees was frustrated in the present case, I think, in a manner made the more pernicious by its very subtlety. For what happened here was that a search that began as perfectly lawful became the occasion for an unwarranted and unconstitutional seizure of the films.

18. The state and federal officers gained admission to the appellant's house under the authority of a search warrant issued by a United States Commissioner. The warrant described "the place to be searched" with particularity. (1) With like particularity, it described "the things to be seized" — equipment, records, and other material used in or derived from an illegal wagering business. (2) And

1. "[T]he premises known as 280 Spring-side Drive, S. E., two-story residence with an annex on the main floor constructed of brick and frame, in Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia, in the Northern District of Georgia. . . ."

2. [B]ookmaking records, wagering paraphernalia consisting of bet slips, account sheets, recap sheets, collection sheets, the warrant was issued only after the Commissioner had been apprised of more than adequate probable cause to issue it (3)

19 There can be no doubt, therefore, that the agents were lawfully present in the appellant's house lawfully authorized to search for any and all of the items specified in the warrant and lawfully empowered to seize any such items they might find (4) It follows therefore, that the agents were acting within the authority of the warrant when they proceeded to the appellant's upstairs bedroom and pulled open the drawers of his desk But when they found in one of those drawers not gambling material but moving picture films, the warrant gave them no authority to seize the films

20 The controlling constitutional principle was stated in two sentences by this Court more than 40 years ago

"The requirement that warrants shall particularly describe the things to be seized makes general searches under them impossible and prevents the seizure of one thing under a warrant describing another As to what is to be taken nothing is left to the discretion of the officer executing the warrant" Marron v United States, (1927) 275 US 192, 196 = 72 L Ed 231, 237 = 48 S Ct 74

This is not a case where agents in the course of a lawful search came upon contraband, criminal activity, or criminal evidence (5) in plain view For the record makes clear that the contents of the films adding machines money used in or derived from the wagering business, records of purchases, records of real estate and bank transactions, the money for which was derived from the wagering business, and any other property used in the wagering business, which are being used and/or have been used in the operation of a bookmaking business or represent the fruits of a bookmaking business being operated in violation of Sections 4411, 4412 and 7203 IRC of 1954"

3 Before the Commissioner were no less than four lengthy and detailed affidavits, setting out the grounds for the affiants' reasonable belief that the appellant was engaged in an illegal gambling enterprise, and that the paraphernalia of his trade were concealed in his house

4 The fact that almost no gambling material was actually found has no bearing, of course, upon the validity of the search The constitutionality of a search depends in no measure upon what it brings to light Byars v United States, 273 US 28, 29 = 71 L Ed 520, 522 = 47 S Ct 248

could not be determined by mere inspection And this is not a case that presents any questions as to the permissible scope of a search made incident to a lawful arrest For the appellant had not been arrested when the agents found the films After finding them, the agents spent some 50 minutes exhibiting them by means of the appellant's projector in another upstairs room Only then did the agents return downstairs and arrest the appellant

21 Even in the much criticized case of United States v Rabinowitz (1950) 339 US 56 = 94 L Ed 653 = 70 S Ct 430, the Court emphasized that "exploratory searches cannot be undertaken by officers, with or without a warrant" Id., at 62, 94 L Ed at 658 This record presents a bald violation of that basic constitutional rule To condone what happened here is to invite a government official to use a seemingly precise and legal warrant only as a ticket to get into a man's home, and once inside, to launch forth upon unconfined searches and indiscriminate seizures as if armed with all the unbridled and illegal power of a general warrant

22 Because the films were seized in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments, they were inadmissible in evidence at the appellant's trial Mapp v Ohio, (1961) 367 US 643 = 6 L Ed 2d 1081 = 81 S Ct 1684 Accordingly the judgment of conviction must be reversed

Under a State statute which levied a license tax on transient or travelling photographer of $ 5 for each week of operation in a locality within the State, the State assessed its licence tax against a non-resident photography firm, which had no office, place of business or inventory in the State, but which pursuant to a contract with a department store chain had sent non-resident photographers to stores within the State, to take photographs of children. The exposed films were developed, printed and finished outside the State. Then they were mailed to the store which took orders, collected for the pictures and paid a percentage of the receipts to the photography firm. By the same State statute, a tax from $ 5 to $ 25 a year was imposed, on a photography business conducted in a fixed location within the State, depending on the size of the city or town. The non-resident firm sought a declaration that the assessment of the transient photographer's tax against it was improper. It claimed that the tax was upon inter-State commerce in violation of the commerce clause of the American Federal Constitution. On appeal from the Supreme Court of the State, the Supreme Court of America, affirming the decision:

Held that in taking the pictures within the State, the photographers were engaged in an essentially local activity or business of providing photographers' services which could constitutionally be made subject to local taxation. It was immaterial that the firm's photographers were non-residents or that the intermediate processing stage took place outside the State before the pictures were returned for delivery. The Commerce clause thus was not violated by the assessment of the transient photographer's tax

* Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 — "The Congress shall have power...To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian Tribes."

Amendment 14, Section 1. "All persons born or naturalised in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

against the non-resident firm.

(Paras 2, 7, 8)

That the tax is laid upon the distinctive business of the photographer, not upon the soliciting of orders or the processing of film. The Commerce Clause precludes a state-imposed flat sum privilege tax on an inter-State enterprise whose only contact with the taxing State is the solicitation of orders and the subsequent delivery of merchandise within the taxing State. Such taxes have a substantial inhibitory effect on commerce which is essentially inter-State.

(Para 6)

In determining whether a state tax imposes an impermissible burden on inter-State commerce, the issue is whether the local activity which is made the nominal subject of the tax is such an integral part of the inter-State process, the flow of commerce, that it cannot realistically be separated from it. The essentially local character of the activity is emphasized by the intimate connection between photographers and the local stores in which they set up their temporary studios. Engaging in such local business may constitutionally be made subject to local taxation.

(Para 7)

The extraction of a natural resource within a State is not immunized from state taxation merely because, once extracted, the product will immediately be shipped out of the State for processing and sale to consumers.

(Para 8)

Held further that the tax was not invalid as a discrimination against inter-State commerce, the tax being levied equally upon all transient or travelling photographers whether their travel was inter-State or entirely within the State and there being no showing that the tax on transient out-of-state photographers was so disproportionate to the tax imposed on photographers with a fixed location within the State as to bear unfairly on the former.

SUMMARY

Under an Alabama statute levying a license tax on a transient or traveling photographer of $ 5 for each week of operation in a locality within the state, the state assessed its license tax against a non resident photography firm which had no office place of business, or inventory in the state but which, pursuant to a contract with a department store chain, had sent non resident photographers to stores within the state on various occasions to take pictures of children, the exposed film being developed, printed, and finished outside the state and then mailed to the store which took the orders, collected for the pictures, and paid a percentage of the receipts to the photography firm. The state statute also imposed a tax of from $5 to 25 a year on a photography business conducted in a fixed location within the state depending on the size of the city or town. The non resident firm sought a declaration from the state courts that the assessment of the transient photographer's tax against it was improper, claiming that the tax was levied upon interstate commerce in violation of the Commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. The Circuit Court Montgomery County, sustained the tax, and the Supreme Court of Alabama affirmed (210 So 2d 696)

On appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed. In an opinion by Fortas J, expressing the view of eight members of the court it was held that (1) the Commerce clause was not violated by the assessment of the transient photographer's tax against the non resident firm since in taking the pictures within the state the photographers were engaged in an essentially local activity or business of providing photographers' services which could constitutionally be made subject to local taxation, it being immaterial that the firm's photographers were non-residents, or that the intermediate processing stage took place outside the state before the pictures were returned for delivery, and (2) the tax was not invalid as a discrimination against interstate commerce, the tax being levied equally upon all transient or traveling photographers whether their travel was interstate or entirely within the state and there being no showing that the tax on transient out-of-state photographers was so disproportionate to the tax imposed on photographers with a fixed location within the state as to bear unfairly on the former

WHITE, J, concurred, expressing the view that there would have been unconstitutional discrimination against interstate commerce if, as asserted by the nonresident firm, the transient tax had been applied to it solely because of its interstate shipment of films, but that the record failed to show that Alabama had so applied its tax

MR JUSTICE FORTAS delivered the opinion of the Court

1 Alabama levies a tax upon photograph galleries and persons engaged in photography. If the business is conducted "at a fixed location," the tax in the large cities (1) is $ 25 a year for each county, town, or city. For each "transient or traveling photographer," the tax is $ 5 per week for each county, town, or city in which he plies his trade (2)

2 This case involves state assessments of the transient photographers tax against

1 For smaller towns, the rate is stepped down. The lowest rate is $ 3 a year for localities with fewer than 1,000 inhabitants

2 Title 51, Code of Alabama S 569, reads as follows:

"Photographers and photograph galleries. Every photograph gallery, or person engaged in photography when the business is conducted at a fixed location. In cities and towns of seventy five thousand inhabitants and over, twenty-five dollars, in cities and towns of less than seventy-five thousand and not less than forty thousand inhabitants fifteen dollars, in cities and towns of less than forty thousand and not less than seven thousand inhabitants ten dollars, in cities and towns of less than seven thousand and over one thousand inhabitants five dollars, in all other places whether incorporated or not three dollars. The payment of the license required in this section shall authorize the doing of business only in the town, city or county where paid. For each transient or traveling photographer, five dollars per week."

appellant and its predecessor partnership. (3) Appellant sought a declaration from the state courts that the assessment was improper, claiming that the tax was levied upon interstate commerce, in conflict with the Commerce Clause of the Constitution. The Supreme Court of Alabama sustained the tax. — Ala —, 210 So 2d 696 (1968). We affirm.

3. Appellant is a photography firm specializing in selling photographs of children. It is organized as a North Carolina corporation and its principal office and processing plant are in Charlotte, North Carolina. It has no office or place of business in Alabama, nor does it maintain an inventory there. Its activities in that State stem from a contract between appellant and J. C. Penney Company. Penney operates department stores in eight cities in Alabama, as well as elsewhere in the Nation. By the terms of the contract, as summarized in the complaint appellant's photographers, nonresidents of Alabama, "were at the disposal of the local Penney stores. The local store manager requested appellant to send representatives for picture taking on specified dates." During the period for which the tax has been assessed, appellant's photographers were sent to J. C. Penney stores in eight Alabama cities. According to the complaint, each visit lasted two to five days, and each city was visited from one to five times a year.

4. The Penney stores advertised the photographic service, inviting parents to bring their children to be photographed during the visit by appellant's photographer. Each store took orders for the photographs, arranged the time for the sitting, provided a place in the store for the temporary studio, collected the money, and delivered the pictures to the customer when completed. Appellant was paid a percentage of the receipts from the Penney stores.

5. Appellant's activities were limited to taking the pictures, transmitting the exposed film to its office in North Carolina where it was developed, printed, and finished, and mailing the finished prints to the Penney store in Alabama.

6. It is clear from the taxing statute itself and from the decisions of the Supreme Court of Alabama that the tax is laid upon the distinctive business of the photographer, not upon the soliciting of orders or the processing of film.

3. No point has been made as to the identity of the taxpayer or its liability for the tax if it may be constitutionally levied.

Graves v. State, (1953) 258 Ala 359, 62 So 2d 446; Haden v. Olan Mills, Inc (1961) 273 Ala 129, 135 So 2d 388. Appellant argues that since each of its photographers came into Alabama from North Carolina to ply his trade, bringing his equipment with him, and since he merely exposed his film in Alabama, the developing, printing and finishing operation being conducted in North Carolina, his activities in Alabama are an inseparable part of interstate commerce and cannot constitutionally be subject to the Alabama license tax. Appellant relies upon familiar cases decided by this Court holding that the Commerce Clause precludes a state-imposed flat sum privilege tax on an interstate enterprise whose only contact with the taxing State is the solicitation of orders and the subsequent delivery of merchandise within the taxing State. West Point Wholesale Grocery Co. v. State of Opelika, (1957) 354 US 390, 1 L Ed 2d 1420, Memphis Steam Laundry Cleaner, Inc. v. Stone, (1952) 342 US 389, 96 L Ed 436, Nippert v. City of Richmond, (1946) 327 US 416, 90 L Ed 760. Such taxes have a substantial inhibitory effect on commerce which is essentially interstate.

7. But these cases are not applicable to the present facts. In determining whether a state tax imposes an impermissible burden on interstate commerce, the issue is whether the local activity which is made the nominal subject of the tax is "such an integral part of the interstate process, the flow of commerce, that it cannot realistically be separated from it." Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. v. Calvert, (1954) 347 US 157, 166, 98 L Ed 583, 591. If, for example, a license tax were imposed on the acts of engaging in soliciting orders or making deliveries, conflict with the Commerce Clause would be evident because these are minimal activities within a State without which there can be no interstate commerce. But in the present case, the "taxable event," as defined by the State's courts, is "pursu[ing] the art of photography in Alabama (1953) 258 Ala 359, 362, 62 So 2d 446, 448. When appellant's photographers set up their equipment in the local stores, posed the children brought to them to be photographed, and operated their cameras, they were engaged in an essentially local activity: the business of providing photographers' services. The essentially local character of the activity is emphasized by the intimate connection between appellant's photographers and the local stores in which they set up their temporary studios. Engaging in such local business may constitutionally be made subject to local taxation. E. g., State of Alaska v. Arctic Maid (1961) 366 US 199, 6 L Ed 2d 227.

8 It could hardly be suggested that if J C Penney had set up its own resident or transient photography studios using its own employees, such a photography business would have been exempt from state licensing merely because it chose to send the exposed film out of the State for processing. The extraction of a natural resource within a State is not immunized from state taxation merely because once extracted the product will immediately be shipped out of the State for processing and sale to consumers (1961) 366 US 199 at p 203—204 6 L Ed 2d 227 at 230, 231 (supra) Oliver Iron Mining Co v Lord (1923) 262 US 172, 177 179 67 L Ed 929 935 936. Cf Toomer v Witsell (1948) 334 US 385, 394 395, 92 L Ed 1460, 1470. A fortiori the fact that an intermediate processing stage takes place outside the State before the pictures are returned to the State for final delivery does not make the taking of the pictures—the activity on which the tax was imposed — so inseparable a part of the flow of interstate commerce as to be immune from state license taxation. The mere substitution for J C Penney's own employees of a transient photographer who comes into Alabama from North Carolina does not convert the essentially local activity of photographing the subjects into an interstate activity immune from the state privilege tax. Cf Caskey Baking Co v Virginia, (1941) 313 US 117—85 L Ed 1223 Wagner v City of Covington (1919) 25f US 95, 54 L Ed 157.

9 Nor is the tax invalid as a discrimination against interstate commerce. Alabama's tax is levied equally upon all transient or traveling photographers whether their travel is interstate or entirely within the State. On the record before us, there is no basis for concluding that the $ 5 per week tax on transient out of state photographers is so disproportionate to the tax imposed on photographers with a fixed location (4) as to bear unfairly on the former. Cf (1957) 345 US 290 1 L Ed 2d 1420, Best & Co v Maxwell (1940) 311 US 434 85 L Ed 275. In none of the cities for which appellant's complaint gives the details of its activities would the transient tax imposed on it have exceeded that which a fixed location photographer would have had to pay to operate in the city (5). For example, in 1965, five visits are listed to Mobile, resulting in an assessed tax of $ 25. This is equal to the flat rate tax which a photographer permanently located in the city would have had to pay. Since, according to the complaint, the maximum tax on appellant in any year for any city would be $ 25 (6) the burden could hardly be prohibitive.

SEPARATE OPINION

MR JUSTICE WHITE, concurring

11 Alabama taxes its transient photographers on a different, and often more burdensome basis than those not in that category. If firms operating precisely as appellant does, and mailing their film to a central point within the State for development are taxed as transient photographers then there is no unconstitutional discrimination against interstate commerce. But if appellant is taxed as a transient photographer because its films are sent for development across a state line, then there is discrimination against interstate commerce. Although appellant contends that it is because of the interstate shipment of films that the transient tax was applied, and although the decision in (1961) 273 Ala 129—13' So 2d 388 arguably supports that view I do not think that a sufficient showing has been made in this record that Alabama has so applied its tax. Since the burden of proof is on the appellant here I join the Court despite the uncertainties of the record on this score.

RGD

5 Appellant asserts in his brief—but not in the complaint—that the taxes assessed for its operations in Birmingham were almost twice what a fixed location photographer would have had to pay for the same period. Even assuming that to be true we are not prepared to say that this relative burden is improper given the differences between the two ways of carrying on the business.

6 Allegedly, there were up to five visits per year to each city, each visit extending from two to five days. The tax rate for transient photographer was $ 5 for each week of operation in a locality.

from the petitioner's firm and put in the custody of the Supurdgar, and

(e) To issue such other appropriate writ, direction or order against such of the respondents as may be deemed expedient by this Hon'ble Court.

2. The petitioner is a partner in the firm known as Messrs. Ghanshyam Das Lachmi Narain which carries on wholesale business in grain at Katarniyaghat, district Bahraich. Said firm holds a licence in form 'B' under the U. P. Foodgrains Dealers Licensing Order, 1964. Under the U. P. Foodgrains (Restrictions on Hoarding) Order, 1966 the petitioner could hold in stock up to one thousand quintals of one type of grain and further he could hold a total quantity of 2500 quintals of all types of grains. Said Order was modified by the U. P. Foodgrains (Restrictions on Hoarding) (Amendment) Order, 1967 which was published in the U. P. Gazette dated February 1-1967. According to the amended Order, the petitioner could hold a total quantity of 1000 quintals of foodgrains of all kinds and only 250 quintals of grain of any one particular type.

3. The allegation in the petition is that the petitioner got knowledge of this amended Order only on 13th March, 1967 when the Senior Marketing Inspector, Nanpara circulated a notice of even date to that effect. A copy of that notice is filed as annexure 2 to the petition. Then it is alleged that the very next day, i. e. on 14th March, 1967 the petitioner addressed an application to the Regional Food Controller, Gorakhpur through the Marketing Inspector, Bichia, district Bahraich asking for permission to hold a stock of 1000 quintals of paddy and 500 quintals of maize till April 30, 1967 and that the said application was forwarded by the Marketing Inspector with a recommendation in favour of the request made therein. Another allegation made in the petition is that the Regional Food Controller Gorakhpur had granted a permit to the petitioner on 4th February, 1967 for exporting 3000 quintals of paddy from Katarniya Ghat to Khalilabad. A copy of that permit is filed as annexure 4 to the petition. It is said that the petitioner could despatch only 1116 quintals of paddy up to 27th February, 1967 in pursuance of that permit and failed to despatch the rest because of the non-availability of railway wagons for which he had already applied. Then a reference is made to Government letter no. 7210/XXIX d-466/64 dated December 11, 1964 which inter alia stated:

"If there is any grain with any dealer beyond 250 quintals for which Railway wagon has been indented, it should not be taken into account while taking action under the Anti-Hoarding Order. This should be treated as grain under despatch."

The petitioner then alleged that in so far as on February 26, 1967 he applied for one wagon for the despatch of paddy and another for despatch of maize and on March, 6, 1967 for two wagons for despatch of maize for which he had obtained receipts nos. 073265, 073266 and 073283 but the aforesaid wagons could not arrive till March 15, 1967 on which date respondent no. 3 made a raid and finding grain in stock with the petitioner more than permissible under the amended Order seized the same, he can by no means be taken to have contravened the amended Order in view of the instructions contained in the aforesaid Government letter a true copy of which is filed as annexure 5 to the petition.

4. As a result of the report lodged by respondent no. 3 at police station Sujauli on March 15, 1967, the petitioner is being prosecuted before respondent no. 2 under Section 3/7, Essential Commodities Act, 1955. The petitioner challenges the validity of this prosecution firstly on the ground that in view of the facts stated above, the petitioner cannot be taken to have contravened the amended Order and secondly on the ground that the amended order being in excess of the power conferred by Sections 3 and 5 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 read with the notification issued under Section 5 of the Act by the Central Government and also being in contravention of Article 301 of the Constitution is void, inoperative and ultra vires.

5. The petition has been contested by the respondents namely, the State of Uttar Pradesh, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Nanpara, district Bahraich and the officer who made a raid on 15th March, 1967 and lodged a report at the aforesaid police station. A counter affidavit sworn by Ram Sunder Tewari of police station Sujauli has been filed on behalf of all the three respondents. The material allegations made in paragraphs 5 to 11 of the petition are not controverted in the counter-affidavit in a specific manner as they should have been if the respondents really intended to controvert those allegations. In regard to most of these allegations what is said in the counter-affidavit is either that they are not known to the deponent and, as such, denied or that the same are not admitted because there is nothing on the record of the criminal case pending against the petitioner to support those allegations. Even the allegation in paragraph 10 wherein reference is made to a Government letter copy of which is annexure 5 to the petition is not admitted in the counter-affidavit for the reason that the deponent of the affidavit does not know the same.

6. I have heard learned counsel for the petitioner and learned Standing Counsel representing the respondents at some length. The main contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that the amended order for the contravention of which the petitioner is being prosecuted is void and inoperative. He puts forth that contention for various reasons I shall now proceed to deal with the grounds advanced by learned counsel for striking down the amended Order.

7. His first contention is that the provision in para 3 of the order in question providing for the limits of the stock to be held by a grain dealer is bad in so far as it goes beyond the provisions of the Act itself under which it purports to have been framed. As already indicated, para 3 of the Order in question says that no licensed dealer shall have in his possession at any time a quantity of any one of the foodgrains exceeding 250 quintals or of all kind of foodgrains exceeding 1000 quintals. The argument of the learned counsel is that it is only clause (d) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act (hereinafter to be called "the Act") under which such an Order could be promulgated and that clause provides for regulating by licences, permits or otherwise the storage, transport, distribution, disposal, acquisition use or consumption of, any essential commodity and in so far as the impugned provision is not regulatory but restrictive, it must be held to be in excess of the power or the authority under which it purports to have been issued. Sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act has various clauses (a) to (j). On a perusal of these various clauses I agree with the contention of the learned counsel that the impugned provision does not appear to be covered by any of these clauses except clause (d). Said clause (d) no doubt confers power only for "regulating". So the question arises if the impugned provision can be held to be regulatory or must necessarily be held to be restrictive. In support of his contention that the impugned provision must be held to be restrictive or prohibitory learned counsel places reliance on the case of State of Mysore v. H. Sanjeeviah AIR 1967 SC 1189. That was a case under the Mysore Forest Act (XI of 1900). Rule-making power was conferred thereunder by Section 37. Sub-section (1) of Section 37 conferred rule-making power in general terms. Its sub-section (2) provides:

"Such rules may, among other matters,

(b) prohibit the import, export, collection, or moving of forest produce without a pass from an officer authorised to issue the same or otherwise than in accordance with the conditions of such pass."

By rule 2 framed on October 13, 1952 it was provided that no person shall import forest produce into, export forest produce from, or move forest produce within, any of the areas specified in Schedule 'A' unless such forest produce is accompanied by a permit prescribed in Rule 3. On April 15, 1959 the State of Mysore issued a notification adding a proviso to Rule 2 which read as follows—

"Provided that no such permit shall authorise any person to transport forest produce between sun-set and sun-rise in any of the areas specified in Schedule 'A'."

It was the validity of this proviso which was the subject-matter of the decision before the Supreme Court in the case cited above. The party challenging the validity of the said proviso maintained that it was not regulatory but prohibitory and, as such, went beyond the rule-making power conferred by the Act. This contention was upheld by the Supreme Court as shall appear from the following observations made in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the report—

"Power to impose restrictions of the nature contemplated by the two provisos to Rule 2 is not to be found in any of the clauses of sub-section (2) of Section 37. By sub-section (1) the State Government is invested with the power to regulate transport of forest produce "in transit by land or water". The power which the State Government may exercise is, however, power to regulate transport of forest produce, and not the power to prohibit or restrict transport. Prima facie, a rule which totally prohibits the movement of forest produce during the period of sun-set and sun-rise is prohibitory or restrictive of the right to transport forest produce. A rule regulating transport in its essence permits transport, subject to certain conditions devised to promote transport; Such a rule aims at making transport orderly so that it does not harm or endanger other persons following a similar vocation or the public, and enables transport to function for the public good. It was observed by one of us (Subba Rao, J.) in Automobile Transport (Rajasthan) Ltd. v. State of Rajasthan, 1963-1 SCR 491 at p 549—(AIR 1962 SC, 1406 at p 1430):

"Restrictions obstruct the freedom, whereas regulations promote it. Police regulations, though they may superficially appear to restrict the freedom of movement, in fact provide the necessary conditions for the free movement. Regulations such as provision for lighting, speed, good conditions of vehicles, turnings, rule of the road and similar others, really facilitate the freedom of movement rather than retard it. So too, licensing system with compensatory fees would not be restrictions but regulatory provisions; for without it, the necessary lines of communications, such as roads, waterways and air-ways cannot effectively be maintained and the freedom declared may in practice turn out to be an empty one. So too, regulations providing for necessary services to enable the free movement of traffic, whether charged or not, cannot also be described as restrictions impeding the freedom.'

It was asserted in the affidavit filed on behalf of the State in reply to the petition that the restriction imposed by the rules on the freedom of citizens to transport timber, fire-wood, charcoal and bamboos is a reasonable restriction and in the public interest, i.e. to prevent unauthorised felling of trees and bamboos and smuggling them from the State forests. It was said that checking transport of the forest produce during nights would require enormous increase in the number of checking staff of the Forest Department, that such staff will have to work in two or three shifts every day if they have to check transport of forest produce during nights also, further that such staff will have to be equipped with lanterns and warm clothing if they have to work during nights that persons who indulge in smuggling of timber find nights more convenient to avoid detection, and that smuggling of forest produce is a serious menace to preservation of forests in the State and safeguarding of the property of the State. Whether or not these are good grounds for imposing restrictions on transport of forest produce is not a matter with which we are concerned in dealing with the power of the State by rules to restrict the right to transport forest produce. The power conferred upon the State Government is merely "to regulate the transit" of forest produce and not to restrict it. If the provisos are in truth restrictive of the right to transport the forest produce, however, good the grounds apparently may be for restricting the transport of forest produce, they cannot on that account transform the power conferred by the provisos into a power merely regulatory. The High Court was, therefore, in our view, right in holding that the two provisos to R. 2 are not regulatory in character, but are restrictive."

I have thus no hesitation in concluding that the impugned provision is not regulatory but is in effect prohibitory and, as such, it goes beyond the power conferred by clause (d) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act. As already stated, no other clause of sub-section (2) of section 3 of the Act appears to cover it. So the inescapable conclusion is that sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act does not cover the impugned provision.

8. Learned Standing Counsel has, however, maintained that it is immaterial whether or not any clause of sub-section (2) of Section 3 covers the impugned provision so long as it can be found to be covered by sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Act. Section 3(1) provides:

"If the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary or expedient so to do for maintaining or increasing supplies of any essential commodity or for securing their equitable distribution and availability at fair prices, it may, by order, provide for regulating or prohibiting the production, supply and distribution thereof and trade and commerce therein."

The argument of the learned Standing Counsel is that the above-quoted provision is couched in very wide terms in so far as it clearly says that in the circumstances mentioned in it the Central Government may by order provide for regulating or prohibiting the production, supply and distribution thereof (i. e. any essential commodity) and trade and commerce therein. Thus he contends that the words "supply and distribution" are wide enough to cover "storage". He maintains that unless "storage" is regulated or prohibited, if necessary, it is not possible to maintain supply or secure equitable distribution which is the basic object of section 3. The learned counsel for the petitioner on the other hand, contends that the language of Section 3(1) howsoever wide it may be cannot be taken to include "storage". I am unable to agree with the learned counsel for the petitioner. In my view power to regulate or prohibit "storage" is clearly implied in the wide language of sub-section (1) of Section 3.

9. Learned counsel for the petitioner then argues that advantage cannot be taken of the general provision of sub-section (1) to save the impugned order when it is found in excess of the provision contained in clause (d) of sub-sec. (2) of Section 3 which specifically deals with the subject-matter of the impugned order and the same does not appear to be covered by any of the clauses of sub-section (2). He also argues in this connection that in so far as clause (d) of sub-section (2) which deals with "storage" specifically provides only for its regulation, it must be held if it is found that the general provision of sub-section (1) covers "storage", that to that extent the general provision is in conflict with the special provision in clause (d) of sub-section (2) and, as such, the specific provision in clause (d) of sub-section (2) must prevail as against the general provision in sub-section (1). In my view neither of the arguments is tenable. It is now well settled that the specific provisions such as are contained in sub-section (2) are merely illustrative and they cannot be read as restrictive of the generality of powers conferred by sub-section (1). In this connection reference may be made to the case of Afzal Ullah v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1964 SC 264. The material observations occur in paragraph 13 of the report. Reference may also be made to the case of Emperor v. Sibnath Banerji, AIR 1945 PC 156 which is referred to with approval in the aforesaid Supreme Court case. In that case the Privy Council refers to the decision of the Federal Court which stated—

"The Legislature having set out in plain unambiguous language in para (x) the scope of the rules which may be made providing for apprehension and detention in custody it is not permissible to press in aid the more general words in Section 2 (1) in order to justify a rule which so plainly goes beyond the limits of para (x) though if para (x) were not in the Act at all, perhaps different considerations might apply."

Their Lordships of the Privy Council with reference to the aforesaid observations of the Federal Court observed on page 160—

"Their Lordships are unable to agree with the learned Chief Justice of the Federal Court on his statement of the relative positions of Sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 2, Defence of India Act, and counsel for the respondents in the present appeal was unable to support that statement, or to maintain that Rule 26 was invalid. In the opinion of their Lordships, the function of Sub-section (2) is merely an illustrative one, the rule-making power is conferred by sub-section (1), and "the Rules" 2 which are referred to in the opening sentence of Sub-section (2) are the rules which are authorised by, and made under sub-section (1), the provisions of Sub-section (2) are not restrictive of Sub-section (1), as indeed is expressly stated by the words "without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by Sub-section (1)". There can be no doubt—as the learned Judge himself appears to have thought—that the general language of Sub-section (1) amply justifies the terms of Rule 26, and avoids any of the criticisms which the learned Judge expressed in relation to Sub-section (2)."

Learned counsel for the petitioner cited a number of cases in support of the contention that in case of a conflict between a general provision and a special provision whether the two are in the same Act or are in two different Acts the special provision must prevail as against the general provision. It is unnecessary to refer to those authorities because the proposition so far as it goes cannot possibly be assailed. The question is if it has any application to the case in hand. Evidently there arises no occasion to invoke that proposition unless it be found that there is really a conflict between a general provision and a special provision. The argument of the learned counsel is that if Sub-section (1) of Section 3 be taken to provide for the restriction of "storage" then in so far as the specific provision in clause (d) of sub-section (2) of S 3 provides only for regulation by licence of "storage", it must be held that there is a conflict between the general provision contained in Sub-section (1) of S 3 and the special provision contained in Clause (d) of Sub-section (2) of Section 3 and in that view of the matter it must be held that the special provision in Clause (d) of Sub-section (2) must prevail as against the general provision contained in Sub-section (1) of Section 3. In my view the very basis for the argument is non-existent. Sub-section (2) opens with the words "without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by Sub-section (1)". These words are there in Sub-section (2) obviously with a view to avoid any conflict between what is provided in Sub-section (2) and what is provided in Sub-section (1). In his arguments learned counsel assumes that to prevent which the Legislature deliberately introduced in Sub-section (2) the word cited above. So, in fact there is no conflict and there can possibly be no conflict, having in view the opening words of Sub-section (2), between the two, namely Sub-section (1) and Clause (d) of Sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act and, as such, there arises no occasion to say that Section 3(2)(d) should prevail as against Section 3(1). I accordingly repeal the contention.

10. Another contention of the learned counsel is that the impugned Order being violative of Article 301 of the Constitution deserves to be struck down. He argues that Article 302 of the Constitution cannot be invoked to its aid for the simple reason that it is a subordinate legislation and not a law made by Parliament. In support of his contention he places reliance on the case of AIR 1967 SC 1189. In paragraph 8 of the report following observations on which strong reliance is placed are made—

"Article 304 which is an exception to Article 301 has no application to this case, because that Article saves certain laws from the operation of Article 301 if the law is passed by the Legislature of a State. The provisos to Rule 2 are not made by the executive Government in exercise of delegated authority. The rules have the force of law, but when made did not become part of the Act (see Section 77 of the Mysore Forest Act)."

11. On a close examination of the point urged by the learned counsel it appears that the Supreme Court case cited above is distinguishable in so far as their Lordships while saying "the rules have the force of law, but when made did not become part of the Act" rely on Section 77 of the Mysore Forest Act which provides "All rules made by the Government under this Act shall be published in the official Gazette, and shall thereupon have the force of law." Obviously there being an express provision in Section 77 of the Mysore Forest Act to the effect that rules shall have the force of law without adding that the same when made shall be deemed to be a part of the enactment itself, it could not possibly be said on the basis of principles of statutory interpretation that rules when made in accordance with the provisions of the enactment became part of the enactment itself. Had there been no such provision as is contained in Section 77 of the Mysore Forest Act, there would have been no occasion to say as is said in the observations reproduced above that the rules when made did not become part of the Act with the result that Article 304 (because the enactment concerned in that case was an enactment passed by a State Legislature and not by Parliament) could not be invoked to save the rules once the same appeared to be in contravention of Article 301. Here the position is different in so far as there is no provision in the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 to indicate as to what would be the effect of the rules or Orders made thereunder. In the absence of any such express provision, the principles of statutory interpretation must apply for determining the position of Orders framed in accordance with the provisions of the Essential Commodities Act vis-a-vis the Act itself. In the case of Willingale v. Norris, (1909) 1 KB 57 it is observed on page 64:—

"If it be said that a regulation is not a provision of an Act, I am of opinion that Rex v. Walker, (1875) LR 10 QB 355 is an authority against that proposition. I should certainly have been prepared to hold apart from authority that, where a statute enables an authority to make regulations, a regulation made under the Act becomes for the purpose of obedience or disobedience a provision of the Act. The regulation is only the machinery by which Parliament has determined whether certain things shall or shall not be done."

Again reference may be made to the case of Wicks v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 1947 AC 362. It is observed on page 365:—

"There is of course no doubt that when a statute like the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, enables an authority to make regulations, a regulation which is validly made under the Act, i.e., which is intra vires of the regulation-making authority, should be regarded as though it were itself an enactment."

This being the correct legal position, it is difficult to accept the contention of the learned counsel that the impugned Order even though it may have been framed within the four corners of the Essential Commodities Act cannot be deemed to be law passed by Parliament. The Act has been passed by Parliament. The Act authorises promulgation of Orders. So the Orders promulgated within the authority delegated by the Act would be deemed to be a part of the enactment. In that view of the matter Article 302 of the Constitution must apply to save the impugned Order. There is a decision of a Division Bench of this Court also on the same point. Shobha v. State, 1962 All LJ 831; (AIR 1963 All 29) may be referred to in this connection. The material observations which occur on page 833 (of ALJ): (at p. 31 of AIR) run as below:—

"Ours is not a case of an independent legislation. It is a case where an Order has been framed under an existing Act, i.e., the Essential Commodities Act. The Order merely carried out the purposes of that Act In other words, it is in the nature of delegated legislation. There was no argument before us and indeed none was possible that there has been a delegation of legislative functions in the instant case. The position of all the Orders framed under Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act is to make those Orders a part of the Act itself. It would be a complete misconception to treat the impugned Order as independent of the Essential Commodities Act. Inasmuch as the Essential Commodities Act has been passed under Article 302 of the Constitution and fulfils all the requirements of that provision, it was not necessary that the Parliament should have passed another Act in order to give protection to the impugned Order. The position of the impugned Order and such other Orders is analogous to that of the rules or regulations framed under the statute which are treated to be a part of the statute itself. See Khetsidas Girdhari Lal v. Pratapmull Rameshwar, AIR 1946 Cal 197 and Saligram Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1945 Pat 69. It is true that if and when the Essential Commodities Act is repealed, the impugned Order would also disappear and cannot be continued unless there is another Act passed making its continuance possible. Under these circumstances, we have no hesitation in rejecting the submission made by Mr. Saran that the Parliament has not passed any law under Article 302 of the Constitution which could give protection to Clause 3 of the Order."

Having regard to the correct legal position as discussed above I am of opinion that the contention is without any substance and must be repelled.

12. The last contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that the impugned Order is to be struck down for the reason that it falls outside the delegation effected by the Central Government in exercise of powers conferred on it by Section 5 by notification dated 9th June, 1966. The material portion of the notification reads—

"In exercise of the powers conferred by Section 5 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (10 of 1955), the Central Government hereby directs—

(a) that the powers conferred on it by Sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the said Act to make orders to provide for the matters specified in Clauses (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (h), (i), (u) and (j) of Sub-section (2) thereof shall, in relation to foodstuffs, be exercisable also by a State Government subject to the conditions..."

The argument raised before me is that by this notification the delegation is effected in favour of the State Government of the power conferred on the Central Government by Sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Act to make orders to provide for the matters specified in such clauses of Sub-section (2) of Section 3 as are enumerated in the extract cited above. The argument proceeds that in so far as the impugned Order is not covered by any of those clauses of Sub-section (2), it must be held that it had been promulgated outside the authority delegated in favour of the State Government. As against that, the contention of the learned Standing Counsel is twofold. His first contention is that by the notification referred to above, power to make orders not only in respect of matters specified in the various clauses enumerated in the notification has been conferred but also the general power conferred on the Central Government by Sub-section (1). The other contention is that, at any rate, the impugned Order is covered by Clause (d) of Sub-section (2). In my view neither of the contentions has any substance. The first contention, as is abundantly clear, from a perusal of Section 5 by which authority to delegate is conferred cannot be sustained. Section 5 itself says that the Central Government can delegate power to make orders only in respect of such matters as are specified by the authority effecting delegation. That being so, the Central Government never possessed authority to delegate the power enjoyed by it under Sub-section (1) to make Orders without specifying the matters. That is why, the notification dated 9th June, 1966 by which delegation is effected takes care to specify matters in respect of which power to make Orders is delegated. There is nothing wrong if in specifying matters the Central Government chose to adopt the specifications contained in Sub-section (2). And it was also in the discretion of the Central Government not to effect delegation in respect of all the matters, specified in Sub-section (2). The Central Government actually omitted clause (g) of Sub-section (2) in the notification effecting delegation. So, neither the language of the notification nor that of Section 5 of the Act justifies the contention raised by the learned counsel. The language of the notification clearly says that power under Sub-section (1) of Section 3 to make Orders to provide for the matters specified in certain clauses of Sub-section (2) as enumerated in the notification is being delegated. In the face of that language and also that of Section 5, it is impossible to maintain that the Central Government has by this notification delegated the general power to make Orders under sub-section (1). In fact neither it could do so nor has it done so. I accordingly repel the contention.

13. As regards the other contention, I need only say, as I have indicated above, that the impugned Order is not covered by Clause (d) of Sub-section (2) of Section 3. It is unnecessary to repeat the reasons for that conclusion which are detailed above. I accordingly repel the contention.

14. In view of the foregoing discussion, it seems that the last contention raised by the learned counsel for the petitioner must be upheld. He has also drawn my attention to the case of Sujan Singh Matu Ram v. The State of Haryana, AIR 1968 Punj 363 decided by a Division Bench of the Punjab High Court. The view expressed above finds full support from that decision of the Punjab High Court. I accordingly conclude that the impugned Order has got to be struck down for the reason that it is outside the authority delegated by the Central Government in favour of the State Government by notification dated June 9, 1966.

15. In that view of the matter, the petition must be allowed. The petition is accordingly allowed with costs. The petitioner's prosecution is quashed and the grain seized or its value if it has already been sold is directed to be restored to the petitioner.

Civil Misc Writ No 1635 of 1967 D/- 31-10-1968

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 141 — Supreme Court holding S. 238 of Income-Tax Act, 1961, ultra vires.

BM/EM/A625/69/D

tax Act, 1961, as valid in AIR 1968 SC 162 — Question of excessive delegation of powers was not argued before Supreme Court — Courts are even then bound to proceed on basis that Section 298 is valid. AIR 1968 SC 162, Ref. (Para 6)

(B) Income-tax Act (1961), S. 298 — Income-tax (Removal of Difficulties) Order (No. 2 of 1963) — Order is not in excess of powers conferred by S. 298 or discriminatory in nature — (Constitution of India, Art. 14) — (General Clauses Act (1897), S. 6 (c) and (e)).

Levy of advance tax under Section 18A of the Old Act is not a matter relating to assessment of income-tax. Assessment proceedings commence after the previous year has closed and the assessment year has started. In the case of advance tax, however, the procedure for its levy commences during the previous year itself. It is not possible, therefore to hold that proceedings for levy of penalty for non-payment of advance tax are included in the proceedings for assessment of income-tax. Consequently, none of the Sub-clauses (a) to (m) in Section 297 (2) apply to save the liability to penalty for non-payment of advance tax already incurred under the old Act. It cannot also be assumed that the Legislature intended that the liability to pay penalty for failure to furnish returns or to pay advance tax incurred under the old Act should terminate with the repeal thereof. Such an assumption would be irrational. There is, therefore, no difficulty in holding that the power to levy penalty under Section 18A of the old Act is saved by Clauses (c) and (e) of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, there being no intention to the contrary in the repealing Act. The position, therefore, is that though the liability survived, there is no specific provision in the new Act to give effect to such liability. (Paras 10 & 11)

The first condition precedent, namely, the existence of a difficulty in giving effect to the provisions of the new Act, is clearly satisfied. The second condition is that the Central Government may not do anything inconsistent with the provisions of the new Act. The provisions of the Order are not inconsistent with the provisions of the new Act which also impose penalty for failure to pay advance tax in the same way as the old Act did.

There is also nothing in the content of the terms of the Order to suggest that it is discriminatory in nature. It applies equally to all assesseees who were liable to pay advance tax and furnish estimates under the old Act for the financial year 1961-62, but defaulted in doing so. The Income Tax Officer has no discretion in the matter. He has to impose penalty on all such defaulters and the Order gives him no scope for meting out differential treatment to them. If some assesseees had escaped penal proceedings before the promulgation of the order on 11-6-1963, that does not mean that the Order itself makes a discrimination between assesseees in the same category. R. C. Sharma, for Petitioner; Standing Counsel, for Opposite Parties.

MUKERJEE, J.:— This writ petition raises the question of vires of Section 298 of the Income Tax Act 1961 and the Removal of Difficulties Order No. 2 of 1963 issued by the Central Government thereunder by notification dated the 11th June, 1963. The material facts are as follows:

2. The applicant, who is the assessee in this case, is a firm constituted with effect from the first day of October, 1963, to carry on the business of manufacture of hosiery and sale of cotton yarn at Kanpur. Its first accounting period commenced on the 1st of October, 1961 and ended on the 31st March, 1962. For this period, the applicant returned an income of Rs. 74,129/- assessable for the assessment year 1962-63. The income was ultimately assessed at Rs. 86,302/-. The Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, hereafter referred to as the old Act, was in force throughout this account period. The applicant was a new assessee and, therefore, Section 18-A (3) of the Old Act was applicable to it. Section 18-A (3) ran as follows:—

"18A (3). Any person who has not hitherto been assessed shall, before the 15th day of March in each financial year, if his total income of the period which would be the previous year for an assessment for the financial year next following is likely to exceed the maximum amount not chargeable to tax in his case by two thousand five hundred rupees, send to the Income-tax Officer an estimate of the tax payable by him on that part of his income to which the provisions of Section 18 do not apply of the said previous year calculated in the manner laid down in Sub-section (1) and shall pay the amount, on such of the dates specified in that Sub-section as have not expired, by instalments which may be revised according to the proviso to Sub-section (2)."

Under this section, read with Section 18A (1), there was clearly an obligation on the part of the applicant to submit an estimate of the tax payable by him and pay the amount by equal instalments on the 15th of December, 1961 and on the 15th of March, 1962. The applicant, however, did not either file the estimate nor pay.

the amount of the advance tax as required by Section 18A (3).

3 On the 1st April, 1962 the Income Tax Act, 1961, hereafter referred to as the new Act, came into force and, by sub-section (1) of Section 297 thereof, the old Act stood repealed with effect from the said date. As the applicant had not complied with the provisions of Section 18A (3) of the old Act, the Income Tax Officer issued a notice to the applicant on the 18th September, 1964 requiring it to show cause why penalty should not be imposed under Section 273 of the new Act. In reply the applicant stated that the penal provisions of Section 273 of the new Act were not attracted in case of non-compliance with the provisions of Section 18A (3) of the old Act. The Income Tax Officer rejected the contention and imposed a penalty of Rs 500/- under Section 273 (b) of the new Act by his order dated 28th February, 1966.

4 The applicant appealed to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and contended that Section 273 (b) of the new Act, under which penalty had been imposed would be applicable if the applicant had committed the default under Section 212 (3) of the new Act (corresponding to Section 18A (3) of the old Act). As, however, the new Act was not in force, on the 15th December, 1961 and the 15th March, 1962, when the defaults in question were committed, the provisions of Section 273 (b) could not be pressed into service for imposition of penalty for such defaults. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner overruled the objection. He found that by virtue of the powers conferred on the Central Government by Section 298 (1) of the new Act, the Removal of Difficulties Order No 2 of 1963 had been promulgated which provided that the reference to Sections 212, 215, 216 and 217 in Section 273 of the new Act should be treated as reference to the corresponding provisions of Section 18-A of the old Act in cases where there had been default under Section 18-A of the old Act for the financial year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1961. As, in the instant case, the relevant accounting period fell within the financial year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1961, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner held that the Removal of Difficulties Order was applicable and the default under Section 18-A (3) of the old Act should be regarded as a default under Section 212 (3) of the new Act. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner, therefore, sustained the penalty of Rs 500/- imposed by the Income Tax Officer.

5 At the hearing before us it was contended on behalf of the applicant that, in the first place, Section 298 of the new Act was ultra vires in so far as it authorises the Central Government to "do anything" in the garb of removal of difficulties. Thus, it was contended, amounts to excessive delegation of powers, including legislative powers, and it should be struck down on that ground. Secondly, it was argued, assuming that Section 298 was validly enacted, the Central Government went beyond the powers conferred by Section 298 in promulgating the Removal of Difficulties Order No 2 of 1963 which authorised the I. T. O. to levy penalty under Section 273 of the new Act in respect of default under Section 18-A (3) committed under the old Act. It was contended that the power conferred by the Legislature to the Central Government under Section 298 related only to details regarding the working of taxation laws, such powers were not intended to be exercised for imposition of penalty in respect of a default committed under an Act which had been repealed. It was also contended that the Central Government had no power to give a retrospective effect to the Removal of Difficulties Order from the 1st of April, 1962. Further, it was urged that the order was discriminatory and, therefore, unconstitutional.

6. The challenge to the vires of Section 298 of the new Act must fail in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Kalawati Devi Harlalka v. Commissioner of Income Tax, West Bengal (1967) 66 ITR 680 (AIR 1968 SC 162), in which it was held that the section had been validly enacted. It is true that the point now raised by the applicant in the present case, namely, excessive delegation of powers, was not considered by the Supreme Court in that case, but it is not open to this Court to disregard the decision of the Supreme Court on that ground. Under Article 141 of the Constitution, the law declared by the Supreme Court is binding on all courts within the territory of India and we are bound to proceed on the basis that Section 298 of the new Act is valid.

7. The next point for consideration is whether, in promulgating the Removal of Difficulties Order, No 2 of 1963, the Central Government exceeded the powers conferred by Section 298. Sub-section (1) of Section 298 of the new Act which is material for our purpose, runs as follows:—
"298 Power to remove difficulties—
(1) If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act the Central Government may, by general or special order, do anything not inconsistent with such provisions which appears to it to be necessary or expedient for the purpose of removing the difficulty."

In pursuance of the powers conferred by the above Sub-section the Central Government issued the following Order by notification on the 11th June, 1963—

"In exercise of the powers conferred by Section 298 of the Income-tax Act, 1961 (XLIII of 1961), the Central Government hereby makes the following order, namely:—

1. Short title and commencement—(1) This Order may be called the Income-tax (Removal of Difficulties) Order No. 2 of 1963.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of April, 1962.

2. Applicability of Section 273 of Act XLIII of 1961 in certain cases. Where in respect of the financial year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1961, an assessee has furnished an estimate of the tax payable by him under Sub-section (2) or Sub-section (3) of Section 18-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922) (hereinafter referred to as the repealed Act), which he knew or had reason to believe to be untrue, or where he has without reasonable cause failed to furnish an estimate of the tax payable by him under Sub-section (3) of Section 18-A of the repealed Act in respect of the said financial year, the provisions of Section 273 of the Income-tax Act, 1961 (XLIII of 1961), shall apply as if the references in that Section to the provisions of Section 212, Chapter XVII-C, Section 215, Section 210 and Section 217 were, so far as may be, references to the corresponding provisions of Section 18-A of the repealed Act."

8. From the terms of Section 298 of the new Act quoted above, it would appear that the Central Government has been authorised by the Legislature to make a general or special order for the purpose stated therein provided the following two conditions are satisfied, namely:—

(i) that there is a difficulty in giving effect to the provisions of the new Act, and

(ii) that such order is not inconsistent with such provisions.

As regards the first pre-condition, there is no doubt that the Central Government was faced with obvious difficulty. As we have already noticed, the applicant was liable under the old Act to furnish an estimate of the advance tax payable by him and to pay the same in equal instalments on the 15th December, 1961 and on the 15th March, 1962, when the old Act was in force. There is no dispute that the applicant did not comply with these requirements. The applicant was, therefore, liable to penalty under Section 18-A (9) read with Section 28 (1) of the old Act. The old Act, however, was repealed on 1-4-1962 by virtue of the provisions of Section 297 (1) read with Section 1 (3) of the new Act. By reason of the repeal the applicant could not be proceeded against under the provisions of the old Act in respect of the default committed by it and it is not possible to take penal action against the applicant under Section 18-A (9). The applicant's liability to penalty, however, was not extinguished. Section 6 of the General Clauses Act (Act No. X of 1897) provides as follows:—

"6. Where this Act, or any Central Act or Regulation made after the commencement of this Act repeals any enactment hitherto made or hereafter to be made, then, unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not—

(a); or

(b); or

(c) affect any right, privilege, or obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under any enactment so repealed; or

(d); or

(e) affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid;

and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced and any such penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed as if the repealing Act or Regulation had not been passed."

9. In the case of 1967-66 ITR 680= (AIR 1968 SC 162) (supra) the facts were that the Commissioner of Income-tax West Bengal issued a notice under Section 33-B of the old Act on the 24th January, 1963 after its repeal. The question to be decided was whether the Commissioner had jurisdiction to issue the notice under Section 33-B of the old Act in view of Section 297 (2) of the new Act read with paragraph 4 of the Income Tax (Removal of Difficulties) Order, 1962. The matter was heard by Banerji J., sitting singly, in writ jurisdiction. He held that a proceeding under Section 33-B of the old Act was, in reality a proceeding in assessment and, therefore, the notice was saved by reason of the provisions of Section 297 (2) (a) of the new Act. On behalf of the Revenue, Section 6 of the General Clauses Act 1897, appears to have been also pressed into service to validate the impugned notice. The learned Judge observed that as the Commissioner could take action under Section 33-B of the old Act, even after its repeal, in view of the saving provisions of Section 297 (2) (a) of the new Act, it was not necessary to determine whether Section 6 of the General Clauses Act also saved the power of the Commissioner under Section 33-B of the old Act, but he remarked as follows:—

"If it had been necessary to do so, I would have no hesitation in holding that such power would be saved under Section 6, Clauses (c) and (e) of the General Clauses Act, there being no intention to the contrary in the repealing Act of 1961."

10. When the case, eventually went up in appeal to the Supreme Court, and it has been reported in 1967-66 ITR 680- (AIR 1968 SC 162), Sikri J., quoted the above remarks of Banerji J., but he held that Section 6 of the General Clauses Act had no application to the case inasmuch as a contrary intention appeared from the language and content of Section 297(2) which provided for all matters relating to assessments including revisions under Section 33B. The case before us, however, stands on a different footing. Levy of advance tax under Section 18-A of the old Act is not a matter relating to assessment of income-tax. Assessment proceedings commence after the previous year has closed and the assessment year has started. In the case of advance tax, however, the procedure for its levy commences during the previous year itself. It is not possible, therefore to hold that proceedings for levy of penalty for non-payment of advance tax are included in the proceedings for assessment of income-tax. Consequently, none of the Sub-clauses (a) to (m) in Section 297 (2) apply to save the liability to penalty for non-payment of advance tax already incurred under the old Act. It cannot also be assumed that the Legislature intended that the liability to pay penalty for failure to furnish returns or to pay advance tax incurred under the old Act should terminate with the repeal thereof. Such an assumption would be irrational. There is, therefore, no difficulty in holding that the power to levy penalty under Section 18-A of the old Act is saved by S. 6, Clauses (c) and (e) of the General Clauses Act quoted above, there being no intention to the contrary in the repealing Act.

11. The position, therefore, is that though the liability survived, there was no specific provision in the new Act to give effect to such liability. In view of this patent difficulty the Central Government promulgated the Income-tax (Removal of Difficulties) Order No. 2, 1963, which provides inter alia that the default contemplated in Section 18-A (3) of the old Act shall be regarded as a default under Section 212 (3) for the purpose of imposition of penalty under Section 273 of the new Act.

12. The first condition precedent, namely, the existence of a difficulty in giving effect to the provisions of the new Act, is clearly satisfied. The second condition as noted above, is that the Central Government may not do anything inconsistent with the provisions of the new Act. Mr. Sharma, appearing for the assessee, submitted that this provision is not satisfied in the present case. His contention is that imposition of penalty in the present case by resort to the provisions of the Order would result in an infringement of Section 273 of the new Act, which requires the satisfaction of the I. T. O. "In the course of any proceedings in connection with the regular assessment." He contended that as there has been no regular assessment under the new Act, Section 273 was not attracted. The contention is, however, misconceived inasmuch as the regular assessment for the relevant assessment year 1962-63 was clearly made under the new Act. We are not satisfied that the provisions of the Order are inconsistent with the provisions of the new Act which also impose penalty for failure to pay advance tax in the same way as the old Act did.

13. We are unable to hold, therefore, that the Central Government exceeded its powers in promulgating the Income-Tax (Removal of Difficulties) Order No. 2, 1963.

14. There is also nothing in the content of the terms of the Order to suggest that it is discriminatory in nature. It applies equally to all assesseees who were liable to pay advance tax and furnish estimates under the old Act for the financial year 1961-62, but defaulted in doing so. The Income Tax Officer has no discretion in the matter. He has to impose penalty on all such defaulters and the Order gives him no scope for meting out differential treatment to them. If some assesseees had escaped penal proceedings before the promulgation of the Order on 11-6-1963, that does not mean that the Order itself makes a discrimination between assesseees in the same category. This contention must also fail.

15. The last contention is that the Central Government was not competent to give retrospective effect to the Order in exercise of its delegated powers. It would be noticed that the Order was promulgated on 11-6-1963, but it was given effect from the 1st of April, 1962. In the case of this assessee notice under Section 274 was issued on 18-9-1964, after the promulgation of the Order and penalty was imposed even thereafter on 28-2-1966. Hence, the fact that the Order has been given retrospective effect, does not operate to the prejudice of the assessee and it would be merely academic to enter into a discussion of the applicant's contention in point.

16. The petition in writ must, therefore, be dismissed with costs without prejudice to the contentions of the applicant not bearing on the validity of Section 293 of the new Act and of the Order. The applicant would be at liberty to agitate such other contentions before the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal, if it is so advised.

RAJESHWARI PRASAD AND

Mahant Manadeo, Appellant v. Mahant Yaduvansh Deo Gopinath, Respondent.

First Appeal No. 374 of 1957 D/- 29-8-68, against judgment and decree of Civil J., Allahabad, D/- 28-9-1957.

(A) T. P. Act (1882), S. 3 — Deed, construction — Real intention of parties must be judged from contents of document as a whole and not from use of any specific word or phrase therein.

(B) Hindu Law — Religious Endowments — Relinquishment of office of Mahantship cannot be made in favour of person other than the person next entitled to succeed.

(C) Hindu Law — Religious Endowments — Head of religious or charitable institution has no power to bargain away his office or alter constitution of institution. AIR 1917 Pat 382, Foll.; AIR 1963 SC 309, Ref.

(D) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 8, R. 2 — Special defence — Suit on basis of contract — Defendant may admit contract and contractual liability and to avoid effect of admission raise plea of frustration or performance.

(E) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 92, O. 8, R. 2 — Principles of Clauses (1) and (2) of S. 92 apply to defence also — Suit not under S. 92 — Special defence — Plea requiring Court to enter into questions covered by provisions of S. 92 — Cannot be entertained.

It is undoubtedly open to a defendant to raise special defence by raising plea in confession and avoidance. The Court is bound to consider such a plea of avoidance provided, the Court is competent to go into the questions on which that plea is based in that particular proceeding. In case, a consideration of that plea necessitates going into question which the particular court is not competent to go into in that proceeding, the Court must refuse to entertain that plea or to enquire into those pleas. A special defence raised in a suit, which is not a suit under Section 92 Civil P. C. and which requires the Court to enter into an enquiry of questions which are covered by the provisions of S. 92 cannot be entertained and enquired into by the Court. The principle underlying S. 92 Clauses (1) and (2) is equally applicable to defence also. The first reason for arriving at that conclusion is that there does not appear to be any rational basis for holding the view that a defence by which a defendant seeks to obtain such relief as can be granted to a plaintiff only in a suit under S. 92 should not be equally barred in a suit which is not a suit under S. 92. The other reason for arriving at the above conclusion is that when a plea in confession and avoidance is raised by the defendant, his position is analogous to the position of a plaintiff, particularly in relation to the plea of avoidance. It is for the defendant in such a case to establish the correctness of the plea, and it is only when that is done that he would be entitled to the relief which he seeks by raising that defence. Shambhu Pd. and Lalji Sinha, for Appellant; S. B. L. Gour and K. B. L. Gour, for Respondent.

R. PRASAD, J.:—This is a defendant's first appeal. It is directed against the judgment and decree of the learned Civil Judge, Allahabad in original suit No. 6 of 1953 dated 28th September 1957.

2. The plaintiff-respondent Mahant Yaduvansh Deo alias Gopinath filed the suit on certain facts to be narrated hereafter and prayed for the following reliefs—

(a) That the deed dated 11th January, 1951 registered on the 18th January 1951, be suitably rectified or set aside in the light of the submissions made in this plaint which is valued at Rs. 31,320/- and the defendant be directed by an injunction to give up the management of the movable and immovable properties of the Sangat, mentioned in the First and the Second schedules of this plaint, and the administration of its other affairs to the plaintiff, and be restrained from interfering with the plaintiff's administration and management of the Sangat, its properties valued Rs. 3,792/- being one-tenth of the total valuation of Rs. 37,920/-.

(b) That the defendant may be ordered to render accounts of his agency period to the plaintiff from the date of his taking over as such till the date of handing over which is valued at Rs. 1,907/8/-, the profit from the properties for 15 months from the date the deed in question was registered i.e. 18th January, 1951 to the date of filing the suit.

(c) That a receiver may be appointed to take charge of the administration and management of the affairs and properties of the Sangat pending the present litigation. A separate application is also being made for the same. No valuation for this relief is necessary as in the Court-fees Act only a fixed amount of Rs 18/12/- is provided for the appointment of receiver.

(d) That if the plaintiff be found to be out of possession of the Sangat properties, mentioned in the First and the Second Schedules of this plaint, then possession may also be given over the same which is valued at Rs 37,920, and

(e) That the costs of the suit may be granted to the plaintiff

3. The facts with which the plaintiff came to Court put briefly are as follows -

On the 25th December 1940, the plaintiff was installed as Mahant of Udasin Sangat, Daraganj, Allahabad city and from that time he administered the affairs of the Sangat till the 5th April 1950. On 5th April 1950, the plaintiff was arrested by the Daraganj Police, Allahabad city and was lodged in Naini Central Jail lock-up as an under-trial prisoner in connection with certain criminal cases but was finally released on the 6th March, 1952 after obtaining acquittals. The defendant is the Mahant of another Udasin Sangat at Amritsar. When he heard of the arrest of the plaintiff, he came down to Allahabad and with the intention of usurping the plaintiff's Mahantship, interviewed him in Jail and made such representations to him as were calculated to create fear in the mind of the plaintiff. He represented to the plaintiff that the criminal cases against him were very serious and unless properly defended, they might end in conviction. He also offered financial help for the parvi of the cases as well as to properly administer the affairs of the Sangat during the absence of the plaintiff in Jail. The plaintiff was extremely puzzled and on account of the distress in his mind, he could not exercise any foresight. The result was that he was readily led away by the representations of the defendant and reposed confidence in him. The defendant, however, played deception on the plaintiff. It was suggested by the defendant that with a view to raise money for the parvi in the criminal cases and with a view to properly administer and manage the affairs of the Sangat and its properties, the plaintiff should appoint the defendant by means of a registered deed as his managing agent during his absence, and that he would render accounts to him when the plaintiff returned from jail and would further hand over the management to the plaintiff. Placed under the circumstances as the plaintiff was he agreed to the proposal of the defendant and appointed him as his managing agent on the 11th January, 1951, by signing a deed of appointment which was got prepared by the defendant outside the jail on the 10th January 1951. The defendant never intended, in fact to help the plaintiff in the time of difficulty but his real intention was to usurp the gaddi.

The signature of the plaintiff was obtained on the document without allowing the plaintiff to have knowledge of its contents or without allowing the plaintiff to appreciate the implications thereof. The recitals made in that document are false and fraudulent. At any rate, the clause in the deed which was to the effect that Mahant Mandeoji Mahant Akhara Kashiwala had all the rights and that he could manage the affairs of this institution in any way he liked, and that after the acquittal of the plaintiff, it would be in the option of Mahant Mandeoji either to return the Mahantship to the plaintiff or to decide the matter in any way he liked, was fraudulently inserted in the deed and was never brought to the knowledge of the plaintiff. The plaintiff never intended to relinquish or release his rights, title and interest relating to the office of Mahantship, Daraganj Sangat in favour of the defendant. Seven days after the document was prepared, it was presented for registration in the office of the Sub-Registrar, Allahabad on the 18th January, 1951. The plaintiff was brought from jail to the office of the Sub-Registrar in police custody. The Sub-Registrar read over the deed to the plaintiff. When the plaintiff found its language ambiguous and confusing he immediately made a statement before the Sub-Registrar and got the same incorporated in the registration endorsement, to the effect, that on being released from jail, he would get back his right of ownership with power to keep the management in his own hands or to appoint any other person for the purpose. When the plaintiff was released from jail on the 6th March 1952, he attempted to get back possession from the defendant but the defendant refused to hand over possession to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, thereafter, served a registered notice dated 12th April 1952 on the defendant. In reply to that notice, the defendant stated that he became full fledged Mahant of the Daraganj Sangat under the deed mentioned above. The deed did not express the real intention of the plaintiff and most of its contents are against the intention of the plaintiff.

4. On such allegations, the plaintiff prayed for the reliefs which have been mentioned above and filed the suit in forma pauperis.

5. The suit was contested by the defendant. He filed a written statement traversing most of the allegations in the plaint. It was, however, admitted that the plaintiff was in management of the property till the 5th April 1950. According to the defendant, the Math called Chhota Udasin Sangat Gaddi Baba Mela Ram is a branch of Akhara Kashiwala of Amritsar which had similar branches at Banaras, Bindraban, Rameshwaram and other places. The Mahant of Amritsar Math is the Shri Mahant of all its branches and exercised controlling influence over all the Maths and has power to appoint and remove Mahants. Mahant Charandeo was the last Mahant of Daraganj Sangat, who was appointed by Shri Mahanth Hargyandeo, the then Mahant of Amritsar Math. Mahant Charandeo died on 5th December 1940 and at that time, the defendant was the Mahant of Amritsar Math.

6. On learning of the death of Mahant Charandeo, the defendant came to Daraganj Sangat with a view to appoint a successor to the deceased Mahant. According to the custom prevailing in all the Udasin Sangats, it was not necessary that the Gaddi should go from Guru to the eldest chela or to any chela of the previous Mahant. It was open to the Shri Mahant to appoint any Sadhu of the Guru Sampradaya to which the parties belonged. The plaintiff did not and could not succeed to the Gaddi of the Sangat on the death of Mahant Charandeo as of right. The defendant, however, appointed the plaintiff the Mahant of the Daraganj Sangat on 14th April 1942 when the plaintiff executed a deed of agreement. The fact that the Daraganj Sangat was a branch of the Amritsar Math and that the Mahantship was to be given by Shri Mahant was admitted in the said agreement. The agreement showed that such a Mahant was to be of good conduct and was not to marry nor was he entitled to transfer the Math property in any manner. It was also conceded in the agreement that the Mahant would be liable to be removed from the Gaddi in case he went against practices prevailing in the Sangat or against the terms of his appointment given in the agreement. On being thus appointed the Mahant of Daraganj Sangat, the plaintiff obtained possession of the Sangat property. The plaintiff filed a copy of that agreement in the Municipal Board, Allahabad and obtained the mutation of his name in respect of the properties attached to the Sangat. For many years, the defendant had no occasion to come down to Allahabad, but it appeared to the defendant that the plaintiff had taken to bad ways, soon after his appointment, as Mahant. He had started wasting and alienating the properties belonging to the Math. He had sold away, by means of various sale deeds, a number of houses belonging to the Sangat. The defendant then gives a list of the houses or parts of houses alleged to have been thus sold away by the plaintiff.

7. After the year 1948, complaints were made to the defendant about the way of life of the plaintiff and also about mismanagement of the Math and its properties. It was also communicated to the defendant that the plaintiff got himself married and was further under police surveillance. The defendant was also informed that the plaintiff had been arrested on serious charges of dacoity and other offences. It, therefore, became necessary for the defendant to come down to Allahabad in order to find out the state of affairs existing in the Sangat. He discovered that the Guru Samadhi and Guru Gaddi for worship and Puja Pratishtha of Baba Shri Chandraji was really occupied by people of wholly undesirable character, not only males but females as well. On making enquiry, the defendant came to know that the reputation of the Sangat had gone to gutters and the defendant, therefore, realised that the only possible method of regaining the reputation of the Sangat was by removing the plaintiff from Mahantship and by turning out the people who were then occupying the Sangat premises, and further by bringing back the Sadhus after making suitable arrangements for their residence and feeding. The defendant at once proceeded to assume the management of the Sangat and its properties and to remove the plaintiff from the Gaddi and from the possession of the properties of the Sangat. This the defendant is said to have done by the 10th May 1950. The defendant then met the plaintiff in jail and informed him of his removal and the action taken by the defendant. The defendant then approached the Municipal Board of Allahabad for removal of the name of the plaintiff from the Sangat properties and for mutation of his own name in its place. The defendant proposed not to appoint any other Mahant of the Gaddi till the affairs were brought back to their former condition and the reputation of the Sangat re-established.

8. With regard to the deed of relinquishment, the case of the defendant was that such a deed was necessary as the Municipal Board wanted a formal document showing that the possession of the properties had been given to the defendant and that the plaintiff had ceased to be in possession thereof. When defendant saw the plaintiff in jail for the first time the plaintiff pleaded for mercy, but finding that of no avail, the plaintiff pleaded for his wife and the two children to be permitted to remain and be maintained by the Sangat at least till the plaintiff returned from jail. To this proposal, the defendant agreed. The deed of relinquishment was not brought about by fraud or undue influence or inducement of any kind. The statement that the plaintiff had made at the time of registration was entirely at the instance of the people who were interested in not allowing new management to come into existence in the Sangat. Whenever, the de-defendant had occasion to have a talk with the plaintiff in jail, it was always in the presence of jail officials and there could be no possibility of practising or exercising any fraud or undue influence. It is incorrect that the document was executed for the purpose of the management of the Sangat properties during the absence of the plaintiff in jail or was for the purpose of raising money for the prosecution of plaintiff's case. Both under the prevailing custom as well as under the terms of the agreement, the defendant had absolute right to appoint and remove a Mahant and to make arrangement for the management and up-keep of the Sangat and its properties. The income of the Sangat was to be spent in the worship and the feeding of the Sadhus. The main source of the income of the Sangat was from rent of the various houses owned by the Sangat. Soon after the plaintiff assumed management, income from property diminished considerably. This was so not only on account of transfers made by the plaintiff but also on account of neglect and disrepair of the Sangat properties. The defendant spent large sums of money in improving the property and the income as a result thereof increased. The defendant would have to be involved in various litigations for the recovery of the properties transferred by the plaintiff. Worship in the Sangat had been resumed and Sadhus had again come back to the Sangat. The plaintiff did not have any right to transfer any property of the Sangat and the management of the plaintiff had proved extremely detrimental to the interest of the Sangat. The plaintiff did not have the right to claim back the management. Further, in case the plaintiff reverts to the management, the transfers made by him would remain unchallenged. This again would be a further loss to the Sangat. The income from the properties was quite sufficient for all its legitimate purposes. There was absolutely no necessity at all for the plaintiff to dispose of any property of the Sangat. The defendant was entitled to remove the plaintiff from Mahantship and the plaintiff was no more entitled to get back either the Mahantship of the Sangat or possession of its properties. The removal of the plaintiff having been legally and finally effected, he ceased to have any right in the Sangat except that of an ordinary Sadhu of the Sampradaya. The plaintiff in view of his action and conduct had completely disentitled himself from claiming the relief set out in the plaint. Some of the items of the properties in Schedule II of the plaint were not found when the defendant took over the management and in case they did exist, the plaintiff is clearly accountable for the same to the Sangat.

9. On behalf of the plaintiff, attempt was made to file a replication but from the vernacular order-sheet of the court below dated 4th February 1954, it appears that the court did not accept the same, because on behalf of the defendant objection was raised to the filing of the same. On such pleadings, the learned Civil Judge, framed the following issues—

1 Whether the deed of relinquishment dated 10th January 1951 was got executed from the plaintiff by fraud and undue influence as alleged by him? If so, its effect?

2 Whether the plaintiff was appointed Mahant of the Udasin Sangat by the defendant in terms of the agreement dated 14th April 1942 as alleged by the defendant? If so its effect?

3 Whether the Sangat in question is the branch of Akhara Kashwala of Amritsar as alleged by the defendant? If so, has the defendant a right of appointment or removal of the Mahant of this Sangat?

4 Has the defendant removed the plaintiff from the office of Mahant as alleged by him? If so, its effect?

5 Whether the property of Schedule II of the plaint existed and came in possession of the defendant as alleged by the plaintiff?

6 Whether defendant is liable to render accounts to the plaintiff? If so, in respect of which item of the property?

7. To what relief if any is the plaintiff entitled?

10. On Issue No. I, the learned Civil Judge took the view that what was agreed upon between the parties was that the plaintiff would execute a deed of management in favour of the defendant at the instance of the latter so that he could raise money from the Sangat properties and defend the plaintiff in the criminal cases pending against him. The defendant later on got a deed of relinquishment prepared on his own instructions without giving opportunity to the plaintiff to know really that he was relinquishing his right of Mahantship and the defendant got the signature of the plaintiff on the said deed. The plaintiff relying on the defendant that he would get the deed of management prepared as agreed upon between them, put his signature on the said deed knowing that it was the same about which there had been an agreement between the parties. The deed, therefore, is tainted with fraud and undue influence and is liable to be set aside at the instance of the plaintiff. The learned Civil Judge further found that the deed was also invalid on the ground that although it was in effect a gift-deed, it was not attested by two witnesses as required by Section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The learned Civil Judge then held that the head of a Math did not have the right to alienate his office by sale, gift or will, nor could he appoint a successor unless authorised to do so by the deed of endowment or the usage of the institution. Alienation by way of gift or will of a religious or secular office without receiving any consideration was, however, permitted in favour of a person standing next in the line of succession. In this case, however, the learned Civil Judge found that the defendant Mahant Mandeo could not be said to be a person standing next in the line of succession. He could not be the successor of the plaintiff. No relinquishment of the office of Mahantship, therefore, could be validly made in favour of the defendant. This according to the learned Civil Judge was a further reason for coming to the conclusion that the deed of relinquishment is not binding on the plaintiff.

11. Issues Nos. 2 and 3 were dealt with together and although there is no definite finding on issue No. 3, during the course of discussion of those two issues, the learned Civil Judge has observed that from the deed of agreement dated 14th April 1942, it would appear that the Sangat of Daraganj was branch of Akhara Kashiwala Amritsar and was connected with the latter in that capacity. In respect of issue No. 2, the learned Civil Judge recorded the finding that the plaintiff was not appointed the Mahant of Daraganj Sangat by the defendant. On issue No. 4, the Court came to the conclusion that it was not proved that the defendant had removed the plaintiff as alleged by him. Issue No. 5 is said to have not been pressed and on issue No. 6, the Court below found that the defendant was liable to render accounts to the plaintiff.

12. As a result of its finding, the Court below decreed the plaintiff's suit for setting aside the deed dated 11th January 1951; for the ejectment of the defendant from Daraganj Sangat property mentioned in Schedule I of the plaint; for injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's management of the Sangat in suit and its properties and for rendition of accounts during the period from 11th January 1951 till possession was delivered to the plaintiff over the Sangat property. It appointed Sri Bal Mukund, Vakil Commissioner for the purpose of taking accounts. It also directed that a copy of the decree be sent to the Sub-Registrar in whose office the deed dated 11th January 1951 had been registered under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act. Court-fee was directed to be recovered by the State Government from the defendant and a copy of the decree was ordered to be forwarded to the Collector, Allahabad under Rule 14 Order 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

13. The first question in order of importance which needs consideration in this appeal is whether the deed of relinquishment dated 10th January 1951 was obtained from the plaintiff by practising fraud or by exercise of undue influence as alleged by the plaintiff. The specific fraud pleaded by the plaintiff is to the effect that although the plaintiff had agreed to execute a deed of management with a view to give the power of management to the defendant to look after the Sangat and its property during the absence of the plaintiff in jail, the defendant fraudulently got a deed of relinquishment executed without bringing the contents thereof to the knowledge of the plaintiff. As regards undue influence, the case of the plaintiff is that as he was in a distressed state of mind on account of his being in the lock up in connection with certain criminal cases and as it was necessary to raise fund to defend himself in those criminal cases and as the defendant promised to help the plaintiff in that matter and also to look after the management of the Sangat and the properties in his absence, the plaintiff was left with no option but to repose confidence in the defendant and to act upon his instructions. With a view to find out whether it was really a deed of management that was intended to be executed by the plaintiff, it is necessary to consider the contents of the terms of that deed. A certified copy of that deed is marked Ex. 1 in this case. The recital in the deed relevant for the purpose is as follows:—

"arsa chand mah se mere chand dushmanon ne ranjishan mujhe ek mukadma faujdari men phansa ker giraftar karadiya hai aur zer hirsat hoon lihaza intezam asthan Chhota Udasi Daraganj me khalal waqe ho raha hai aur aenda bhi nuksan hone ka andesha hai niz yeh bhi andesha hai ki mere badkhwahan kisi hele se jaedad manqula wa ghairmanqula asthan mazkoor ko bhi nuksan pahncia wen jiski waja Nirvan Melaram sampati ko nuqsan hoga lihaza bakheyal intezam was tahaffuz jaedad Asthan Chhota Udasi Daraganj jo Nirvan Melaram sampati chal aur achal hai us se dast bardar hota hoon — Mahant Mandeoji, Mahant of Akhara Kashiwala Jinko asthan mazkoor ke mutalliq pura akhtiyar hasil hai woh jis taur se munasib samjhe uska intezam kare bad mere mukadma faujdari se bari hone per Mahant Mandeoji mazkoor chahe to mujhe mahanti wapas dewe ya jis taur se chahe faisla nirnain kare."

14. The necessity for the execution of the deed is, therefore, said to have arisen on account of the fact that the plaintiff had been wrongly involved in criminal cases and was under detention on account of which circumstance proper management of the Asthan Chhota Udasi Daraganj and its properties was not possible. The purpose for executing the deed is said to be "bakhoyal intezam aur intanafluz jaedad Asthan Chhota Udasi Daraganj" i.e., to say for the management and maintenance of the Asthan, and its properties. Although this is said to be the purpose for executing the deed, it proceeds illogically to say "is se dast bardar bota hoon". Relinquishment was hardly necessary for fulfilling the purpose for which the document purports to have been executed, namely, proper management and maintenance of the property of the Asthan. Such purpose could logically be fulfilled by making arrangement for management and maintenance of the Asthan during the absence of the plaintiff. In spite of the use of the words "dast bardar" in the deed, the contents of the same do suggest that the idea behind the transaction was to make some effective arrangement for the proper management, upkeep and maintenance of the Asthan and its properties.

Further, the contents noted above go to suggest that the parties were contemplating to revert the plaintiff to the Asthan after his release from the jail or acquittal from criminal cases. In case, it was really intended to be a complete relinquishment of the office, the question of the plaintiff reverting to the Asthan really could not arise. Such a contemplation can very well fit in with an arrangement for the purpose of proper management, maintenance and upkeep of the Asthan during the absence of the plaintiff. The real intention of the parties is to be judged from the contents of the document as a whole and not from the use of any specific word or phrase therein. Reading the document as a whole, we do not find it possible to say that the appreciation of the contents and terms of the document made by the learned Civil Judge, is not correct. We agree with the learned Civil Judge that the tenor of the deed thus suggests that the real intention of the plaintiff was to make arrangement for the management of the Sangat and its properties during his absence.

15. The plaintiff made an attempt to clarify his intention when he made statement before the Sub-Registrar at the time of registration of the deed. It is unfortunate that the Sub-Registrar has not been examined as a witness in this case. The exact language used by the Sub-Registrar for indicating the objection of the plaintiff is as follows —

"Muqr Mahant Yaduvans Deo ne bayan kiya ki Mukadma se bari hone ke bad mere malkana mere ko wapaa kar diya jae — intezam kar chahe ap rahe ya aur kisi ko mukarrar kare."

The manner in which the Sub-Registrar had made a note of that objection is highly unsatisfactory. Ordinarily one would think that the whole statement that the plaintiff might have made before the Registrar would read something like this —

"mujh se veh tal hua tha ki mukadma se bari hone ke bad mera malkana mujhe wapaa kiya jawa"

The way in which the Sub-Registrar has reproduced the objection gives the impression that the plaintiff was making a prayer to the Sub-Registrar himself to return his malkana to him after his acquittal in the criminal cases. That, the plaintiff, could not do. We are, therefore, of the opinion that absolute reliance on the language used by the Sub-Registrar for noting down the protest of the plaintiff cannot be placed. There was also some controversy between the parties before us whether the words used by the Sub-Registrar are "rahe" or "rahen" and "kare" or "karen". That difference in the language, however, is not very material. What is obvious is this that after the contents of the deed were read over to the plaintiff by the Sub-Registrar as admitted by the plaintiff, the plaintiff did raise an objection to the contents of the deed and, that, that objection did relate to the question whether the contemplation of the parties was that the plaintiff on his acquittal in criminal case was to revert as a Mahant and to take possession and control of the Asthan and the properties or not. It is, therefore, clear that the plaintiff did indicate that the recitals made in the deed were at least in some sense not in conformity with what had been agreed upon.

If the plaintiff must be visited with the legal consequences of the registration of that deed, the protest raised by him before the Sub-Registrar must be read as a part of contents of the deed that was eventually registered. That episode does lend support to the case of the plaintiff to a certain extent. It is not disputed that the defendant did pay visits to the plaintiff in jail, the defendant did discuss matters relating to the Asthan with the plaintiff in jail, the document was got prepared by the defendant out of jail, and that when the defendant was taken to the office of the Sub-Registrar, he was in police custody. The plaintiff was undoubtedly in a distressed state of mind and, therefore, it was natural that he would welcome the offer of assistance from any quarter during that period. The court below also rightly gave some importance to the consideration, that immediately after his release from custody, the plaintiff started his attempts to get back possession of the Asthan and the properties. There is absolutely no proof of the fact that the statement given by the plaintiff before the Sub-Registrar was really at the instance of any other person as suggested on behalf of the defendant.

16. The circumstances mentioned above would by themselves not have led us to the conclusion in favour of the plaintiff, had it not been for the existence of certain other circumstances in the case which we now propose to discuss. The representations made in the deed of relinquishment do not fit in even with the state of affairs, which, according to defendant's own case, existed on that date. It may be recalled that according to the case of the defendant, the plaintiff had already been removed from the office of Mahant, and possession of the Asthan and its properties had already been taken by the defendant on the 10th May 1950. On the date when the deed of relinquishment was executed and registered, the plaintiff, according to the case of the defendant, was neither the Mahant, nor was he in possession and control of the management and properties of the Asthan. The plaintiff, therefore, on that date had no rights to relinquish and was not in possession of the Asthan and its properties to be handed over to the defendant.

There is no explanation on behalf of the defendant to explain the anomaly of this position. The only explanation that has been offered on behalf of the defendant is that a deed of relinquishment was necessitated because, the Municipal Board authorities would not record the defendant's name in the Municipal register unless a deed had been obtained from the plaintiff. There is no difficulty in rejecting the explanation at once. The Municipal Board was not at all concerned with the question of right and title to immovable property. It had only to find out as to who was in possession of the properties in question. Consent of the recorded owner, namely, the plaintiff would have been sufficient to compel the Municipal authorities to record the name of the defendant. Such a consent could validly be communicated through a letter or by means of some power of attorney. It is unthinkable that the name of the defendant could not be recorded in the Municipal register without there being in existence a regular and duly registered deed of relinquishment by the plaintiff. If the defendant had already dispossessed the plaintiff and had taken possession of the properties, there is no explanation why this real state of affairs was suppressed in the deed of relinquishment. Not only was that state of affairs suppressed but diametrically opposite state of affairs was shown to exist. It is, therefore, clear that the representations made in the deed of relinquishment do not really represent the true state of affairs that was in existence at that time.

It may be that this Court today after investigation comes to the conclusion that the case of the defendant, that he had removed the plaintiff from the office and had taken possession of the properties, is not correct. But so far as the defendant is concerned according to him on the date when the deed of relinquishment was executed, such was the then existing state of affairs. Our suspicion against the validity of the deed of relinquishment is further strengthened by the consideration of the conduct of the defendant himself. It may be noted here that when Mahant Charandeoji died, the defendant made an application before the Municipal Board seeking his name to be recorded in place of the name of Mahant Charandeoji deceased. A copy of that application has been filed and has been marked as Ex. 21. It is dated 22nd March, 1942. In the first paragraph of that application, it has been said that the houses, the numbers of which were given above were the property of new Akhara and Mahant Gur Charandeo Udas was holding the same as a representative of the Naya Akhara. The second paragraph says that Mahant Gur Charan Deo died and that the said houses had, therefore, passed on to the representative of the Akhara i.e., the petitioner. In the third paragraph, it is urged that the petitioner was the nearest heir "chela" of the Mahant and was entitled to the mutation of his name in respect of the houses. In the fourth paragraph, it has been said that there was no person at Allahabad who could claim the right. In the fifth paragraph, it has been said that it was the recognised custom amongst the Udas that the Chela who was nearest in degree and who was recognised in the Panchayat of Mahant, could succeed to the property of outgoing Mahant, and in the sixth and last paragraph, it has been said that Yadubans Deo (the plaintiff) was neither a chela of the Mahant nor did he have any right to the properties in question.

17. When the defendant was in the witness-box, he was confronted with this application. He conceded that he was not disciple of Guru Charandeo. He asserted that he had not described himself as the chela of Guru Charandeo in any application. He admitted that on 22nd March, 1942, he had filed an application in English in the municipality for getting his name recorded against the Sangat property. The contents of the application were then translated to the witness in vernacular, and the witness admitted that he had filed an application to that effect. He went on to say that he was the nearest heir of Mahant Charan Deo on account of his being a Shri Mahant, but that he was not a chela nor was he, his nearest heir on account of his being a chela. He then proceeded to add that he did not get himself described as chela. He, however, did not recollect by whom he got the application written out. He did not know whether the scribe was a friend of Yadubansh Deo Mahant. He continued that he got it mentioned in the application that Yaduvansh Deo was not the disciple of Charandeoji. He then proceeded to say that ten or twenty days before the execution of the agreement of 1942, he came to know for the first time that Yaduvansh Deo Mahant was a disciple of Charandeoji. It is, therefore, not possible to give credit of truthfulness to the defendant. We further agree with the learned Civil Judge that the deed of relinquishment cannot be given effect to as a gift for want of attestation according to law as well as on account of the fact that the relinquishment of the office of Mahantship could not be made in favour of a person other than the person who would be next entitled to succeed.

17A We are, therefore of the opinion that the finding arrived at by the learned Civil Judge that the deed of relinquishment is tainted with fraud and undue influence is correct and the deed is therefore, liable to be set aside and quashed.

18 The next question that arises for consideration in this appeal is as to what really is the effect of the agreement dated 14th April 1942, arrived at between the plaintiff and the defendant. The original agreement has been filed in this case by the defendant and has been marked Ex. A 5. It is necessary to quote some portions of the actual language used in that document. It has been executed by Mahant Yaduvansh Deo (plaintiff) chela of Mahant Charandeo. It begins - by reciting -

"Jo ke mere Guru Mahant Charandeo Ji Marhoom ka bal-kunth vas 5 December 1941 ho gaya (it is agreed by the parties that the correct year is 1940 and not 1941) choorki mere guru ke taluqqat devon... samperdai Mahant Mandeo Ji Chela Harbans Deoji ke akhara Kashiwala... This document is an unregistered one. Both the language and the import of the document are vague and full of mistakes. It may be recalled that the case of the defendant is that the plaintiff was for the first time appointed the Mahant of Daraganj Asthan by means of the above agreement. On the other hand, the case of the plaintiff is that he had already been duly appointed Mahant on the death of Mahant Charandeo Ji being his only chela. The tenor of the document, however, suggests that the plaintiff who had described himself, in this document as Mahant Yadubansh Deo had already become the Mahant of the Daraganj Asthan when this agreement was executed. At any rate, it is clear that there is nothing in the language of the same which suggests that it was by means of this document that the plaintiff was appointed the Mahant of the Daraganj Asthan for the first time. It is equally clear from the materials on the record that according to the custom of the institution, it was the chela of the outgoing Mahant who would ordinarily succeed to the Gaddi. The case of the defendant to the contrary does not appear to be correct. Had it not been so, the defendant would not have felt it necessary to say in his application dated 22nd March, 1942 (Ex. 21) which he had filed before the Municipal Board, Allahabad to which we have already made a reference earlier, that he was the nearest heir (Chela) of the Mahant and entitled to the mutation of his name in respect of the houses. He realised that in order to succeed to the Gaddi on the death of Gur Charan Deo, it was necessary that the aspirant should be his chela. It is not in controversy now that the plaintiff is the chela of Mahant Gur Charan Deo, although in his application (Ex. 21), the defendant had falsely alleged that Mahant Yadubansh Deo was neither the chela of the Mahant Gur Charan Deo, nor had he any right to the property. It has not been suggested why the plaintiff as the sole chela of the deceased Mahant could not succeed to the Gaddi on the death of his Guru, Gur Charan Deo. In view of such circumstances, we are of the opinion that the case of the defendant that the plaintiff was appointed Mahant of Daraganj Asthan by means of this agreement, is not correct. On the other hand, we find that the plaintiff had already been appointed Mahant of the Asthan when this deed of agreement dated 14th April 1942 was executed.

19. The other recital in the agreement is that there were some sort of talluqat between Mahant Gur Charan Deo and Mahant Mandeo (defendant) of Akhara Kashiwala at Amritsar. What was the extent of the connection and what powers did the defendant have over the affairs of the Daraganj asthan on account of this connection, are not at all clear from the recitals of the agreement. The mere use of the word "talluqat" at any rate, does not establish that the Daraganj Asthan is a branch of which the parent institution is Akhara Kashiwala of Amritsar. On the recital in this agreement, therefore, it cannot be said that the Daraganj Asthan has been shown to be a branch of Akhara Kashiwala of Amritsar. It is also not clear from the language of the agreement whether Mahant Mandeo the defendant and the Mahant of Akhara Kashiwala at Amritsar had the power to remove the Mahant of Daraganj Asthan. It may also be noted in this connection that beyond the uncorroborated testimony of the defendant, there is no reliable evidence to prove that the Daraganj Asthan is really a branch of the parent Math at Amritsar or that Shri Mahant of Amritsar has the power to appoint and remove the Mahant of the Daraganj Sangat.

20. Mahant Mandeo in the witness-box stated that he was Sri Mahant of Naya Akhara Kashiwala Amritsar; that that Akhara was established by Sri Nirwana Mela Ram Udasin; that Daraganj Sangat is its branch; that there are other branches also; that his Guru was Sri Mahant Harbans Deo; whose Guru was Mahant Tarun Deo; that Daraganj Sangat was also established by Mela Ram; that the property of all the branches of Naya Akhara Amritsar belonged to Naya Akhara, Kashiwala, Amritsar and that

Shri Mahant of Amritsar has got a right to appoint and remove the Mahants of the Sangats and the branches. This statement of the defendant has not been corroborated by any other independent evidence. It may be that the Daraganj Sangat is a branch of the Amritsar institution but the materials on the record of this case are wholly insufficient to persuade us to give a finding to that effect.

In the absence of evidence, we are bound to hold that it has not been proved in this case that Daraganj Sangat is really a branch of the Amritsar institution Kashiwala or that Sri Mahant of Amritsar has the power to remove the Mahant of the Daraganj Sangat. All that has been recited in the agreement aforesaid is that Mahant Yadubansh Deo will continue have connection with the Amritsar institution. An undertaking has been given in that agreement that he will not marry and that he will maintain proper conduct. There is a further undertaking that the plaintiff will not dissipate the properties of the Sangat nor will alienate the same. It is also recited that in case of breach of conditions 1, 2 and 3 given in the agreement, Mahant Mandeo Ji would have the right to remove him. There is a further term to the effect that if any complaints are made against the plaintiff, it will not be accepted as correct without enquiry.

21. The learned counsel for the respondent has urged that the plaintiff had succeeded to the office of Mahant not by virtue of this agreement but by virtue of the fact that he is the chela of deceased Mahant Charandeo. The terms and conditions given in that agreement, therefore, according to him cannot really be treated as the terms and conditions of his succession to the office of Mahant as the chela of his Guru deceased Mahant Charan Deo. According to him, it was not open to the plaintiff and the defendant to enter into an agreement of this nature which may have the effect of altering or modifying the original terms and conditions of the succession of the plaintiff to the office of Mahant of the Daraganj Asthan. The agreement according to him, cannot have the effect of repealing the original conditions and terms on which the office was held by the plaintiff.

22. In support of his contention, Mr. Ambika Prasad has placed reliance on a decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Krishna Dayal Gir v. Laldhari Gir 40 Ind Cas 276 = (AIR 1917 Pat 382). The facts of that case were that the appellant Mahant Krishna Dayal Gir of Bodh Gaya was the Mahant of a Math of Hindu sect of Girs. That Math was close to Buddhist temple at Bodh Gaya. Mahant Krishna Dayal Gir somehow was also the superintendent of the Bodh Gaya temple. The respondent Laldhari Gir was the Mahant of a Math of the same sect at Village Bakrou, a mile or two away on the other side of the river Phalgu. The appellant claimed that Bakrou Math was a subordinate Math of Bodh Gaya, and that the Mahant of Bodh Gaya was the mahik of all the property of Bakrou Math and that further the Mahant of Bodh Gaya was entitled to appoint and for good cause shown, dismiss the Mahant of Bakrou. It was alleged that as the Mahant of Bakrou had taken to immoral ways, he had been dismissed by Mahant of Bodh Gaya sometime in May 1912. The respondent, however, refused to give possession. On such allegations, the appellant claimed the removal of the respondent and the possession of the Bakrou Math and its properties. The respondent denied all the material allegations of the appellant and all that he admitted was that the Mahant of Bodh Gaya used to take a leading part in the election of the Mahant of Bakrou.

The suit was dismissed by the subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge had found that it had not been proved that the Bakrou Math was in any way subordinate to Bodh Gaya Math or that the respondent had taken to immoral ways. He also found that two agreements of the years 1897 and 1900 on which reliance had been placed by the appellant, had been obtained by undue influence and further that a compromise between the parties in the year 1906 and the decree founded thereon were not binding on the respondents. Chamber, C J surveyed previous decisions relevant to the question which was a question similar to the one that we are now considering in the instant appeal and observed, that those cases illustrated the rule that the head of a religious or charitable institution has no power to bargain away his office or alter the constitution of the institution of which he was in charge. His Lordship proceeded to observe that the right to remove the Mahant of Bakrou Math had never rested with the appellant in the past and he could not acquire that right or take it out of the hands of the Court or other lawful authority by inducing the Mahant for the time being to agree to surrender that right to him.

23 We have already pointed out that independently of the agreement, there is no evidence in this case to show that Sri Mahant of Amritsar had the power to remove the Mahant of the Daraganj Sangat. We have also expressed the view that this agreement itself is not the transaction which brought about the appointment of the plaintiff as Mahant of the Daraganj Sangat. The agreement, therefore, is hit by the principle of law laid down in the case of 40 Ind Cas 276: (AIR 1917 Pat 382) (supra) by the Patna High Court.

24. The above view also finds support from the observations of the Supreme Court made in the case of Abdul Kayum v. Mulla Alibhai, AIR 1963 SC 309. The facts of the case before the Supreme Court were, however, different from the facts of the instant case but it was observed that trustees cannot transfer their duties, functions and powers to some other body of men and create them trustees in their own place unless this is clearly permitted by the trust deed, or agreed to by the entire body of beneficiaries. It was also observed that a person who is appointed a trustee is not bound to accept the trust, but having once entered upon the trust he cannot renounce the duties and liabilities except with the permission of the Court or with the consent of the beneficiaries or by the authority of the trust deed itself. Our reference to observation of the Supreme Court in the aforesaid case, however, should not be taken to mean, that we are equating the status of the Mahant as a trustee simpliciter.

25 It has already been noted that another term of the agreement is, that, in case any complaint against the reigning Mahant of Daraganj Sangat was made to Sri Mahant at Amritsar, the same shall not be accepted as correct without enquiry. The defendant does not claim to have made any enquiries from the plaintiff in respect of any specified complaint although in his written statement, he has alleged that he received complaints. We are, therefore, unable to hold that the recital of the agreement by itself establishes that the Daraganj Sangat is a branch of the Kashiwala institution at Amritsar or that the defendant held the right to remove the plaintiff from the office of Mahant of Daraganj Sangat. We also hold that the plaintiff was not appointed Mahant by the aforesaid agreement but that on the date when the agreement was executed, he was already holding that office. It is, however, not necessary for us to enter into the question as to how and by whom was that appointment made. All that we feel sure of, is that the plaintiff is the sole chela of Charandeo deceased and that according to custom of the institution, he had a right to succeed to the office of Mahant after the death of his Guru Charandeo.

26 The last question that must be considered in this case is whether in spite of the fact that the deed of relinquishment has been found to be not binding on the plaintiff and has been found to be one which is liable to be cancelled and set aside, no decree for possession be passed in favour of the plaintiff, as according to defendant, the plaintiff has forfeited the right to the office on account of his having become patit by marriage and on account of his having committed breach of trust by denying the existence of the trust itself, on account of the fact that he has alienated and transferred some of the trust properties and also on account of the fact that he is guilty of negligence in the performance of his duties as Mahant, and further on account of the fact that he is now placed under police surveillance.

27. On the one hand, it has been urged on behalf of the defendant-appellant that it has been fully established by reliable evidence that the plaintiff has entered into matrimonial alliance in spite of celibacy being a condition precedent for holding the office of Mahant, and that he had procreated two sons; he has dissipated and transferred the properties of the Asthan; and finally that he had denied the very existence of the trust by claiming to be full owner of the properties of the trust. All the above considerations so also the consideration that he is a person who has been kept under police surveillance, according to defendant, result in plaintiff's forfeiting the right to the office of Mahant, and that, therefore, he is not entitled to regain possession over the trust and its properties. It has been further contended that the defendant has also established that the plaintiff has already been removed by the defendant and that possession of the Asthan and its properties had already been taken by the defendant. On the basis of the last mentioned submission, it has been urged that the question of removal of the plaintiff does no more arise.

28. On the other hand, on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent what has been urged is that the defendant has failed to establish the charges brought by him against the plaintiff, and that the defendant has failed to prove that the plaintiff had been removed from the office of Mahant as alleged by the defendant. The last submission in this connection made on behalf of the plaintiff is that the suit giving rise to this appeal, not being one under Section 92 Civil Procedure Code, it is not open to the defendant to ask this Court to remove the plaintiff from the office of Mahant after making enquiries into the charges of misconduct and breach of trust brought against him. Likewise, it has been urged that the plaintiff could be refused a decree for possession over the trust and its properties only after the court has made enquiries into the charges of misconduct and breach of trust brought by the defendant against the plaintiff, and as such an enquiry cannot be made in the present case, this Court cannot refuse to pass a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff. It has then been urged that the defendant is himself not a person who was ever entitled to obtain or retain possession over the Asthan and its properties, and in that view of the matter also, the plaintiff cannot be denied the relief for possession over the Asthan and its properties by dispossessing the defendant.

29. The plea thus raised by the defendant is one of confession and avoidance. It is undoubtedly open to a defendant to raise special defence by raising plea in confession and avoidance. For instance, in a suit on the basis of a contract, it is open to the defendant to admit the contract and the contractual liability and to avoid the effect of that admission by raising the plea of frustration or performance. In that case, it will always be for the defendant to affirmatively establish that the contract had either been frustrated or performed. If the defendant succeeds in doing that, he would certainly be entitled to relief for the obtaining of which such a plea was raised. The Court is bound to consider such a plea of avoidance, provided the Court is competent to go into the questions on which that plea is based in that particular proceeding. In case, a consideration of that plea necessitates going into question which the particular court is not competent to go into in that proceeding, the Court must refuse to entertain that plea or to enquire into those pleas.

So far as the instant case is concerned, it may be borne in mind that this is not a suit under Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. According to that provision, the question whether a particular trust is a public or private trust or whether the trustee or Mahant is guilty of misconduct and breach of trust or the question whether the Mahant has forfeited right to the office on account of misconduct and breach of trust are all questions which have to be gone into in a properly constituted suit under Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Sub-section (2) of Section 92 of the Code lays down:—

"Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863 (or by any corresponding law in force in the territories which, immediately before the 1st November, 1956, were comprised in Part B State), no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in Sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to except in conformity with the provisions of that Sub-section."

Sub-section (2), therefore, makes it clear that a suit for removal of a trustee; or for appointment of a new trustee; or for vesting any property in a trustee; or for directing a trustee who has been removed or a person who has ceased to be a trustee to deliver possession of any trust property in his possession to the person entitled to the possession of such property; or for directing accounts and inquiries, or for declaring what proportion of the trust property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust; or for authorising the whole or any part of the trust property to be let, sold, mortgaged or exchanged, or for settling a scheme, or for granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require, cannot be filed except under Clause (1) of Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

30 The question in this case, however, is whether a special defence raised in a suit, which is not a suit under Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure and which requires the Court to enter into an enquiry of questions which are covered by the provisions of Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure could be entertained and enquired into. We are of the opinion that the principle underlying Section 92 Clauses (1) and (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure is equally applicable to defence also. Our first reason for arriving at that conclusion is that there does not appear to be any rational basis for holding the view that a defence by which a defendant seeks to obtain such relief as can be granted to a plaintiff only in a suit under Section 92, Code of Civil Procedure should not be equally barred in a suit which is not a suit under Section 92 Civil Procedure Code. We are at present not considering the question whether such a defence can or cannot be entertained in a suit, which is a suit under Section 92 Civil Procedure Code as such a question does not arise in this appeal. The other reason for our arriving at the above conclusion is that in our opinion when a plea in confession and avoidance is raised by the defendant, his position is analogous to the position of a plaintiff, particularly in relation to the plea of avoidance. It is for the defendant in such a case to establish the correctness of the plea, and it is only when that is done that he would be entitled to the relief which he seeks by raising that defence.

The relief that the defendant seeks in the instant case by raising that defence is that his possession over the trust and its properties be maintained. In that view of the matter also, we consider that it is not open to us to enter into an enquiry of questions which are required to be gone into in a suit under Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The conclusion at which we have arrived finds support from the decision of this Court in the case of Ram Dayal v. Mt. Saraswati, AIR 1927 All 526. We are, therefore, of the opinion that after having arrived at the finding that the deed of relinquishment is liable to be set aside and cancelled, we cannot refuse a decree for possession to the plaintiff, nor can we enquire into the correctness of the charges of misconduct and breach of trust brought forth by the defendant against the plaintiff in this suit.

31. There is yet another consideration for arriving at the above conclusion. We have already expressed the view that on the materials in this case, it is not established that the defendant was a person who was entitled to remove the plaintiff from the office of Mahant in spite of agreement between the parties, which is relied upon by the defendant. If the defendant himself is not a person who was entitled to obtain and retain possession, after the exit of the plaintiff, there does not appear to be any good reason for refusing a decree for possession over the trust and its properties to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has not been dispossessed by a person holding any better title. The submission such as the one which has been made on behalf of the defendant could have some force in a case where the plaintiff had been dispossessed by a person who was entitled to take and retain possession after the plaintiff had been removed or had ceased to have the right to retain possession.

In case the plaintiff is liable for removal from the office of Mahant on the ground that he has become patit having married himself, or on the ground that he is guilty of breach of trust or on the ground that he is placed under police surveillance, it would certainly be open to persons having interest in the trust, to file a properly constituted suit under Section 92 Code of Civil Procedure after obtaining necessary sanction from the Advocate General of the State, for his removal and for all other reliefs which could possibly be claimed in such a suit. That result cannot be achieved in an indirect manner by raising special plea in defence in this suit, which is not a suit under Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

32. We have next given serious thought to the question whether after arriving at the conclusion at which we have arrived, it would be appropriate for us to enter into enquiry with regard to the correctness of the charges brought by the defendant against the plaintiff in this case. The important consideration for our refusing to enter into those questions in this case is that any finding given by us in respect of those charges may result in some prejudice to the cause of the parties in future.

33. We have, therefore, decided not to enter into those questions in this case and leave them to be decided in a properly constituted suit under Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

34. For all the above reasons, the appeal is liable to be dismissed.

35. The appeal is dismissed and the judgment and decree of the court below are confirmed. The respondent will get the costs of this Court from the appellant.

Court-fee will be recoverable from the defendant as directed by the court below.

V. K. Barman, for Applicant; M. N. Shukla, for Opp. Party.

GANGESHWAR PRASAD, J.:— This application in revision came up before us upon a reference made by Tripathi, J.

2. The relevant facts may be briefly stated. One Ram Lal filed a complaint against Laltu applicant under Section 325 I. P. C. in the court of a Magistrate 1st Class at Kanpur. After recording the statements of some witnesses produced by the complainant, the Magistrate framed against the applicant a charge under Section 325 I. P. C. on 22-1-1963. The Magistrate then fixed 5-2-1963 for recording evidence under Section 256 Cr. P. C., noting in his order that the applicant desired to cross-examine all the witnesses examined by the complainant before the framing of the charge. It appears from the record that on 23-1-1963 the complainant filed a list containing the names of six witnesses proposed to be examined by him under Section 256 Cr. P. C. and the Magistrate ordered summonses to be issued for the said witnesses. The list included the name of one Sri Sinha. Sri Sinha was actually examined on behalf of the applicant on 27-2-1963. On the same day an application was moved before the Magistrate on behalf of the applicant stating that as Sri Sinha had not been named in the list submitted by the complainant under Section 252 Cr. P. C., he could not be examined under S. 256 Cr. P. C., and praying that his evidence be discarded. After hearing arguments on the said application the Magistrate, by his order dated 19-3-1963, held that the complainant was entitled to produce "further evidence under Section 256 Cr. P. C." meaning thereby that he was entitled to produce Sri Sinha although he was not mentioned in the list. Against this order the applicant filed a revision in the court of Session but it was dismissed. Thereupon he came in revision to this Court.

3. The learned single Judge before whom this application originally came up for hearing found a sharp cleavage of Judicial opinion on the meaning of the words "any remaining witnesses for the prosecution" occurring in Section 256 Cr P C., and he, therefore, thought it expedient that the matter be considered by a larger Bench. The main question for determination before us is whether the words "any remaining witnesses for the prosecution" in Section 256 Cr P C refer only to those witnesses whose names have been given by the complainant under Section 252(2) Cr P C., or whether they are comprehensive enough to cover even those witnesses whose names have not been given under the aforesaid provision.

4. The earliest reported case to which reference is found in the authorities dealing with the question is Emperor v Percy Henri Burn, (1909) 11 Bom LR 1153. In that case a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court rejected the contention that the expression "any remaining witnesses" is necessarily limited to those witnesses who, as required by Clause (2) of Section 252 Cr P C., have been named by the complainant and summoned by the Magistrate before the framing of the charge, and held that the expression is wide enough to include any witness who, according to the prosecution is able to support its case, though he has not been summoned provided that he is not sprung upon the defence all of a sudden and sufficient opportunity is given to the latter to prepare for the cross-examination of the witness. In Emperor v Nagindas Narottamdas AIR 1942 Bom 214 another Division Bench of the Bombay High Court expressed the same view regarding the meaning and scope of the expression and referred to the earlier case in support of its view. That view was, however, regarded as no longer acceptable by a learned Judge of that court in State of Bombay v. Janardhan, AIR 1960 Bom 513 a case which arose after the insertion of Clause (1-A) in Section 204 Cr. P. C by Act XXVI of 1955. He certainly referred to AIR 1942 Bom 214, (supra), and felt bound by that decision, but observed that after the introduction of Section 204 (1-A) other sections of the Cr P. C. and in particular Section 256 have to be read along with Section 204 (1-A) and, therefore in cases instituted otherwise than on police report the complainant is restricted to the examination of witnesses whose names are given in the list under Section 204 (1-A). The learned Judge, however, proceeded to say that in proper cases if an application is made the complainant may be permitted to add names to the list given by him under Section 204 (1-A). The Madras High Court in Crown Prosecutor, Madras v C V Ramanujulu Naidu AIR 1944 Mad 169, expressed its agreement with the interpretation given to the expression "any remaining witnesses for the prosecution" in (1909) 11 Bom LR 1153 (supra) and held, that it presumably means the remaining witnesses that the prosecution wishes to examine. The learned Judge who decided the case observed that it seemed to him a general rule of law and equity that the prosecution is at liberty to examine whosoever it pleases until the prosecution case has been closed and that the prosecution case is not closed until the defence begins. In K. Somasundaram v Gopal, AIR 1958 Mad 341 Section 256 Cr P C did not come up for consideration, but Section 204 (1-A) was directly involved and in dealing with that provision the Division Bench which decided the case observed that the phrase "take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" in Sections 244(1) and 252(1) Cr P C. shows the ample powers of the Court in that respect. In State of Mysore v Babasaheb AIR 1959 Mys 238 the Mysore High Court in a case in which the trying Magistrate had rejected the complainant's application to summon additional witnesses under Section 256 Cr. P C., on the ground that the complainant was not entitled to summon and examine any witness that he had not cited in his complaint or included in the list filed by him under Section 252 (2) Cr. P. C., held that the order of the Magistrate was illegal and could not be supported. The learned Judge deciding the case did not refer to the authorities hearing on the point but he expressed the opinion that the words "any remaining witnesses" in Section 256 Cr P C., are wide enough to include any witness who, according to the complainant, is able to give evidence in support of his case. The legal position emerging from the reported decisions of the Nagpur High Court cannot be said to be definite. In Hansraj Harijwan Bhat v Emperor, AIR 1940 Nag 390 Gruer J. preferred the view of the Bombay High Court in (1909) 11 Bom LR 1153 (supra) to the contrary view taken in a case of this court to which we will refer at a later stage, but the observation made by him was that if witnesses have been accepted by the court as competent for the prosecution at any stage before the point for further cross-examination under Section 256 arises, even if that stage is after charge, they come under the category of "any remaining witnesses". It will be noticed that the power of the complainant to produce additional witnesses was held not to be unfettered but to be subject to a very important condition. The question again arose before the Nagpur High Court in Abdul Razak v Han Hussain, AIR 1945 Nag 286 where the observation made in Hansraj Harijwan Bhat AIR 1940 Nag 390 (supra) was quoted apparently with approval and as lending support to the view that the examination of the additional witnesses who were sought to be produced in that case was not permissible. The learned Judge deciding that case also made reference to the still earlier decision of that court in Hajari Tika Lodhi v. Emperor, AIR 1934 Nag 156 in which it had been held that the prosecution was not entitled in law to have an adjournment for the purpose of examining witnesses not named in the Challan and it had been observed that the prosecutor must come with his case fully prepared and there is no section in the Code which authorises him to file a fresh list of prosecution witnesses. In Rewa Chand v. The State, AIR 1955 Raj 113, a Division Bench of the Rajasthan High Court, after referring to the relevant cases and the divergence of opinion, agreed with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in (1909) 11 Bom LR 1153 (supra). The Madhya Pradesh High Court in its Division Bench case of Mst. Sulki v. Mohanlal Adku, AIR 1961 Madh Pra 47, after referring to some of the cases dealing with the question, held that witnesses who had not been named in the list under Section 252 (2) are not covered by the expression "any remaining witnesses" in Section 256 and the complainant has no right to insist upon calling fresh witnesses, although the request of the complainant to call additional witnesses may be considered where justice so requires.

5. Coming now to the cases of this court, we have to first refer to the unreported decision of Allsop J. in Criminal Revn. No. 272 of 1935 (decided on 20-7-1935 (All)). In that case, after the trying Magistrate had issued summonses for the prosecution witnesses who were to be cross-examined, he was requested by the prosecution to examine three other witnesses and he passed orders that they should be examined. It was urged in revision before this court on behalf of the accused that the Magistrate was not competent to pass the above order after the prosecution had intimated, as it had done, that its case was closed. Dealing with the above objection the learned Judge observed:

"In my opinion there is no force in this objection. No doubt, the prosecution after the accused has been called to enter upon his defence are not entitled as of right to summon any further witnesses but there can be no doubt that there is a power in the Magistrate himself to summon any evidence which he has reason to suppose is necessary for the proper decision of the questions which are before him and, indeed, under Section 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure there is a duty cast upon him to see that all relevant and available evidence is produced. It seems to me to make no real difference whether the witnesses are ostensibly summoned as witnesses for the prosecution or as witnesses under the provisions of Section 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I do not think that it can ever be said that an accused person has any right to prevent the production of any evidence which may have a bearing upon the case. He certainly should be given every right to meet it and rebut it if he can, but he cannot insist that any particular witness should not be examined as against him."

The next case of this court is Raghubir Sahai v. Wali Hussain Khan, AIR 1937 All 189 in which the facts were that after the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution was over, the complainant claimed that he could summon an entirely new witness whom he had not previously mentioned. The Magistrate refused to allow the complainant to produce the new witness. Upon a revision filed by the complainant in this court Bennet, J. said:

"It appears to me under Section 252(2) the complainant is required to give a list of prosecution witnesses. Under Section 254 the Magistrate may examine all those witnesses and then frame a charge-sheet or he may frame a charge-sheet before he has examined all those witnesses. If he adopts the latter course and witnesses remained from the list who had not been examined then those witnesses are the remaining witnesses under Section 256(1) and the complainant has a right to produce them after the cross-examination of those witnesses who have been previously examined. But if the Magistrate has examined all the witnesses for the prosecution in the list under Section 252 (2) and has then framed a charge-sheet, in my opinion there are no witnesses remaining who could come under the description in Section 256(1). This view of the law has been taken by Allsop, J. in Emperor v. Madan Gopal (Criminal Revn. No. 272 of 1935 D/- 20-7-1935 (All))."

The third case is Nazim Ali v. Wazir, AIR 1960 All 443 where the Magistrate had not permitted the complainant to examine a witness not mentioned in the list submitted under Section 204 (I-A) Cr. P. C. Upon a reference made by the Sessions Judge for setting aside the order of a Magistrate and permitting the complainant to examine the witness D. S. Mathur, J. accepted the reference and observed:

"The list cannot be held to be such that the complainant cannot be permitted to go beyond the list while adducing his evidence."

The provision involved in that case was Section 204 (I-A), but since it has to be seen whether Section 204 (I-A) Cr. P. C. affects in any manner the interpretation of Section 256 Cr. P. C. the case has a bearing on the question before us. Giriraj

Singh v. State 1964 All LJ 335 (AIR 1965 All 131) is the last case of this court to which reference was made in the course of arguments before us. That was again a case decided by D. S. Mathur, J. and there the learned Judge considered in some detail the provision of Criminal Procedure Code relating to the production and summoning of witnesses in trials before Magistrates. In regard to Sub-section (I-A) of Section 204 Criminal Procedure Code he observed,

"Sub-section (I-A) of Section 204 Criminal Procedure Code does lay down that no summons or warrant shall be issued against the accused under sub-section (I) unless a list of the prosecution witnesses has been filed. But the subsequent provisions do not disentitle the complainant or prosecutor from examining witnesses outside the list."

Referring then to Section 244 Cr P C whose Sub-section (1) has words similar to those used in Section 252(1) Cr P C the learned Judge said

"The words 'as may be produced in support of the prosecution' used in Section 244(1) and the word 'any' used in Section 244(2) are general and shall include witnesses not cited in the list furnished under Section 204 (I-A) Cr P C."

Proceeding further, he also observed,

"Section 252(1) Cr P C has been worded on the lines of Section 244 (1) Cr P C, and it is nowhere laid down that the Magistrate can examine only such witnesses who are cited by the complainant in the aforementioned list (the list furnished under Sub-section (I-A) of Section 204 Cr P C.)" (Words in brackets ours)

6. We will now refer to the two cases in which the question received an elaborate treatment that also covered the history of the legislation relating to the subject. Diametrically opposite views in regard to the meaning of expression "any remaining witnesses" were taken in those cases. The first is a Full Bench case, Heman Ram v. Emperor, AIR 1945 Lah 201 (FB) in which Munir, J. delivering the judgment of the Bench agreed with the view of Bennet, J. in AIR 1937 All 189 (supra) and observed

"When the names of all the witnesses for the prosecution have been ascertained by the complainant or the officer in charge of prosecution giving the list of witnesses or by producing them in court, and by the Magistrate performing the function imposed on him by Section 252 (2) Cr P C no fresh witnesses can be examined by the prosecution as of right after the charge is framed and the only power left in the Magistrate to examine other witnesses for the prosecution under Section 540 of the Code under which he has a discretion in the matter"

The second case is Hadi Bandhu Misra v. King, AIR 1950 Orissa 245 in which Ray C. J. dissented from the view expressed in the abovementioned Full Bench decision of the Lahore High Court and said that he was entirely in accord with the view of Sir John Beaumont C. J. in Nagindas Narottamdas Gandhi, AIR 1942 Bom 214 (supra) where he held that the learned Sessions Judge was wrong in thinking that remaining witnesses means (in Section 256) those who were in the list of witnesses who could have been examined by the prosecution in the first instance but were not actually examined under Section 252 and observed

"It seems to me that there is no justification for limiting the words in that sense. I think that Section 256 clearly enabled the Crown (prosecution) to examine witnesses who have not been examined and whose names have not been disclosed before the charge was framed."

7. This is a resume of all the cases which were cited before us. They, indeed, disclose a sharp conflict of opinion. Upon an examination of the relevant provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure however, we venture to think that they furnish a clear answer to the question before us and that answer is also in consonance with principles which are fundamental to all trials.

8. Chapter XXI of the Code which deals with the trial of warrant cases by a Magistrate begins with Section 251. The section provides that the Magistrate shall in any case instituted upon police report follow the procedure specified in Section 251-A, and in any other case the procedure specified in the other provisions of the Chapter. The procedure relating to cases instituted otherwise than upon police report is therefore, contained in Ss 252 to 259. Section 252 the first in this group opens with a recognition in Sub-section (1) of the right of the complainant, if any to be heard and to produce all such evidence as may support his case. In fact, the Sub-section is cast in the form of an obligation making it imperative for the Magistrate to hear the complainant, if any and to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution. The imperative nature of the obligation contained in sub-s (1) becomes emphasised in the proviso to that sub-section which says that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a court. The proviso thus clearly indicates that the word "shall" in Sub-section (1), which governs "hear the complainant" and also "take all such evidence", makes the Magistrate "bound" to carry out the directions of the sub-section except only in cases and to the extent specified in the proviso. The provision contained in Subsection (1) of Section 252 is, therefore, the key provision in the Code as to the right of the complainant to produce evidence and the duty of the Magistrate to take it, and all other provisions dealing with that matter in the above group of sections have to be read in the light of the aforesaid sub-section. Sub-section (2) of Section 252 does not in any manner limit the right recognized and the obligation imposed by sub-section (1) and it is not possible to read it as restrictive of sub-section (1). Sub-section (2) is really subservient to sub-section (1) and is designed to further its object, inasmuch as it imposes a further obligation upon the Magistrate of ascertaining from the complainant or otherwise the names of any persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution and of summoning such of them as he thinks necessary. Sub-section (1) only requires the taking of all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution, and that requirement does not become fully effective unless the Magistrate is also required to employ the machinery of the court for securing the attendance of witnesses who are able to give the evidence. The latter requirement is contained in sub-section (2). The ascertainment from the complainant of the name of any person likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution also serves the very salutary purpose of acquainting the accused with the names of persons likely to be examined as witnesses for the prosecution; but there is nothing in it which may have the effect of curtailing the right conferred upon the complainant or the duty imposed upon the Magistrate by sub-section (1). The statutory effect of the non-disclosure by the complainant of the name of a witness under sub-section (2) of Section 252 is only this that the Magistrate is not bound under that provision to summon such witness to give evidence, but the right of production of such witness is not affected thereby. The right to produce a witness and the right to have him summoned or, speaking in terms of the Court, the duty to take the evidence of a particular witness and the duty to summon him for evidence are not identical things and should not be confused.

9. We may refer in this connection by way of analogy, to Sections 207-A, 211, 216 and 291, Cr. P. C. Sub-section (9) of Section 207-A requires the accused in an inquiry under Chapter XXI of the Code to give orally or in writing a list of the witnesses whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on his trial and Sub-section (11) of the section makes it the duty of the Magistrate to summon such witnesses, subject to the provisos added thereto. Similarly Section 211 makes provision for the giving of a list of witnesses by the accused and Section 216 makes it obligatory for the Magistrate to summon them, subject to its proviso. Section 291 then lays down that the accused shall be allowed to examine any witness not previously named by him if such witness is in attendance, but he shall not, except as provided in Sections 207-A, 211 and 231, be entitled of right to have any witness summoned other than the witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate. It is true that the trial court has under Section 540 the power to summon a witness, even when no list has been given under Section 207-A (9) or Section 211 or when the witness is outside the list, and it has also the duty to summon and examine him if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case. But the power and the duty of the court in the above respect are different from the right of the accused, as the words "to be entitled of right" in Section 291 clearly show. The right to produce a witness does not, therefore, necessarily include the right to have summoned if the statute specifically provides as to when and how witnesses have to be summoned.

10. Reverting then to Chapter XXI with which we are concerned in the present case, we find that the Code has there too provided what witnesses shall be summoned by the Magistrate in the course of the trial before him. Sub-section (2) of Section 252 makes it incumbent upon the Magistrate to summon such of the witnesses ascertained from the complainant or otherwise as he thinks necessary. In like manner, Section 257 makes it incumbent upon him, except in the situation indicated therein, to summon witnesses desired to be produced by the accused. If, therefore, upon an ascertainment done by the Magistrate under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 the name of a witness is not mentioned, the complainant is not "entitled of right" (to borrow the words of Section 291) to have the witness summoned, although the Magistrate has still under Section 540, the discretion to summon him and, in case he considers the evidence of the witness essential to the just decision of the case, he is under a duty to summon and examine him. The loss of the right to have the witness summoned, is, as we have said, the only statutory effect of the non-disclosure of the name of a witness under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 and the complainant is not deprived of his right to produce him nor is the Magistrate relieved of his obligation to take the evidence of such witness if he is produced by the complainant.

11. We may now pass on to S. 253. It will be noticed that Sub-section (1) of that section empowers the Magistrate, in the circumstances mentioned therein, to discharge an accused person not upon merely examining the persons named by the complainant under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 but upon taking all the evidence referred to in Section 252. The words "all the evidence referred to in Section 252" used in Sub-section (1) of Section 253 obviously refer to the evidence mentioned in Sub-section (1) of Section 252, and they mean not only the evidence of such persons whose names have been given under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 and who have consequently been summoned but also of such witnesses as have not been summoned but are produced by the complainant. If it had been intended by the legislature that the words "all the evidence" in Sub-section (1) of Section 253 should have reference only to the evidence of such persons as have been summoned under Sub-section (2) of Section 252, the language of Sub-section (1) of Section 253, would surely have been different. The legislature has, however, taken care to provide in Sub-section (2) of Section 253 that if the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless, he can discharge the accused even though he has not taken all the evidence referred to in Section 252. Evidently, this power was conferred upon the Magistrate to save the accused from the unnecessary hardship and harassment involved in the continuance of a trial on a charge which is groundless. If an order of discharge is passed, the trial comes to an end and no question of taking any further evidence then arises. If, however, a charge is framed the obligation under Sub-section (1) of Section 252 to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution continues. The Magistrate is relieved of the obligation to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution only when he considers the charge to be groundless and discharges the accused on that account. But the power not to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution terminates upon the framing of a charge and is not exercisable thereafter.

12. Then, we come to Section 254. The words "such evidence" in the section obviously mean the entire evidence referred to in Section 252. But the section does not compel the Magistrate to postpone the framing of the charge till all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution has been taken, and it authorises him to frame a charge at any previous stage i.e., before all the aforesaid evidence has been taken, if he is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused had committed an offence triable under Chapter XXI of the Code. There is nothing in the Code to warrant the conclusion that the right of the complainant to produce all such evidence as may support the prosecution or the duty of the Magistrate to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution comes to an end with the framing of a charge and it would, indeed, be strange if it did. No blame attaches to the complainant if the Magistrate, even before he has taken all the evidence desired to be produced by the complainant, forms the opinion necessary for framing a charge and consequently frames a charge. Framing of a charge should only increase the obligation of the Magistrate to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution and it cannot, either on the terms of the relevant provisions or on principle, bring that obligation to an end. Can a complainant insist that all the evidence intended to be produced by him should be taken by the Magistrate before a charge is framed? The answer can only be in the negative and the words "or at any previous stage of the case" in Section 254 completely rule out any other answer. The only conclusion that follows is that the right of the complainant or the duty of the Magistrate under Sub-section (1) of Section 252 does not cease on account of the framing of a charge under Section 254.

13. Omitting Sections 255 and 255-A, we may now take up Section 256 in which the words "any remaining witnesses for the prosecution" occur. If the legal position upto the framing of the charge under Section 254 is what we have stated it to be, it does not, to our mind, admit of any doubt that the words "the evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution" mean the evidence of such other witnesses, besides those who have already been examined, as may be produced by the complainant in support of the prosecution. We have shown that the right of the complainant or the duty of the Magistrate under Sub-section (1) of Section 252 does not terminate upon the framing of a charge under Section 254 and, that being so there is nothing in the sections that follow to bring about its termination. Of course, as we have said above, the right is confined to the production of evidence and the duty too is confined to the taking of the evidence produced. The right of the complainant does not extend to getting a witness summoned nor does the duty of the Magistrate extend to the summoning of a witness whose name has not been disclosed upon an ascertainment done under Sub-section (2) of Section 252. Certainly, the Magistrate has, even in that case, a discretion to summon such witness and, if his evidence appears to be essential for the just decision of a case, a duty to summon and examine him under Section 540; but that is a different thing altogether.

14. The above construction of the relevant provisions of the Code gives full effect to all of them and it does not either restrict or enlarge the scope of Sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 252, and, Section 256 in a manner not justified by the language used by the statute. In AIR 1945 Lah 201 (FB) (supra) the Lahore High Court said that the very use of the words "remaining witnesses for the prosecution" clearly indicates that at the stage to which these words refer the names of the witnesses must be known. It further observed that the section does not say that the evidence of any other witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken but that the evidence of the "remaining" witnesses for the prosecution shall be taken. We may point out that the words used in Section 256 are not "the remaining witnesses" but "any remaining witnesses", and the proper construction of the words would not be to regard them as limited to such witnesses only whose names have been given under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 but who remain to be examined. We may, also, with great respect, observe that the word "remaining" does not appear to postulate or have reference to a previously fixed number and to previously ascertained names. We find no reason why the words should signify only such witnesses as have remained unexamined out of those whose names have been given under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 and should not cover all such witnesses whose evidence the complainant desires to be taken in support of the prosecution but whose evidence has not yet been taken. The latter class of witnesses also may, in our opinion, be quite appropriately described as remaining witnesses. It should be noted that the relevant words in Section 256 are not that "remaining witnesses shall be examined" but that "the evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall be taken." If we compare these words with the words "take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" occurring in Sub-section (1) of Section 252, it becomes manifest that the former have reference to the latter, and that Section 256 requires the Magistrate to take the evidence of all such witnesses whom the complainant produces in support of the prosecution.

15. We have now to see whether the insertion of Sub-section (1-A) in Section 204 by Act XXVI of 1955 has in any manner altered the situation. Chapter XXII of the Code in which Section 204 occurs deals with the commencement of proceedings before Magistrates. The procedure relating to trial of warrant cases has been dealt with in Chapter XXI and it is not possible to regard the provisions relating to the trial as controlled by the provisions relating to the manner of commencement of proceedings, or to construe the former provisions in the light of the latter. Sub-section (1-A) of Section 204 only imposes a condition precedent to the issuing of summons or warrant against the accused, and there is nothing in that provision or in any other to bar the production or the summoning of a witness not mentioned in the list required to be filed thereunder. If the list so filed had been intended to limit the witnesses whom the complainant in a warrant case is entitled to produce and whose evidence the Magistrate is bound to take, the obvious course for the legislature would have been to express that intention by introducing an amendment in Section 252 to that effect. The legislature made no reference to Section 204 (1-A) in Sections 252 to 256, even though by the same amending Act it made a change in the opening words of Section 252. The generality of the words used in Sub-section (1) of Section 252, therefore, remains wholly unaffected by Sub-section (1-A) of Section 204. We may also point out that if the list furnished under Sub-section (1-A) of Section 204 was intended to operate as a bar to the production by a complainant of witnesses outside the list, there was no point in retaining in Sub-section (2) of Section 252 a provision for the ascertainment of the names of witnesses from the complainant. Sub-section (1-A) of Section 204 does not, therefore, appear to us to be relevant for an interpretation of the provisions under consideration.

16. The object underlying Sub-section (1-A) of Section 204 obviously is to create some check upon the institution of false and frivolous cases and upon the production of untrue evidence. The provision also serves to give the accused at the very start of the case some idea of the evidence which is likely to be produced against him. It cannot, however, be urged that since the object of that provision may to some extent be defeated if a complainant is left free to produce witnesses outside the list furnished by him, the provision should be interpreted as precluding him from producing a witness not mentioned in the list. A bar against the production by the complainant of any evidence before he closes his case cannot be spelled out on the basis of this consideration. The fact that the name of a witness has not been disclosed in the list filed under Sub-section (1-A) of Section 204 will be a matter to be considered in judging the truth and value of the testimony of the witness, but it cannot deprive the complainant of legal right to produce that witness and relieve the Magistrate of the obligation to take his evidence. What we have said above in regard to the effect of Sub-section (1-A) of Section 204 holds good in regard to the effect of Sub-section (2) of Section 252 as well. The fact that the name of a particular witness has not been given by the complainant under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 will likewise be a factor to be taken into account in judging the truth and value of his testimony, but it cannot curtail in any manner the right conferred upon the complainant and the duty cast upon the Magistrate by Sub-section (1) of Section 252. As we have said at an earlier stage of our judgment, the only statutory effect of the name of a witness not having been given under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 is that the complainant is not entitled as of right to have him summoned.

17 On general principles too the conclusion reached by us seems to be the proper conclusion. The party to a proceeding in a court should be entitled to produce all such witnesses as may support his case and this right should remain exercisable by him till he has closed his case. That he did not disclose the name of a particular witness at an early stage of the case or before the production of the witness in court may be a legitimate ground of criticism against the testimony of that witness, but it should not act as a bar to his production, unless, of course the statute regulating the proceeding clearly imposes such a bar. Now, in a trial under Chapter XXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure it is not until the "evidence of any remaining witnesses" has been taken under Section 256 that the prosecution case is closed, and it is only thereafter that the accused is called upon to enter upon his defence. Till then therefore, the complainant should have a right to produce his witnesses. It is true that the court should be anxious to ensure the fairness of all proceedings against the accused and to see that he is in no manner prejudiced in his defence. But, consistently with this, the court has also to see that all evidence bearing on the case is brought before it so that justice may be done. Neither of these principles can be overlooked. The production, after the framing of the charge, of a witness whose name has not been previously disclosed does not make the trial unfair or operate to the prejudice of the accused. The accused has the opportunity of cross-examining such a witness and of saying in his examination under Section 342 all that he has to say in explanation of the evidence given by the witness. He has, thereafter, the same opportunity of controverting the evidence of that witness as he has in respect of the evidence of any other witness. If he finds that the witnesses who have been cross-examined before the production of such a witness have to be cross-examined further in the light of the statement made by the new witness, he may move the Magistrate under sub-s (1) of S 257 and if he satisfies the Magistrate that further cross-examination is necessary for the purposes of justice the Magistrate shall call the witness for further cross-examination. We may here observe that sub-section (2) of Section 252 enables the accused to know only the name of a prosecution witness and not the nature of the evidence that he will give and therefore, there is no substantial difference in the position of the accused in regard to a witness whose name has not been previously disclosed. Let us then look at the other side of the picture. The complainant might have inadvertently or on account of an inadequate realisation of the importance of a particular piece of evidence omitted to give the name of a witness under Sub-section (2) of Section 252. Again, the need of examining a witness may be felt as a result of the plea taken by the accused under Section 255 or the trend of the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses and the line of defence appearing therefrom. Having regard to these considerations, it is but proper and just that the complainant should have the opportunity to produce such other witnesses as may support his case. In affording him that opportunity the Court only gives to the complainant, in the words of Ray, C.J. in the Orissa case referred to above, a square deal. We may here draw attention to Section 251-A which regulates the trial of warrant cases instituted on a police report. Sub-section (7) of Section 251-A provides that the Magistrate shall take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution and it places no restraint at all upon the right of the prosecution in respect of production of evidence. An investigation by the police in which witnesses have been ascertained and examined precedes the institution of a case on a police report and yet the legislature makes it obligatory for the Magistrate to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution. There seems to be no reason why a complainant in a case instituted otherwise than on police report should stand on a different footing. Further, in cases governed by Section 251-A too situations may arise when the accused has already cross-examined the prosecution witnesses, whose names are mentioned in the charge-sheet submitted by the police and copies of whose statement during investigation have been supplied to him, without having been made aware of the names of other witnesses who are later produced against him. If in such situations the accused feels the necessity of cross-examining the former set of witnesses with reference to the testimony of the latter set he can move the Magistrate for recalling them and the Magistrate may recall them for further cross-examination. On the view taken by us, the position of the accused in regard to the above matter in the trial of a warrant case instituted otherwise than upon police report does not as we have shown above, differ from that of an accused in a case instituted upon police report. We must in the end also state that the question as to the true meaning of the words "any remaining witnesses for the prosecution" has in the first instance and primarily to be determined on the basis of the relevant statutory provisions, and it is only when they do not yield a clear answer that general principles may be called in aid. In our opinion, the relevant statutory provisions do not at all leave the meaning of the said words in doubt, and we have only tried to show here that the conclusion which we have reached as to that meaning is also in complete accord with principles of justice.

18. For the reasons discussed above we hold that the words "any remaining witnesses for the prosecution" in Section 256 Cr. P. C. do not refer only to those witnesses whose names have been given by the complainant under Sub-section (2) of Section 252 of Cr. P. C., but also include all such witnesses as may be produced by the complainant in support of the prosecution even though they have not been summoned or named before the framing of the charge. The complainant in the instant case was, therefore, entitled to produce Sri Sinha after the framing of the charge. We have not been able to find anything on record showing that the Magistrate had actually ascertained the names of witnesses from the complainant under Section 252(2) Cr. P. C. But, assuming that he had done so, the only effect of not mentioning the name of Sri Sinha was that the complainant could not, as a matter of right, have him summoned. The Magistrate had, however, the power to summon him and he thought it fit to exercise that power. In taking the evidence of Sri Sinha the Magistrate acted in conformity with law and there was no illegality, irregularity or impropriety involved in it.

19. We may also point out that Sri Sinha was actually produced, examined and cross-examined. The Magistrate had, undoubtedly, the jurisdiction to take his evidence, and the prayer of the accused that the evidence be discarded was entirely misconceived and unworthy of being entertained.

20. The revision has no force and we accordingly reject it.
RSK/D.V.C. Revision dismissed.

AIR 1969 ALLAHABAD 591 (V 56 C 111)

S. D. SINGH, J.

Bimal alias Bishnu Das, Applicant v. The State, Opp. Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 963 of 1966, D/- 15-12-1967, against Order of Temp. Civil and S. J., Etah, D/- 27-5-1966.

Criminal P. C. (1898) S. 202 — Scope — Issue of warrant against accused before conclusion of enquiry under S. 202 (1) — Not proper — Procedure to be adopted where it is necessary to put up person named as accused for identification — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 9) — (Constitution of India, Art. 20(3)).

Sub-section (2) of Section 202 of Criminal P. C. is intended to invest the person making the enquiry, including a Police Officer, with powers of an officer in charge of a Police Station in connection with a particular enquiry or investigation, and then it goes on to restrict that power by saying that he shall not be entitled to arrest any person without warrant. Sub-section (2), therefore, merely restricts the powers of the person making the enquiry or the investigation under it. Whether or not it would be necessary during the course of that enquiry to arrest a person, will be a matter which will have to be looked into by the Magistrate, who is asked to issue warrants for the same. Sub-section (1) of Section 202, however, does not reserve the power to issue a bailable or non-bailable warrant in the Magistrate who is making the preliminary enquiry before this enquiry is completed. (Para 3)

One can contemplate a case, in which it may be necessary to put up a person named as an accused for identification for the proof of his guilt, but if the Magistrate is of opinion that a particular case is of that type, a more proper procedure for him might be to direct an investigation in the case by a Police Officer, who will then, in the course of the investigation, be able to obtain warrants under Sub-section (2) of S. 202, and arrange for the identification of the accused in due course. If the Magistrate does not direct an investigation by a Police Officer, he may examine such evidence as is produced before him by the complainant and, in the course of that examination, require the witnesses, who are supposed to be able to identify the accused, to give as much information about the features of the accused as they possibly can and, when summons or warrants are ultimately issued against the accused under Sub-section (1) of Section 204, he may instruct him or them to appear in court duly covered, so that he may not be seen by the witnesses, who come to give evidence against him. It may also be open to the Magistrate merely to issue summons against the accused to appear before him during the enquiry under Sub-section (1) of Section 202 itself duly covered, but that will have to be merely for the purpose of his identification and that too at the option of the accused to appear and get himself identified, and secure the advantage of an order being passed in his favour at an earlier stage if the witnesses fail to identify him. The accused may not be agreeable to take any risk and, in that case, he cannot be compelled to appear before the court so long as the Magistrate does not decide to proceed against him under Sub-section (1) of Section 204. ORDER:— This is an application in revision filed against an order of the Temporary Civil & Sessions Judge, Etah, dated 27th May, 1966, by which he disposed of three revision applications Nos. 16, 17 and 18 of 1966 filed in his Court.

2. The applicant Bimal is named as an accused in a complaint filed under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code by one Pt Bihari Lal. The complaint is, in fact, against two persons, Sri Raghuraj Singh, a Sub-Inspector of Police and the present applicant, Bimal. On the complaint being presented, the statement of the complainant was recorded under Section 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and then the complainant was directed to produce evidence under Section 202 of the Code. No additional evidence has been examined so far on behalf of the complainant. An application was, however, moved by him on 17th September, 1955 in which it was stated that the accused Bimal was required to be identified by his witnesses and that he might, therefore, be summoned by the issue of non-bailable warrants against him. The Magistrate passed an order that non-bailable warrants be issued against Bimal and that instructions may also be issued that he was to be kept duly covered. But the Magistrate has not given any reason why and how he was satisfied that the issue of non-bailable warrants was necessary. The question is if it was within his jurisdiction to issue non-bailable warrants, when the evidence under Section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was yet to be examined.

3. Sub-section (1) of Section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure clearly states that for reasons to be recorded in writing, the Magistrate may "postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the person complained of" and then proceed to enquire into the case himself. This is what the Magistrate did, when he directed the complainant to produce evidence under Section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It means, therefore, that, by implication, he postponed the issue of process for compelling the attendance of Bimal aforesaid, within the meaning of Sub-section (1) of Section 202 of the Code. If the issue of process against Bimal was postponed by the Magistrate, the question remains whether the Magistrate could, at a later stage in the same proceeding before any evidence was examined by him under Section 202, issue a warrant of arrest against Bimal and that too a non-bailable one. The first impression, which one gets on reading sub-section (1) of Section 202, is that the Magistrate has no such power. The Sessions Judge has referred to Sub-section (2) of Section 202, which relates to an enquiry or investigation by a person other than the Magistrate, or a Police Officer, and provides that such person shall exercise all the powers conferred by the Code of Criminal Procedure on an officer in-charge of a Police Station except that he shall not have the power to arrest without warrant. The Sessions Judge has read this sub-section as meaning that even when an enquiry or investigation is being held under Sub-section (2), the person making the enquiry will have the power to arrest with a warrant and he has, therefore, inferred that a Magistrate who is himself making an enquiry under Sub-section (1), may issue a warrant for the arrest of the person accused. I do not, however, find it possible to agree with this interpretation of Sub-section (2) of S 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Sub-section (2) is intended to invest the person making the enquiry, including a Police Officer, with powers of an officer in-charge of a Police Station in connection with a particular enquiry or investigation, and then it goes on to restrict that power by saying that he shall not be entitled to arrest any person without warrant. Sub-section (2), therefore, merely restricts the powers of the person making the enquiry or the investigation under it. Whether or not it would be necessary during the course of the enquiry to arrest a person, will be a matter which will have to be looked into by the Magistrate, who is asked to issue warrants for the same. Sub-section (1) o

Section 202, however, does not reserve the power to issue a bailable or non-bailable warrant in the Magistrate who is making the preliminary enquiry before this enquiry is completed. If the Magistrate is not satisfied with the statement of the complainant and the statements of such of the witnesses as are present and examined under Section 200 of the Code, it is only then that he directs some enquiry or investigation under Section 202(1). The Magistrate having decided that, before the accused persons may be summoned, it is necessary to undertake such enquiry or investigation, postpones the issue of process for compelling his attendance. It would be reversing the process of the proceedings before him, if he, even though the evidence under Sub-section (1) of Section 202 still remains to be produced, decides to issue non-bailable, or even bailable, warrants against him.

4. One can contemplate a case, in which it may be necessary to put up a person named as an accused for identification for the proof of his guilt, but if the Magistrate is of opinion that a particular case is of that type, a more proper procedure for him might be to direct an investigation in the case by a Police Officer, who will then, in the course of the investigation, be able to obtain warrants under Sub-section (2) of Section 202, and arrange for the identification of the accused in due course. If the Magistrate does not direct an investigation by a Police Officer, he may examine such evidence as is produced before him by the complainant, and, in the course of that examination, require the witnesses, who are supposed to be able to identify the accused, to give as much information about the features of the accused as they possibly can and, when summons or warrants are ultimately issued against the accused under Sub-section (1) of Section 204, he may instruct him or them to appear in court duly covered, so that he may not be seen by the witnesses, who come to give evidence against him. It may also be open to the Magistrate merely to issue summons against the accused to appear before him during the enquiry under Sub-section (1) of Section 202 itself duly covered, but that will have to be merely for the purpose of his identification and that too at the option of the accused to appear and get himself identified, and secure the advantage of an order being passed in his favour at an earlier stage if the witnesses fail to identify him. The accused may not be agreeable to take any risk and, in that case, he cannot be compelled to appear before the court so long as the Magistrate does not decide to proceed against him under Sub-section (1) of Section 204. It appears to me that the issue of the warrants against the present applicant at the stage of an enquiry under Sub-section (1) of Section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was altogether without jurisdiction.

5. A few cases were cited before me on behalf of the applicant. The first case relied upon was Karsandas Naranji v. Ramji Dosa, AIR 1951 Kutch 82. But it does not seem to have any application to the facts of this case. All that was decided in that case was that once a Magistrate takes cognisance of an offence and issues process against the person complained against, he cannot subsequently direct the Police to make an enquiry against him. K. Savaranna v. State, AIR 1957 Andh Pra 472, is a case the facts of which appear to be reverse to what they are in the present case. What has been held in that case is that once a process compelling the attendance of the accused is issued by the Magistrate, he cannot avail of the provisions of Section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for making an enquiry against him. The view taken in the case may be interpreted to mean that since an enquiry under sub-section (1) of Section 202 cannot be made after the issue of a process compelling the attendance of an accused, the process may not be issued (if the issuing of such process has been postponed and an enquiry taken up by the Magistrate), so long as that enquiry is not completed by him. The decision in Appa Rao Mudaliar v. Janakiammal, AIR 1927 Mad 19 (FB) is directly in point. In this case the question whether an accused person may be summoned to appear before the enquiry under sub-section (1) of Section 202 is concluded, was considered by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court. It was held that summoning of an accused before the conclusion of an enquiry under Sub-section (1) of Section 202 may sometime turn out to be to the advantage of the accused himself as the Magistrate may, on hearing the accused, find it impossible to rely upon the evidence, which is presented before him on behalf of the complainant, but, even so, that procedure was not warranted by the provisions of the Code. It was observed:—

"The object of the chapter of the Code in which Section 202 appears is to prevent accused persons being harassed at all or asked to appear if in the opinion of the Magistrate no prima facie case is made out; and in my opinion, the Code never contemplated that at that stage they should either be asked or permitted to state their cases".

6. I, therefore, find it impossible to agree with the view of the Sessions Judge that the Magistrate could issue non-bailable warrants against the present applicant for the purposes of his being put up for identification by the witnesses which were to be examined by the complainant. It is true that the witnesses, whom the complainant may be producing in court, if those witnesses do not know the applicant by name, will not be in a position to give direct evidence against him, but how and in what manner the complainant is to satisfy the Magistrate that a prima facie case is made out for purposes of Section 202(1), is for the complainant to decide. As I have already said, one of the ways for doing this might be that the witnesses describe the features of the accused person in detail in their statements and the Magistrate may, by some evidence, which may be placed before him (may be the statement of the complainant himself) satisfy himself that the person so described by the witnesses is the person named as accused in the complaint, and then may issue the necessary process against him under Section 204(1).

7. The issue of warrants for the arrest of the applicant and his production in the court of the Magistrate was, therefore, not warranted by the provisions of the Code, and the order to that effect passed by the Magistrate on 17th September, 1965, has to be set aside. The other two orders, which were challenged before the Sessions Judge, are liable to be set aside on the ground that the Magistrate has refused to pass orders on those applications unless the applicant decided to appear in his court. It was undesirable for the Magistrate to require the appearance of the applicant in his court. It is all the more undesirable for him to indirectly compel his attendance by refusing to pass orders on the applications which could be legitimately moved on his behalf in the court.

*8 The application is allowed. The three orders passed by the Magistrate dated 17th September, 1965, 12th October, 1965 and 14th February, 1966, are set aside. The applicant shall not be compelled to appear in the court of the Magistrate till he decides to summon him under Section 204 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Regarding the request of the applicant that he may be put up for identification at Farrukhabad instead of Etah, the Magistrate will pass orders on merits without laying down any condition regarding the appearance of the applicant in his court first.

AIR 1969 All 230, Reversed.

Amendment of Constitution by inserting Art 233A was within competence of Parliament. Art 233A is in the nature of a proviso to Art 233. The object underlying Article 233A was to validate certain appointments, which were invalid on the ground that the appointments contravened Article 233. By inserting Article 233A in the Constitution, Article 233 has been modified. Neither Article 233 nor Art 233A involves fundamental rights. The American doctrine of well-defined separation of legislative and judicial powers has no application in India. It cannot be said that an Indian statute which seeks to validate invalid actions is bad if the invalidity has already been pronounced upon by a Court of law. Case law discussed.

It is the settled legislative practice in India that whenever a decision of a court creates practical difficulty, such difficulty may be overcome by appropriate legislation. This has been the practice in India both before and after the commencement of the Constitution. Arts. 31A and 31B were inserted in the Constitution in order to get over difficulties created by decisions of courts. Case law discussed. (Para 22)

Further, Article 141 does not prevent the appropriate legislature from amending the law. Nor does Art. 141 take away Parliament's power to amend the Constitution according to the prescribed procedure. Articles 233 and 233A fall under Chapter VI of Part VI of the Constitution. This Chapter is not covered by the proviso to Article 368. So, it was not necessary in the case to follow the special procedure laid down in the proviso to Article 368. The ordinary procedure laid down in the main part of Article 368 was followed. That was sufficient. Therefore, the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act, 1966 is valid. Inserting Art. 233A in the Constitution had not the effect of amending Art. 142 or Art. 144 directly or indirectly. AIR 1969 All 230 Reversed. Case law discussed. (Paras 32, 36, 40, 43)

Shanti Bhushan, Rajaram Agarwal, for Appellants; H. N. Seth, B. D. Agarwala, J. Swarup and N. Lal, for Respondents.

OAK, C. J.—The question for consideration in these connected appeals is whether certain persons should be prohibited from functioning as District Judges in Uttar Pradesh. The three appeals arise out of a writ petition filed in the year 1967 by Shri Chandra Mohan against the State of Uttar Pradesh and 15 others.

2. Several years ago, the State Government established U. P. Higher Judicial Service. This service consists of two grades: (1) District & Sessions Judges, and (2) Civil & Sessions Judges. Under Article 309 of the Constitution, the Governor framed rules for appointment to U. P. Higher Judicial Service. These rules are known as U. P. Higher Judicial Service Rules, 1953 (hereafter referred to as the Rules). The Rules provide two separate methods for appointment of Civil & Sessions Judges. The first method is by promotion from the Uttar Pradesh Civil Service (Judicial Branch). The second method is by direct recruitment of advocates and Judicial Magistrates as Civil & Sessions Judges. Under these Rules, a number of persons were appointed to the U. P. Higher Judicial Service between 1953 and 1964.

3. Sri Chandra Mohan is a member of the Uttar Pradesh Civil Service (Judicial Branch). In the year 1965 he was officiating as Civil & Sessions Judge. He apprehended that direct recruitment of advocates and Judicial Magistrates to U. P. Higher Judicial Service was likely to affect his chances of promotion adversely. So, he filed a writ petition challenging the appointment of advocates and Judicial Magistrates to U. P. Higher Judicial Service. That was Writ Petition No. 526 of 1965.

4. That writ petition was partly allowed by this Court on 21-2-1966. It was held that Sri Om Prakash was not eligible for appointment to U. P. Higher Judicial Service. In other respects, the petition was dismissed. Sri Chandra Mohan took up the matter in appeal before the Supreme Court. The appeal was allowed by the Supreme Court on 8-8-1966. It was held that Judicial Magistrates were not eligible for appointment as Civil & Sessions Judges. It was further held that the U. P. Higher Judicial Service Rules are constitutionally void, as they contravened Article 233 of the Constitution. The operative part of the judgment of the Supreme Court ran thus:—

"In the result, we hold that the U. P. Higher Judicial Service Rules providing for the recruitment of District Judges are constitutionally void and, therefore, the appointments made thereunder were illegal We set aside the order of the High Court and issue a writ of mandamus to the 1st respondent not to make any appointment by direct recruitment to the U P Higher Judicial Service in pursuance of the selections made under the said rules. The 1st respondent will pay the costs of the appellant. The other respondents will bear their own costs."

The case is reported in AIR 1966 SC 1987

5 This decision of the Supreme Court created a serious situation. According to the judgment, appointment of several persons as District Judges during the course of some ten years became illegal. Parliament intervened in order to meet the serious situation and enacted the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act 1966. By this amendment, Article 233A was inserted in the Constitution. Article 233A of the Constitution ran thus —

"Notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of any court,—

(a) (i) no appointment of any person already in the judicial service of a State or of any person who has been for not less than seven years an advocate or a pleader to be a district judge in that State and

(ii) no posting, promotion or transfer of any such person as a district judge, made at any time before the commencement of the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act, 1966 otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of Article 233 or Article 235 shall be deemed to be illegal or void or ever to have become illegal or void by reason only of the fact that such appointment, posting, promotion or transfer was not made in accordance with the said provisions,

(b) no jurisdiction exercised, no judgment, decree, sentence or order passed or made, and no other act or proceeding done or taken, before the commencement of the Constitution (Twentieth Amendment) Act, 1966 by, or before, any person appointed, posted, promoted or transferred as a district judge in any State otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of Article 233 or Article 235 shall be deemed to be illegal or invalid or ever to have become illegal or invalid by reason only of the fact that such appointment, posting, promotion or transfer was not made in accordance with the said provisions."
